Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Table des matières

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi qu'à celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1, page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

The House met at 1330.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

YORK REGION DISTRICT HEALTH COUNCIL

Mr Beer: In August 1989 the former Liberal Minister of Health set up a steering committee to examine the feasibility of creating a district health council for York region. York region, with approximately 475,000 residents, is the most populous area not served by a district health council.

The steering committee concluded its work in June 1990 and recommended the establishment of a district health council. Last fall in this Legislature I asked the previous NDP Health minister when the district health council would be created. "Be patient," we were told. "All will come to pass."

Later, in the spring of 1991, after no action was taken, a number of municipal councillors and service providers met with the four MPPs of York region to ask for help in again requesting the creation of the district health council. Indeed all four of us signed a letter to the minister dated March 25, 1991.

On July 11 the present minister wrote to say that the government "intends to proceed with the establishment of a new district health council for the region of York." The minister added that a chairperson would be appointed as soon as possible. It is now three and one-half months since that letter was sent out. As of today, no chairperson has been appointed and no date has been set for the creation of the York Region District Health Council.

The role of a district health council is critical to the planning needed to ensure a first-class health system in York region. The question that everyone is asking is, when will the minister announce the formation of the York Region District Health Council? We need some action and we need it now.

HOSPITAL FINANCING

Mr J. Wilson: Yesterday the Collingwood General and Marine Hospital was forced once again to lay off staff in order to balance its budget for the next fiscal year. It is mind-boggling that the NDP government continues to kick the people of Collingwood when they are already down.

Both the General and Marine and the Stevenson Memorial Hospital in Alliston have attempted to play ball with the Health ministry and have made significant cuts to their operations in the past four months in order to reduce their deficits.

It is ironic that while the Premier champions the cause of a social charter in the national constitutional debate, he refuses to assist hospitals here at home. It is also ironic that this same government that was so eager to accept praise for increases to nurses' salaries now refuses to acknowledge that hundreds of nurses are being laid off, others cannot find work and hospitals have reduced services as a result of the government's decision.

The Minister of Health recently informed the Ontario Hospital Association that no funding for inflation will be made available to hospitals in the 1992-93 fiscal year. Hospitals have been forced to shoulder additional costs as a direct result of provincial initiatives. Hence, it is reasonable to ask that hospitals be permitted to have their remaining deficits included in their base budgets.

The minister must assume responsibility and move immediately to provide direction for hospitals so that they can effectively plan for the future. Further silence is not the solution.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY WEEK

Mr Fletcher: The University of Guelph has one of the largest nutrition science departments in North America. On Monday a group of professors held a public forum on nutrition to mark Science and Technology Week.

The panel consisted of Professor Tammy Bray, who is the president of the Canadian Association of Biological Sciences, and professors Bruce Holub, Trevor Smith, Laura Nagy, Bill Woodward and Bill Bettger. They told a packed audience about the ways nutrition can prevent disease, and we all know that disease prevention is a big health strategy for the 1990s.

This forum is just one more example of the university transferring knowledge to the community, and this is a result of funding from the province.

I congratulate the University of Guelph faculty for choosing a timely and relevant subject to recognize Science and Technology Week in our riding. It is characteristic of the type of conference held at the University of Guelph.

RENT REGULATION

Ms Poole: The government's rent control bill, Bill 121, is in limbo. This past summer we held public hearings on Bill 121, but when it came time to introduce amendments in clause-by-clause, the committee meetings were abruptly cancelled. Despite the fact that the week of September 16 had been set aside for some months, the government cancelled because three of its members had made personal plans for that week and were not available.

Since then committee meetings on Bill 121 have been cancelled for the weeks of September 26, October 3, October 10, October 17 and October 24. The reason? Apparently the government is not yet ready with its amendments. The government has obviously bungled its rent control bill so badly that it does not know where to go from here.

We are now paying the price for the mockery of a consultation we endured prior to the introduction of Bill 121. Bill 121 pleases no one. Tenants feel betrayed and landlords feel victimized. If the government had really listened before introducing the bill, this would not have come as such a surprise.

Every week I mount my white charger with amendments in hand ready to do battle on behalf of the people of Ontario, but every week the government fails to respond to the challenge. In fact, it appears they are not even able to find their horses, let alone mount them. It has to change. We want Bill 121 to go back to committee.

PROTECTION OF IN-CARE RESIDENTS

Mr Jackson: Members will recall the Grandview Training School for Girls sex abuse case, which I first raised in the House in June 1991. The number of women who have bravely stepped forward to date to lay complaints is now 14. According to police, this number could turn out to be only a drop in the bucket once all the facts become known about their investigation.

The nature of the complaints constitute a horror story of outrageous human indignities suffered by vulnerable women who were powerless to defend themselves in a system which was uncaring about their suffering as victims of the crime of sexual abuse.

Police are hopeful that charges will be laid and, according to observers, political pressure, thanks in large part to the Kitchener-Waterloo Record and the questions raised by our caucus in this House, was a significant factor in ensuring a complete investigation was done.

This should tell the Premier that he, his Attorney General and his former Minister of Community and Social Services were wrong not to hold a full provincial inquiry to protect young people from sexual abuse in provincial institutions in the future. This makes the public stance taken by the Premier, as opposition leader, to call for a provincial inquiry into nursing homes in 1985 that much more hypocritical when his commitment to these young victims at Grandview is now so lacking. This should also tell the new Community and Social Services minister to avoid guilt by association and move quickly to initiate an inquiry as soon as possible.

The women of Ontario are tired of hearing the Premier's public relations rhetoric on the rights of victims. Actions speak louder than words, and without concerted government action, words, no matter how loudly spoken, will not drown out the cries of suffering of these victims who have no one in this government, it would seem, to defend and protect them.

GREEK CELEBRATIONS

Mr Malkowski: I would like to take this opportunity to tell the House about two very special events taking place this Sunday, October 27.

I, along with many others, will be joining the Greek community in celebrating National OXI Day. This event is of importance to all of us as a commemoration of the Greek resistance to fascism which began in October 1940. Once again, this occasion will be marked by a parade along Danforth Avenue and a wreath-laying ceremony at the city hall cenotaph.

On the same day the Greek community will be celebrating the liberation of the city of Thessaloniki, which took place on October 26, 1912. Toronto has the distinction of being Thessaloniki's twin city. I have the privilege of being guest of honour at this festival and declaring Sunday, October 27, as Thessaloniki Day 1991.

INVESTIGATION INTO RELEASE OF DOCUMENTS

Mr Scott: Yesterday an event occurred in the House which I do not believe, in the interests of parliamentary democracy, should go unnoticed.

The honourable member for St Catharines raised with the Premier the fact that on at least two occasions and perhaps others representatives of his government had sent the OPP to interview members of the Legislature and, I believe, others about how information, in accordance with democratic tradition, had come into their hands from the bureaucracy.

The Premier, in a desperate and, I believe ultimately to the public were to be the judge, unsuccessful effort to separate himself from this shocking conduct, said that no member had, as far as he knows, been harassed. The honourable member for Halton Centre then rose and explained that the OPP had said she might indeed be criminally charged. The Premier fled the chamber.

I think what this Legislature is entitled to have is a statement from the leader of the government about the guidelines that exist in this government with respect to police investigations of members of the Legislature, the press and others who may have access to bureaucratic material designed to show the incompetence of the government. This is an important parliamentary privilege and should be acknowledged by the House and the Premier and safeguarded today.

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr Villeneuve: Today, I am sorry that I find it necessary to report to members about more problems with the emergency assistance package recently announced for Ontario farmers.

We already know the entire package could have been utilized in Essex county alone to compensate for the terrible drought and for prices this year. However, the shortcomings of the assistance package do not stop there. The minister is aware that the $15 million he has put into the provincial stabilization program for grain and oilseed producers will not help growers of farm-fed grains. These growers represent Ontario's livestock and dairy industries.

It would seem that members opposite and the minister have forgotten the serious damage that has been done to Ontario's cattle industry in the last five years. One year ago, this government was announcing a special feeder assistance program because the situation was so bad. This year, when things are even worse, the government has decided to ignore the industry and cut it off from help.

I would hope that members opposite have learned by now that it costs less to buy a ton of grain than it costs to produce it. The government, in its announcements by the minister and the Treasurer, mentioned that it had consulted the NDP rural caucus. If those statements were true, and I believe them, then we have an obvious example of the NDP rural caucus either not hearing, not understanding or deliberately deciding to ignore the largest sector in Canadian agriculture. This must be changed.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr Drainville: I want to take this opportunity to inform the House about the very successful constitutional conference we were able to sponsor as a select committee last past week. I would also like to say that it is a measure of the very strong work and commitment that has been made by all members of the House, and particularly by those members who served on the select committee, and if I might even say, by those particularly on the subcommittee. The member for Cochrane South, the member for Ottawa-Rideau, the member for Willowdale and myself worked over a long period of time to ensure that we would have a forum that would be open and would afford the people of Ontario an opportunity to speak directly about the issues that are on their minds and the concerns they have about the future of this province in Confederation.

I would also like to say that in the process we had last week there were many members of this House who were part of it. I want to say how happy I am that they acquitted themselves well and presented their views with a certain judicious approach. Also, I would say that the people who came to that conference were people who although they had passionate views, were able to express them with a spirit of generosity and openness that was a credit to the people of Ontario. It is with great pride that we in this House can say that we have gone a long way to open up the process after Meech Lake and draw the views and concerns of the people of Ontario here into the forum of public domain.

VISITORS

The Speaker: Members are invited to welcome to our chamber this afternoon two members of Parliament from the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina, Mr Muhamed Resevljakovic and Mr Osman Brka. Both gentlemen are seated in the members' gallery west. Welcome.

INVESTIGATION INTO RELEASE OF DOCUMENTS

PARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

The Speaker: On Thursday, October 17, the member for St Catharines raised a question of privilege with respect to outside police forces interviewing members of the assembly and requested clarification of a ruling I had made earlier that day on this matter. The member for Etobicoke West also spoke to this matter, as did the Leader of the Opposition and the member for Scarborough-Agincourt.

First, let me say that the parliamentary privileges of members of the assembly were never intended to set members, including the Speaker, above the law. Such privileges were intended to give members and others certain special rights and immunities considered essential for the operation of the assembly. These rights and immunities allow the assembly to meet and carry out its proper constitutional role. They also permit members to discharge their parliamentary responsibilities and permit others properly involved in the parliamentary process to carry out their duties and responsibilities.

The Speaker is the custodian of the powers and privileges of Parliament, but my authority does not extend beyond the legislative precinct with respect to the matters raised by the members last Thursday.

In addition, the Speaker will not give a decision on a hypothetical question. The Speaker will, however, give a decision on specific and actual events that have transpired and have been raised in the House. In respect of the suggestion that I set out guidelines or criteria by which requests by police forces to interview an occupant of the Legislative Assembly precinct will be considered, I must say to members that the Speaker will consider each such request by a police force on a case-by-case basis.

Our precedents, the precedents of other legislatures and the parliamentary authorities are very clear on these points.

Although I understand the very real concerns of the members, for the above reasons I am not in a position to deal with them.

Also on Thursday last—I am sorry, but the member for Dufferin-Peel is not present in the chamber and I will reserve this part to when he is here.

On Thursday last and again yesterday, a number of members including the government House leader (Mr Cooke) and the members for Durham East (Mr Mills) and Sarnia (Mr Huget) raised points of order with respect to language used during proceedings in the House.

The rules against the use of offensive, disorderly or otherwise unparliamentary expressions are designed to ensure that proceedings are conducted with dignity and decorum and in a temperate and moderate manner. Language used in the course of our proceedings should be worthy of the place in which it is spoken. I remind members that although the responsibility for determining whether words or expressions used in the House are unparliamentary rests with the Speaker, they themselves must bear the primary responsibility for their conduct in the House.

I do not propose to deal any further with the points of order raised by the members, other than to say that I am greatly concerned about the use of certain expressions with reference to Nazi Germany. I regard such expressions as totally inappropriate for this chamber. As a general principle, in the future I will not allow such expressions directed to one side or the other of the House. If such expressions are used in the course of our proceedings, I will intervene and cause a withdrawal to be made.

Mr Bradley: Mr Speaker, on the first ruling you brought to our attention today, while I appreciate very much the fact that you are going to take whatever action you deem appropriate within your role and responsibility to protect members on our side of the House from what we would consider to be harassment or intimidation, to protect members from being interrogated by police forces within the precinct, within your jurisdiction, the concern members have—I suppose it is more to your stature as Speaker of the House than the legal responsibilities or legal confinements you have that I appeal when I say it—extends to constituency offices, to the streets of the province and to our homes.

By having representatives of the Ontario Provincial Police interview them, as happened with the member for Halton Centre, about documents that fall into their hands, documents that are provided to them as part of the flow in a democratic process—it has been that way for a number of years—our concern is that two things are going to happen.

First of all, members are going to feel harassed by this activity. Members are going to feel intimidated. Others, perhaps not members of the Legislature, in the news media for instance, who come across these documents by certain methods are going to feel harassed and intimidated. Those who are genuinely concerned—I have heard the Chairman of Management Board speak about this—about the activities of the government and the problems they might create for the people of this province provide these documents from time to time to people outside the government. I am concerned those people will feel intimidated by the activities.

These activities obviously must be directed by someone, because the police force does not walk down the hallway of the Legislature or anywhere else, uninstructed, to initiate investigations of opposition members. I believe our rights and our responsibility as an opposition are limited very much and are abrogated by this activity on the part of the police force, a police force, as I say, that does not direct itself to do this, but has to be directed. In this case, all evidence points to the fact that someone in the government is directing this, and of course the Premier is responsible for all the government.

The Speaker: The member for St Catharines will appreciate that the definition of “precinct” over which the Speaker has jurisdiction includes this building, the grounds and the first two floors of the Whitney Block. While I fully understand and appreciate the concerns you have raised, the Speaker is not in a position to exercise any authority or control over any buildings or property beyond that which I have just described.

Mr Scott: Mr Speaker, I can respect the technical nature of your ruling, but there have now been a number of incidents in which the OPP, instigated by somebody, has conducted this clearly harassing activity, and I want to ask you to deal with a new aspect of the matter. If we take the case that was advanced in the House yesterday by the honourable member for Halton Centre, we see this: It was brought to her attention that there was some material available from the Ministry of the Environment, for which she was the official opposition critic at the time. She made that material public in some fashion, and someone, we know not who precisely, instigated the police to conduct an investigation of how it came into her hands.

The police attended on her twice in July, not within the precincts of the Legislature but in her constituency office—as close to the precincts, it seems to me, as you could possibly get—and indicated to her that they were conducting an official investigation—who instigated it they did not say—but it was possible that criminal charges would be laid against her, the member for Halton Centre. She consequently retained counsel to assist her. None of this is new, because this was disclosed formally by the member for Halton Centre in the House yesterday.

If the backbenchers on the government side have some difficulty in understanding how a police investigation that may lead to criminal charges against the member affects the privileges of that member in responding to government issues, I cannot help them, except by saying that for generations in this House, opposition parties, whether they be Liberal or NDP—they were Liberal and NDP most of the time—have raised these questions about our ability to do our work when government material comes into our hands.

You have made the point, Mr Speaker, that in your view at this stage the precincts of the House do not include anything outside this building and two floors of the Whitney Block. I put it to you, with the greatest respect, that a constituency office, which is publicly funded and which I believe is run under the auspices of the Legislative Assembly and for the dissemination of government business, both government and opposition, should be treated, being in the nature of a non-partisan office, as part of the precincts of Parliament. If it can be said that a police officer could not come in here without your permission and threaten to charge the member for Halton Centre because she received a document from a public servant, can it really be said by this government that the OPP can simply go to someone's constituency office and have precisely the same effect?

Mr Speaker, I will bring this to a close shortly, but this is a critical matter. I understand perfectly the limitations that you say exist on your authority. I ask you to reconsider them, because I believe a constituency office is within the precincts of Parliament.

But even if it is not, is it not time that we have a statement from the leader of the government whose government instigated these investigations, knowing that the threat of police action and criminal charges might be made, and indeed have been made, against the member for Halton Centre?

We need a statement from the leader of the government about whether, now that he has the seals of government squarely in his hands, he is going to tolerate what he simply would not have permitted to happen a year and a half ago. All of us can imagine the bells that would ring and the screams that would go on about the privileges of the House if a police officer had told the member for York South he might be charged criminally if he had possession of a bureaucratic document. If the leader of the government remains silent, what has happened is this government has got into office and is not prepared to honour the parliamentary processes that it used and that played a part in getting it there.

It is hard to think of an issue that is more important to every ordinary member of the House. If an OPP officer, if the instigation of a minister, a Premier or an official of the government, can go to our constituency office, in the presence of our constituents, to conduct an investigation and say, “Charges may be laid against you because of your parliamentary activity,” this place shuts down, because the harassment by a government that will permit that in a freedom-loving society is simply becoming intolerable. How can the honourable member for Halton Centre, who has a spouse and family, expect to forestall the operations of the OPP instigated by the ministry officials who threaten her h possible prosecution? This is a serious matter and I be you will deal with it in that light, Mr Speaker.

The Speaker: While the authority of the Speaker with respect to the precinct and the definition of what the precinct is are very clear and unequivocal, at the same time members should know the Speaker will deal with any point of privilege raised regardless of where the action which is alleged to have occurred has in fact occurred. The Speaker will always be ready to entertain any concerns with respect to points of privilege and will deal with them on a case-by-case basis.

Mr Eves: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I am not certain in my own mind what I heard you say your authority is with respect to these precincts and whether or not you will develop a policy. I believe you indicated that you are undecided about that. I do not think you should be decided about that. Constituency offices exist by decisions made by the Board of Internal Economy. They are decided by the Legislative Assembly and, in my opinion, are under the purview of the Legislative Assembly and the Speaker.

To get more to the point, I believe the ultimate issue and principle here is whether or not the ability of an individual member of the Legislative Assembly to perform his or her duties as a member is being affected by the actions taking place. I can recall similar matters being dealt with in this House. I think of a case of a bank literally threatening a member with respect to his amount of loan owing. I seem to recall that the member belonged to the same party that is now in government and I seem to recall the Speaker the day taking some action and deciding that the member's privileges had been breached.

Here we have, in my opinion and I dare say in the opinion of almost every other member of some objective opinion in this House, a far more serious matter: not a bank threatening to call a loan but a police force possibly being used to intimidate individual members and prevent them from performing their duties to their constituents, as every elected member has the right to do. Surely that is a matter for the Speaker and the government to look into.

The Speaker: The member for Parry Sound may recall that in the instance to which he refers a point of privilege was raised by the member affected. Whenever a point of privilege is raised and specific instances cited, the Speaker will be most pleased to review that to determine whether a prima facie case of privilege is in effect.

Hon Mr Cooke: I share some of the concerns that have been expressed by the opposition parties. I think there is a very substantial difference between the police investigating a leak and the source of a leak and the other question as described and reported by the member for Halton Centre, that the police are saying there is something legally wrong in having a document that has been leaked by the member.

If in your view, Mr Speaker, the rules or the Legislative Assembly Act are not adequate to address some of the concerns that have been expressed by the member, I think the three House leaders should look at this matter and address it through either rule changes or changes to the act, whatever is required. If a leaked document comes to the attention or into the possession of a member, the member should be allowed to use that document but the government should obviously have the right to look into how a leak occurred. That is tradition and has occurred in the past.

I do not believe any police force should be able to go to a member of the assembly and say, "Because you have a document and the document is stolen, you can be charged." I think that is totally incorrect, totally wrong. If we need to change the rules and the Legislative Assembly Act to not allow that to happen again, then we need to do that as the three political parties in the House.

The Speaker: We have dealt with this at some length. The member for St George-St David, the member for Parry Sound and the government House leader each mentioned the precinct. The Speaker's authority is quite clearly defined, as is the term "precinct." Indeed, in a different way, members have raised on occasion some concerns with respect to security as it applies to the constituency offices. If the members of the House wish to alter the definition of "precinct" to include the constituency offices, obviously that is a matter to which the House can address itself. It is not something the Speaker can unilaterally change.

Mr Scott: Mr Speaker, may I—

The Speaker: The member for St George-St David, is this a different matter?

Mr Scott: It essentially is. Your Honour has indicated that because of the definition you give to "precinct" you are not able to inquire, but you have made entirely plain, as I understand you, that if there are concrete cases of privilege to be investigated, you will undertake those investigations on a case-by-case basis. There is such a case. Yesterday in the House the member for Halton Centre said that after she received information—

The Speaker: I am sorry. I do not mean to curtail the member in flight, but perhaps this will be of assistance: If the member for Halton Centre has a point of privilege which she would like to raise with the Speaker, the Speaker would be delighted to hear that point of privilege.

Mr Scott: With the greatest respect, it is not that she has one in futuro. The reality is that she raised it yesterday. On page 3057 of Hansard, she said, "On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker," and then went on to describe the government investigation being undertaken by the OPP. She did not say the event had happened in her constituency office, but I am told it happened there twice.

She went on to say: "Indeed, in that case I had to ask for my own solicitor, because I was told by police that there may well be charges laid against me for participating in the receipt of this information. My privileges were violated, and no one can tell me this Premier does not have standards that will allow my privileges to be violated." If there was ever a clear invocation of privilege, it was that.

The Premier, the government leader of the day, brushed it all aside, because he said the harassment was not to be taken seriously. As no one was here to report it, he fled out of the chamber and was scrummed on other matters. The reality is that there cannot be for this member, and for all of us who do the same kind of work she does, a more serious invasion, off the premises, of her privileges as a parliamentarian: the assertion by the police officer that you may be charged in the criminal courts if you have used information in a way that is prohibited.

Now the Minister of the Environment—

The Speaker: No. Would the member for St George-St David take his seat.

Interjections.

Mrs Sullivan: I raised a question of privilege yesterday. I would like to raise that same question of privilege again. I believe, as I indicated yesterday, that my privileges were breached. In fact they were breached in an even greater way, not only for myself but for other people who are associated with me and my caucus, because not only was I involved in that interrogation but the then Leader of the Opposition, Mr Nixon, now agent general in London, was also interrogated, with the same information given to him, as were members of our staff on the Liberal side of the House. Mr Speaker, this is a clear breach not only of my privileges and Mr Nixon's privileges but of the privileges of every member of this House. I ask you to investigate this.

The Speaker: I would be most pleased to review both yesterday's Hansard and today's and report back to you as soon as possible.

Mr Conway: Could I make another point, Mr Speaker, on another ruling?

The Speaker: Is this on a different matter?

Mr Conway: It is on the ruling on language.

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr Conway: I listened very carefully to what you said you would not approve of in the future. I think you made some reference specifically to the nomenclature of Nazi Germany. I take it therefore that you would not approve of this kind of statement, "Colonel Drew is maintaining in Ontario at this very minute a secret political police, a paid government spy organization, a Gestapo to try to keep himself in power." Those were the words used by the very distinguished leader of the CCF in Ontario in 1945.

The Speaker: The member for Renfrew North will know that while there are many long days, I have not been hear since 1940. Statements by ministers.

Interjections.

The Speaker: It is time for oral questions.

Mr Bradley: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I understood there was to be a statement from the Minister of Energy. Our members prepared for that. Is that not the case?

The Speaker: I called for statements by ministers. There was no response. The next order of business is oral questions. The member for York Centre.

Mr Sorbara: It seems that in the absence, day after day, of statements by ministers, the opposition is not making statements and the government is responding, and responding in a rather feeble way.

ORAL QUESTIONS

RETAIL STORE HOURS

Mr Sorbara: My question is to the beleaguered Solicitor General, who probably now deeply regrets his transfer from the quietude of the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Technology to the mess he has found in the Sunday shopping ministry.

If reports are correct, it appears the government is prepared to concede a small concession in the interminable Sunday shopping debate and allow storekeepers the unfettered discretion to stay open on the three Sundays in December if they wish. Although this is a reasonable amendment, it does not make a bad piece of legislation a good piece of legislation. It does not acknowledge that there are others who celebrate their high holidays at other times. It does not acknowledge that some people prefer to celebrate other events in the calendar year. Nevertheless, it is a very small concession.

I want to ask the Solicitor General two things. First, he prepared to announce now that he is going to proceed with that amendment? Second, how does he justify the notion that we should be able to shop on Sunday with that notion, the major theme in his bill, that in Ontario on Sunday no consumer ought to be able to shop unless he or she is shopping at some place that has been defined as a tourist facility? How does he justify that and what is he trying to get to in this bill?

Hon Mr Pilkey: Actually I am pleased the question came up today. I hope that member in particular and his colleagues in general will acknowledge this amendment which I propose to forward to the clerk of the standing committee on administration of justice with the appropriate notice to opposition members well in advance of the next meeting on clause-by-clause consideration of Bill 115.

I would also say that I and the government have been ready at that particular committee for some four weeks and on seven separate occasions have been denied proceeding. Finally my statement was made yesterday and the clause by clause has proceeded.

I encourage the member for York Centre to recall his own quotes and his own words of only a few weeks ago on how important it was for this bill to be dealt with immediately to bring surety to the marketplace, particularly in advance of Christmas. I say to the member, he now has that opportunity. Will he take it?

The second part of the question I believe was, how does this square with the intention to have a common pause day? It squares in this sense: Quite unlike the previous government, which left a situation where people could be open every Sunday, this will see a common pause day achieved for approximately 48 weeks, or 11 months out of 12, and worker protection for 12 months out of 12.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Speaker, I just want to tell you that every time the opposition forces the government to reat on its positions, the province heaves a collective h of relief.

Hon Mr Wildman: So you are in favour of it?

Mr Sorbara: Yes, we are in favour. We are in favour a lot more.

I want to remind the Solicitor General, who suggests at somehow he has been ready for clause-by-clause consideration of this bill for some time, that it was his members who forced an indefinite postponement of this bill back on September 16 when we and the opposition members had set aside an entire week to consider it. The reason we have not proceeded with it is that the government was in a massive retreat, trying to revisit the question all over again, and was not prepared to bring its amendments until day when it finally decided to allow for a very small concession.

Mr Speaker, I just want to let you know that the Premier was quoted on the radio today suggesting that somehow this whole business is the fault of the opposition members. If we have to take credit for this small concession, we will take credit, but I ask the Solicitor General, will he dissociate himself from the comments of the Premier which suggest that our obligation to carefully analyse and scrutinize legislation ought to be characterized as stalling on a piece of legislation? Will the Solicitor General dissociate himself from what the Premier said this morning on the radio?

Hon Mr Pilkey: The simple answer is no, but before we engage in that kind of rhetoric let me simply say this: I invite both opposition benches to join with me to get this legislation passed and bring certainty to the marketplace, which has been desired by everyone on this particular issue. Let's get together. Let's do this together and let's deliver this bill to the benefit of the province.

Mr Sorbara: That is a different song than was being sung a month ago when the government whip on the committee forced closure and forced the bill out of committee.

The Solicitor General is suggesting to the members of this House that somehow it is all okay now, that we can proceed. He has not taken into consideration the fact that through a month and a half of public hearings, we heard over and over again that people want more freedom; that the bill treats unfairly large drugstores which are not going to be able to open and small music stores which for some reason are not going to be open; that the only stores that are going to be open are those that cater to a tourist clientele, and that he has brought forward amendments that allow a store that has permission to stay open to be hassled in front of the Ontario Municipal Board.

Now that the Solicitor General has begun to feel comfortable with making changes to a very bad piece of legislation, will he just carry on and solve the problem of the music stores and the large drugstores and simply give the people of the province the freedom they want to make their own decisions about what they do on Sunday, rather than having their Sunday dictated by what the Premier and the Solicitor General think they should do on Sunday? Will he bring forward some more amendments?

Hon Mr Pilkey: The government has any number of amendments that show a willingness and a large degree of flexibility. This amendment simply adds to that list, although I must say at this juncture that I believe sufficient flexibility has now been achieved. As I said, I would invite members of both opposition benches to join with me in the achievement of a common pause day to the benefit of families, individuals and worker protection, and join with me in showing some certainty to the marketplace on this issue. I invite them both not to do other than join hands with the government and get this job done. I invite them not to be obstructionists, not to deny the retailers of this province and not to deny the families and workers who also seek this protection, and to do it now.

Mr Mancini: My question is to the Solicitor General. Today it appears the government is changing its principles on Sunday shopping one month at a time.

As the minister will know, the city of Windsor has one of the highest unemployment rates in all of Canada. Recognizing this, Windsor city council passed a municipal bylaw that would help local stores compete with stores in Detroit that are allowed to open on Sundays. This move by Windsor city council is an attempt to prevent further business erosion and loss of retail jobs. The NDP Sunday shopping legislation will strike down Windsor council's bylaw and retail stores in Windsor will not be able to compete. As a result, some Windsor retailers will close and many retail workers will lose their jobs.

Can the Solicitor General tell us why border cities like Windsor will not be able to allow shopkeepers to open on Sundays year-round if that is their wish?

Hon Mr Pilkey: The government does not believe Sunday shopping or the ability to open on Sunday is the answer and will stem cross-border shopping. Even in the months when Sunday shopping was allowed under the previous government's bill, that did not stop the growing—and I mean substantially growing—exodus of Ontarians who were proceeding to the United States to shop. I am sorry that the facts of the circumstance will not support the contention the member raises.

Mr Mancini: The minister has not been listening. It appears he cannot grasp the devastation of this recession, nor is he able to understand the competition retailers face in border cities. Economic indicators point to a dangerous second phase of this recession. Retail sales are down, housing sales are down, car sales are down and many Windsor retailers will be forced to close down, and we get no help from this government.

Some municipalities like Windsor have limited resources at their disposal to fight this deep recession. Windsor has used one of the few tools available to protect retail jobs. If the minister is unable or unwilling to help Windsor, then he should let Windsor help itself. Will the minister allow border communities like Windsor and Essex county to make their own judgements on how to protect retailers and retail jobs?

Hon Mr Pilkey: The government has assisted the city of Windsor. We will continue to assist the city of Windsor.

I specifically was joined by Mayor Millson, the mayor of Windsor, and a large number of other mayors of border communities just a few months ago. We came together—the federal government, the provincial government and the municipal governments to devise programs that would assist border communities in the difficulty of cross-border shopping. We did that in a very unanimous and together way; a very productive situation.

I simply would respond to the member that I do not believe, nor will the facts show, that opening on Sunday will stem the problem of cross-border shopping. Perhaps not from my perspective, but from his, he may take some solace in this amendment that is coming forward. At least in the most competitive period for retailers, he will have achieved benefit by way of this amendment.

Mr Brown: The Minister of Revenue has recognized the importance of the retail sector for economic development. As a result, she is proposing that retail establishments be allowed to open throughout the summer, as well as in the month of December. Belatedly this government seems to be acknowledging the importance of retail sales to economic development.

The minister will be aware that the Liberals have introduced an amendment that would allow municipalities to open on Sundays for economic development reasons, as well as tourism development reasons. This amendment is vital for border communities such as Sault Ste Marie, which are in the process, as all members know, of fighting for their economic lives.

If the minister is unwilling to scrap this legislation in its entirety, will he at least allow communities to develop and use economic development criteria as a reason for opening on Sundays?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I am not sure if I have comprehended the question exactly, except to say that I know the government has met specifically and deliberately with border communities for going on to a year and has also involved the federal government to enlist its support for measures that would assist border communities. There has been a meeting of all those agencies, I believe, within the last few months, with the mayors of those specific communities, and there have been provincial funds allocated for programs within those communities to help assist them in the difficulty of cross-border shopping. If recent media reports are accurate, there has in fact been some success in that there has been a cessation of the level of cross-border shopping that had been occurring previously.

Mr Carr: My question is to the Solicitor General as well. In answer to questions by the Liberal Party, I noticed he said: "Let's get together. Let's do it together. I invite the members opposite to join me, to join hands."

The Premier has said on many occasions that we should be constructive on this side of the House in helping. I have in front of me a very simple bill I have had drafted. If I could have a page, I will send it over to the minister. He talked about the time delay in going to the justice committee. This bill to allow stores to open for the Christmas period can be introduced this afternoon. Will he commit today to taking a look at this constructive piece of legislation by the opposition and join hands with me embracing this legislation and having the stores open? Will the Solicitor General commit today to do that?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I have not had the benefit, except at this very moment, of receiving this suggestion, but let me respond in this way: We have a bill that is not about Sunday shopping; we have a bill that is about the protection of workers; we have a bill that is about the protection of a common pause day for families and individuals. At the same time it contains, with this new amendment, the flexibility for this government to entertain retailers at their most competitive season and members of the public who need some additional time at that particular time of year.

I simply say to the member, if that is what he was in favour of and he is in favour of this amendment, I invite him again to join with me on Monday in clause-by-clause. Let's get it through. I think we can do it in that one afternoon and we would deliver not only what this amendment calls for but all of the benefits of the bill to this House immediately.

Mr Carr: The problem is that Bill 115 is complex and contentious. People on all sides of the issue say it is a bad piece of legislation. There is a tremendous amount of work to be done. We are going to, as the minister said, join together to try to make that piece of legislation better.

The minister has a simple bill. It is very short and it can be separate from Bill 115. It could be passed this afternoon. It would do everything that his amendment would do. Why does the minister not, as he has said before, look at this as constructive help from an opposition party, something that was said in the throne speech by the Premier, that the government will be looking to the opposition for something constructive. Here is something constructive; now is his chance to do it. Will he pass it this afternoon?

Hon Mr Pilkey: After brief reflection on the bill, the answer is no. It seeks to elongate the time frame of the flexibility that we have offered and backdate it to October 27 until the end of the year, and that is not what our amendment says.

I would rather indicate as well, to be quite direct about it, that the government does not have any interest in piecemealing this bill, which will see the passage of Bill 115 sent off into orbit for some undefined point of time in which we will never achieve it. I believe there will be many supporters of the third party who will in fact encourage them to support the amendment that we have introduced to the committee and the bill in its entirety. I would not want to deny the member the opportunity for that pressure.

Mr Carr: As members know, Thanksgiving to Christmas is the period when people start gearing up for Christmas. My children are now picking out their gifts. The mistletoe and the decorations are being put into the plazas and the shopping malls in anticipation of Christmas. If the minister has some problem with the date, we are willing to work together and we are willing to be flexible. If it cannot be done this afternoon, possibly he could change the date.

has a chance to look at it. There are a couple of other small changes, but it could be done as easily as tomorrow.

It is a very simple piece of legislation. Will the minister, as he said to us on this side not more than five minutes ago, join with us in passing this piece of legislation, allowing the stores to be open so that retailers who are reeling from this government's policies will have a chance during the Christmas period to survive at the one period when most of their sales come from? Will he commit to making whatever changes he feels are necessary over the next day so to get this piece of legislation through?

Hon Mr Pilkey: We have demonstrated by our agreement to such an amendment today to proceed and to get on with it. The members of the opposition now have two simple choices. They can either join with the government for the benefit of this legislation, families, individuals, retailers and others or, quite frankly, they can persist in their filibustering and gamesmanship—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Pilkey: —and they can well answer to all those Ontarians, individuals, families and businesses alike, why there is this quagmire of uncertainty in the province at this time.

TRANSPORTATION FOR THE DISABLED

Mrs Marland: My question is to the Minister of transportation. Today in Hamilton, there are about 9,000 disabled and elderly people who are literally left without any way of leaving their homes. An example of how many people and how many trips this involves is about 400,000 trips per year. These are given by DARTS, the Disabled and Aged Regional Transit System, and that system today has been hit by a strike. For the sake of these thousands of people, will the minister tell this House what action he is planning to help them?

Hon Mr Pouliot: The member opposite is totally correct in her information and certainly we are very concerned. We are talking about a service which is most important to the less fortunate, and if I could, with respect, remind all of us that we are on one waiting list or another, so it escapes no one.

Arrangements have been made for the disabled. They have been made through the hospitals, they have been made through the taxi companies. We do believe it is a dilemma, it is an impasse, but the collective bargaining process must be given a reasonable chance to win.

This is the second day of a legal work stoppage in Hamilton. The responsibility is with the municipality of Hamilton, the regional body of Hamilton-Wentworth, and the employees that are united through the collective bargaining process and represented by their bargaining agents.

We are monitoring the situation. We are doing the best we can to find alternatives, and hopefully collective bargaining will be given a chance to win and the subject matter will be addressed in a relatively short few days.

Mrs Marland: I know this particular minister is particularly eloquent, but I wish he would be less patronizing to these people.

Susan Hudson is a DARTS user and she has told the Hamilton Spectator that with this strike she has no way of getting to her job at Amity Goodwill Industries. Hers is just one of thousands of desperate stories written by the strike.

I understand this government's hesitation to offend organized labour, but we are talking about people who cannot get to their doctors, to their workplaces, to their schools, or shopping for food. This minister thinks that he has made accommodation for wheelchairs and taxis. I will tell him now that there are only two taxis in Hamilton that can take wheelchairs, so I do not know where he is getting his information.

What is it that the minister plans to do to offer to help these people? Should this service not be declared an essential service? What is it that he has against the disabled so he will not take a position right away today to help these people?

Hon Mr Pouliot: I certainly have no intention and I hope my tone did not convey any sense of being patronizing, but I must say I do not deserve these comments. This is unwarranted. Let us stick with the issue. The question perhaps would have been best directed to the ministry responsible.

If the member refers to an essential service, that is filled with validity indeed. I am the minister responsible for transportation. In my jurisdictional capacity, my mandate says, yes, people who have to attend a hospital will be accommodated, people who have to attend a clinic will be accommodated. Unfortunately, in terms of recreation, in terms of social visitation, people will not be able to do these because the situation called for a legal work stoppage. This is the situation. We are in the second day.

Let us stick with the issue collectively, as opposed to trying to embarrass, with the highest of respect. Those are the people who are being afflicted. We are doing all we can and we do recognize the value of this most important service.

Mrs Marland: Let us stick to the issue, I agree. Let us stick to this issue, and the issue is disabled people who cannot get to work, who cannot shop for food and their own supplies.

This same organization was on strike in 1989, and at the same time in 1988, Wheel-Trans was on strike in Toronto. On both those occasions I suggested to the government of the day that this service should be declared an essential service.

I simply say to this minister that I am not talking about recreation and socialization. There was no reference to that in my first question to him, and I do not appreciate his suggesting that is what the disabled community of Hamilton-Wentworth are concerned about. They are concerned about survival in their work. If they do not get to work, they do not get paid.

The Speaker: And your question.

Mrs Marland: During the recent Toronto transit strike this government refused to introduce legislation that would have declared the TTC an essential service. As a result, this city was thrown into chaos for eight days. How long is this government prepared to lock the disabled people in Hamilton in their homes in order to keep its NDP union friends happy?

Hon Mr Pouliot: We have nothing but friends on this side of the House, but in a democracy there is nothing stopping us from appreciating some friendships more than others.

The workers involved in the work dispute, 33 full-time employees—let's set the record straight; many of them are disabled—have been without a contract since July 31, 1991. They are not asking for more money. The issue here is job guarantees. It is the second day of a legal work stoppage. We are doing all we can to make sure that emergency services are being provided by professional people. We are also at the same time encouraging both parties to reach a settlement as soon as possible.

INVESTIGATION INTO RELEASE OF DOCUMENTS

Mr Bradley: If I could get his attention, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Yesterday the Premier attempted to distance himself from the OPP investigation of members of the opposition. The Solicitor General is responsible for police forces in this province, including the OPP. I ask him now to tell the House that which the Premier would not reveal to members of this House yesterday: Who ordered the OPP to investigate and interrogate members of the official opposition, staff of the Ontario Liberal caucus, the former Leader of the Opposition, Robert Nixon, and a Toronto Star columnist on documents which were leaked from the government to those of us in opposition and those who serve the public interest?

Hon Mr Pilkey: In the sense that the question was characterized, I believe the appropriate answer would be no one.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Has the Solicitor General completed his response?

Hon Mr Pilkey: Yes, Mr Speaker.

Mr Bradley: That is an incredible answer from the Solicitor General of Ontario, who is obviously playing games with members of this House by evading the question in that way.

I think members of the opposition and independent observers of this issue would come to the conclusion that someone in the government of Ontario has ordered the provincial police to investigate the opposition and others who have received these leaked documents. I ask the Solicitor General now, what is he prepared to do to end this intimidation and harassment of members of the opposition and their staff who receive leaked information from his government, information of interest to the public we serve and information that is essential to carrying out our role and responsibility as members of the opposition in a democratic society?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I am quite willing to respond to the questions of any members of the House. My response was not meant to be one of avoiding it, but the question was asked in a way, I think, that was out of context and not valid.

Perhaps I could answer it in this way: If there is an allegation to the OPP that a crime has been committed, it is under an obligation to investigate that circumstance. It is my understanding that the Deputy Treasurer alleged that a criminal breach of trust had occurred, and the OPP quite naturally then proceeded to investigate the matter. I am not aware that anyone in the government directed operationally how the OPP would conduct its investigation.

Mr Runciman: I have a question on the same subject and respectfully suggest—I may have to withdraw this—that the Solicitor General may inadvertently be misleading the House in the response he just made. I will give him the benefit of the doubt. I will withdraw that, Mr Speaker, because you are going to compel me to and that is the only reason.

I spoke earlier today to an inspector in the anti-racket squad of the OPP with respect to this matter, and he indicated quite clearly to me that there was considerable internal debate within the anti-racket squad based on the government request. I think it is clear in the Hansard of October 16 that the Treasurer responded, "We have asked them to examine the process." That is the Treasurer's response to a question posed to him, I guess in follow-up to what the Solicitor General said, "Where there is a crime committed or the suspicion of a crime committed, the OPP goes in." We have the Treasurer saying, "We asked them to examine the process." There seems to be a very clear conflict here, and I ask the top law enforcement officer in the province why he endorsed such an investigation.

Mr Scott: It's a big laugh.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Pilkey: No, it certainly is not a big laugh at all. I can only answer as honestly and openly as I can. To the best of my knowledge, there was a breach. The OPP was asked to investigate it. They have done so.

Mr Scott: Larry, Curly and Moe. You people are on the edge of a very nervous moment. Think about it.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. We have waited long enough. We are all ready to go.

Hon Mr Pilkey: The member opposite says we are on the edge of some kind of problem or difficulty. I do not exhibit any nervousness because quite frankly there is nothing for the government to be nervous about. The OPP has an obligation to investigate when it is requested to do so. This is the basis of an ongoing investigation. I certainly have not directed them in any way as to whom or where they should investigate. That is an operational matter under their purview, not mine. While the matter is under investigation, I do not really think it would be appropriate for me to comment.

Mr Scott: Who started the investigation?

The Speaker: The member for St George-St David, come to order.

Hon Mr Pilkey: I can honestly tell the member I do not have that information in any event.

Mr Runciman: I think this response and the previous response can be categorized as rather frightening. I think the minister is being completely honest and apparently he does not know what happened in this instance. We are talking about the OPP going beyond its mandate. He clearly spelled it out here: "crime or suspicion of crime." The previous day we had the Treasurer saying, "We want to have the process reviewed." There was considerable debate within the OPP. They looked at the situation in Ottawa with respect to budget leaks and the political fallout with respect to that whole matter falling upon the RCMP. There is very grave concern.

I asked the Solicitor General today why he endorsed this since it clearly goes beyond the mandate of the OPP anti-racket squad, and he does not have any answer. Apparently he does not know how it proceeded. I ask the minister whether he would be prepared today to endorse an investigation by a standing committee of this House. I think it is important enough to be carried out.

Hon Mr Pilkey: The Ontario Provincial Police does not seek my endorsement of investigations it does. Investigations are conducted upon request when a criminal breach of trust is alleged. All regular investigative precautions are adhered to during these investigations, and any investigations entered into by the OPP are done by it in an operational mode. No names and no comments are issued while the matter is under investigation.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Would the minister take his seat, please. I am finding it quite difficult to hear the response. We will wait until the member for St George-St David has come to order.

Mr Scott: Wait till the Premier comes. They won't let me in.

The Speaker: I am asking the member for St George-St David to come to order, please.

Mr Scott: Forgive me, Mr Speaker.

The Speaker: Will the minister conclude his response. New question, the member for London South.

MIDWIFERY

Mr Winner: My question is addressed to the Minister of Health. On October 15 the minister announced that Ontario would be the first province to introduce a bachelor's degree in midwifery. I understand the first classes in the three-year program are slated to begin in 1993 after a curriculum is developed with the help of doctors, nurses and midwives. This program will serve to meet the demand for qualified midwives in Ontario once Bill 56 is passed to regulate midwifery and to set up a self-governing college.

Will the establishment of a regulated profession mean that traditional native midwives will have to adhere to the standards and rules set by the college of midwives in order to revitalize traditional midwifery practices?

Hon Ms Lankin: The question the member raises is of concern as well to the standing committee that is currently going through clause-by-clause analysis of this legislation. During this summer the ministry met with a group of aboriginal representatives to consult on this very issue and we have taken a look at their concerns that the legislation could somehow inhibit the practice of traditional midwifery.

The regulation of midwifery is also related to the education program the member speaks of. We funded the aboriginal groups to do some further consultation on this and they have given us their responses. I am meeting with them next week to discuss some of the concerns they have and hope to report that back to the legislative committee before the end of clause-by-clause. It would be our intent that the legislation and the education program be respectful of the practice of traditional midwifery.

Mr Winner: For those aboriginal people who choose the proposed education route, will the educational program be accessible to aboriginal people, and will it incorporate traditional practices of prenatal, childbirth and post-natal family care in its curriculum?

Hon Ms Lankin: The responsibility for the actual education programs will come under the purview of my colleague the Minister of Colleges and Universities, but we have had discussions about this.

The curriculum committee of the interim regulatory council on midwifery has met with representatives of the native communities, and one of the things we are trying to do, as the minister has gone out for tender for the establishment of a four-year degree program in a university, is to ensure that the program has some flexibility around long-distance learning around various clinical sites so that we have as much flexibility and access as possible.

I also think the issue of incorporation of some of the traditional practices of our aboriginal people in the education program is something that should be looked at, and we will take that under advisement with the people who will be doing the curriculum development.

INVESTIGATION INTO RELEASE OF DOCUMENTS

Mr Bradley: I have a question for the Solicitor General, once again, on the subject of intimidation of members of the opposition who have received leaked documents from the government. I see he has had some advice and counsel from the government House leader and from other members who perhaps are informing him on a better way of answering the question.

When I asked the minister who had ordered the investigation of members of the opposition and others who have received leaked documents that it is in the public interest to have exposed for the people of Ontario, he decided he would interpret that question in such a way as to say no one. Then, in answer to the member for Leeds-Grenville, the minister seemed to indicate someone requested that there be an investigation. When the Solicitor General or someone in the government requests, that is an order in terms of dealing with the police in Ontario.

I ask the member again: Who in the government requested, as he would say—ordered, as I would interpret it—an investigation of members of the opposition, including the Leader of the Opposition, present day; the Leader of the Opposition who is now in Britain; the member for Halton Centre; members of the Liberal staff, and the Toronto Star reporter, John Power? Who ordered those investigations or, as he says, who requested those investigations?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I am trying to respond very openly to this issue, but I think these questions are being framed in a way to elicit something other than that. Let me explain that. Initially the member asked me who initiated or requested an investigation. He started to name members of Parliament and other people and I answered him, nobody, and I am answering him again, nobody. The issue is that a government document was stolen and that the OPP was asked to investigate.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Would the minister take his seat.

Mrs Sullivan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker—

The Speaker: No. Just a moment. Would the member take her seat, please. When order has been restored I will entertain any alleged points of order. It is very difficult to hear a response when the volume is turned up so high. Perhaps folks would just calm down a little bit and allow the Speaker to hear whatever responses are being presented.

Has the Solicitor General concluded his remarks?

Hon Mr Pilkey: Only to conclude in this way to the response I had given earlier, that the OPP will decide whom to interview, not the cabinet minister, and that is the plain truth of the matter.

Mr Bradley: I am looking at a column from a Toronto Star writer, Mr Power, who said about the Ministry of Natural Resources:

"After asking questions about Queen's Park and getting evasive answers or no comment, this writer was contacted by a senior ministry official and asked to spill the beans on the informant. Next came a call from a member of the OPP anti-racket squad with the same demands. He stated the police had been called by the ministry to look for the leak within the ministry."

We have a leak in the Ministry of Natural Resources and somebody asking somebody to start an investigation, we have one in Treasury and we have one in Environment. We have three different ministries. I have a very simply question for the Solicitor General. Who in each of these cases authorized an investigation? Who initiated an investigation? Who requested an investigation of members of the opposition, of members of the Liberal staff and of a reporter for the Toronto Star?

Hon Mr Pilkey: Just on a point of privilege, first of all: Apparently in my earlier comments I used the term "stolen," which may or may not have been appropriate. I am advised a more appropriate word would have been "leaked," so I make that clarification.

I repeat now—I have repeated it three times and I guess I can repeat it 33 times—I am not aware of anybody who authorized the investigation of any opposition member.

Mr Runciman: Following up on the Solicitor General's initial response to my question, when I suggested he was misleading the House, which I apologized for—

Hon Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr Speaker—
Interjections.

The Speaker: I ask the members of the House to come to order. Every member of this House has the right to rise in his or her place to raise a point of order with the Speaker, and the Speaker shall hear that point of order.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Mr Speaker, this is the second time this afternoon the member for Leeds-Grenville has used a term which he knows to be unparliamentary and has done it in a way which is thumbing his nose at your authority to keep order in this House and at the rules of this House. I suggest you warn him that he shall not be allowed to do it again.

The Speaker: I listened very closely to the member for Leeds-Grenville. The member in fact withdrew the comment he had uttered earlier, which indeed was unparliamentary. I imagine that all members are quite aware of the fact that they should not be accusing others of misleading the House.

Mr Runciman: My concern, and the reason I raised the comment that offends the member, was the fact that the minister stood in his place and indicated, or at least implied, that this investigation could well have been initiated by the OPP. I spoke to members of the anti-rackets squad who clearly indicated an internal debate based on a political request. With the comments made by the Treasurer earlier, there is a very significant contradiction here. The Solicitor General stood in this House today and implied, if not stated clearly—we will have to check Hansard—that this investigation could have been initiated by the OPP. That kind of comment comes from the top law enforcement officer in the province, and I would like him, right now, to explain those remarks.

Hon Mr Pilkey: I believe those were not the remarks I made, and I believe Hansard will so show.

Mr Runciman: To follow up on my original question, which the minister continues to evade, I have to give him the benefit of the doubt that he simply does not know what is going on with respect to this matter.

We asked him how this matter was endorsed, when it clearly goes beyond the mandate of the OPP anti-rackets squad, which he himself spelled out in response to the member for St Catharines: There has to be the possibility of a crime or a suspicion of crime. In this case we have the Treasurer, the minister's colleague in cabinet, saying they simply wanted to look at the process. That is a very clear contradiction. Will the minister get up and explain that to the House today?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I cannot explain what the Treasurer advised the member. I can only advise the member that if the OPP is requested to undertake an investigation of a leak, it will undertake to do so and it alone will determine whom it questions in that investigation.

PLANNING APPROVAL

Mr Johnson: My question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Two years ago Geertsma Construction built a 12-unit condominium in a site-plan-controlled area in the township of Thurlow. In 1990 the township of Thurlow supported this construction company's application for an exemption from the Planning Act because the municipal law already sets the ground rules for construction of this project.

Geertsma has been led to believe that all relevant documents have been filed for the ministry to approve this project. To date, they have not received approval. This poses a problem because the condominium cannot be registered without approval. Therefore, although the purchasers of the units can occupy their units in the building, they cannot take formal possession.

I understand that this process is required under the Condominium Act. However, this means owners are paying rent and not their mortgages, so in effect they are losing potential equity. To date, the condominium is still without approval, and there has not been any new information from the plans administration branch. Why has Geertsma Construction had to wait a year in what was believed to be a simple matter of administration?

Hon Mr Cooke: I have spoken to ministry officials about this application and I have been advised that the final plans for the condominium have been returned to the applicant's Ontario land surveyor for some corrections of technical errors. As soon as we have had the plan returned to the ministry and it has been reviewed, we will approve the application and the exemption.

In terms of the time it takes to get through the planning process in Ontario, I share some of the concerns of the member. That is why the Ministry of Municipal Affairs is looking right now at what changes can be made in the approvals process within our government, within our own ministry and with other ministries in the short term. That is also why we have set up the planning inquiry led by John Sewell to look at the planning process in this province, so we can make it more efficient while at the same time providing good planning that respects the environment and the needs of our community.

INVESTIGATION INTO RELEASE OF DOCUMENTS

Mr Bradley: I have a question for the Solicitor General. In his answers this afternoon, evasive as I interpret them to be, the Solicitor General has nevertheless indicated that the OPP was requested to initiate an investigation; it did not initiate it on its own volition.

What I want to know from the member is, who alerted the OPP to this leak and who suggested to the OPP that there should be an investigation of the leak of this government document—of any of these government documents but particularly the government documents related to those leaked to the opposition? Was it a minister? Was it a deputy minister? Was it someone on the staff of a ministry? Was it someone from the office of the Premier? Who put forward the request to the OPP to initiate an investigation?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I think that is a more valid question. We finally have it straight on now, and it does not allege someone directing investigations against members of this House. I think they finally have it straight.

As I indicated in my remarks earlier, the Ontario Provincial Police do not come to me every time they start an investigation.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Pilkey: If I might be permitted, Mr Speaker, as I indicated, the Ontario Provincial Police does not come to me, as minister, to tell me every time it launches an investigation. If they did, I would be very busy indeed.

From the debate I heard in the House—I believe it started last week—it was my belief that there was a response from the front benches that in terms of the Treasury leak it was a request from the Deputy Treasurer. That was my impression, what I thought I heard or understood over the din of this House last week.

I will attempt to confirm for the member that this was the information given by the Treasurer to the House and clarify that for him. That is a straightforward answer to the question.

Mrs Sullivan: My question is a supplementary, once again to the Solicitor General. Members may recall that the document we are discussing, about which an interrogation of myself and others occurred, was brought to this House.

I can assure members that the OPP does not sit in anxiety watching the proceedings of the Legislature on television so it can instigate an investigation from those circumstances. I am asking the minister: In the instance in which I brought material which came into my hands directly to the floor of this Legislature, who instigated, who ordered, who requested that the OPP investigate my holding of that document?

Hon Mr Pilkey: Given that we have several varied circumstances, all around a similar circumstance—as I indicated before, I am not aware of all the investigations the OPP commences—I would be very pleased to seek the answer the member requests and to provide that to her just as soon as possible.

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

Mr J. Wilson: I too have a simple question for the Solicitor General. This province and indeed this country are founded on our traditions as a constitutional monarchy and, as such, many members of this assembly will be meeting with two members of the royal family tomorrow as they visit our province.

In honour of the royal visit to Ontario, would the Solicitor General undertake a gesture of goodwill and immediately restore the reference to Her Majesty the Queen in the oath taken by Ontario's police officers?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I would undertake to review that with the police services boards of Ontario, the Ontario Association of Chiefs of Police and the Police Association of Ontario, all of which joined the government in the consideration of the review of the Police Act that came to that determination, but I do not believe I could do that before the royal visit later today.

Mr J. Wilson: The week after they agreed with the government, they passed a resolution disagreeing with the government's decision when they finally had an opportunity to consult with their membership.

On April 17, as a member of Her Majesty's loyal opposition, I raised this issue as a point of parliamentary privilege in this House. I have continued to press this government to restore this unifying symbol of our heritage because I feel so strongly about our ties to the monarchy.

I am very proud to have the royal family visiting our province. I ask the Solicitor General again: Will he demonstrate his pride as a Canadian? Will he demonstrate his commitment to the royal family and to our royal traditions? Will he allow the men and women of Ontario police forces to swear allegiance to Her Majesty the Queen, the Queen of Canada?

Hon Mr Pilkey: The Ontario government is just thrilled to have the royal couple here in Ontario and in the communities, many of them smaller communities, throughout our province. I believe the people of Ontario will be absolutely captivated by this royal couple, as people all around the world have been.

My only regret as Solicitor General is that I will not be involved in the ceremony with respect to that visit. Notwithstanding that, I want to tell members that I have the greatest respect for the royalty and for the couple, and I know the Premier, who is going to be with them for most of the trip, will represent us perhaps better than anyone else in this province could.

[Applause]

The Speaker: Does the member for St George-St David have a point of order?

Mr Scott: I have a question. I have been waiting here while the applause has been going on. The applause cannot be used to run out the clock. Everybody knows that. I understand the government does not want us to have another question, but it cannot run out the clock by applause to prevent an important question being asked. I ask for a ruling on that.

The Speaker: In fact, the member will recall that the time had expired on the clock prior to there being any applause. I am sure the member for Scarborough East, who was waiting patiently to ask his question, appreciates your kind gesture on his behalf.

DECORUM IN CHAMBER

Mr Mills: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: All through this afternoon the member for Etobicoke West has displayed a sign, "Call the police." I do not think that is parliamentary in this chamber. I do not think one is allowed to hold that up in here. I think this is disgraceful.

Mr Scott: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: If your rights as a parliamentarian were being abused, wouldn't you call the police?

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. I ask members of the House to come to order, please.

To the member for Durham East, the question about signs in the chamber has been raised on occasion both during this Parliament and previous parliaments. There is no standing order with respect to signs in the chamber. Speakers, both this current Speaker and past speakers, have discouraged the use of signs in the chamber. Notwithstanding that discouragement, from time to time signs do magically appear.

If a rule change is sought, the members will have to approach the standing committee on the Legislative Assembly with their request to have something put into the standing orders, but without anything specifically in the standing orders, it makes it very awkward for the Speaker to make such a ruling as you have just requested.

Hon Ms Gigantes: On the same point, Mr Speaker: I understand what you are saying about the question of displaying signs. Over the last five years, during most of which I was not here, there has been a tradition developed where signs were permitted. However, I would like to draw to your attention that the standing orders do talk about a demonstration that threatens to disturb the order of the House. I suggest to you that we are nearing the point of that kind of situation with a member who will hold a fluorescent sign any time he feels like doing so. It is most disturbing to the affairs of the House and I suggest you take that under advisement.

Mr Conway: I can scarcely believe my ears in this connection. I happen to agree, quite frankly, with the member for Durham East on the subject of signage. I think the tradition of paraphernalia into which we have fallen here in the last few years is quite unbecoming. I have said that before and I would support any move to clean it up.

However, I have to say to my dear friend the member for Ottawa Centre that no group of individuals in the history of the Ontario Legislature has been more flagrantly in violation of that dictum than the NDP. I do not know who it was, but just the other day I saw someone over there holding up a sign with something on it.

I remember among the several cases a famous night or series of nights in this assembly 18 or 24 months ago, when the very colourful member for Welland-Thorold stood in his place up in that corner, near to where the member for Kenora is now situate, and advertised phone numbers and a variety of other things with signs.

I just want to say that I cannot believe my ears when I now hear the government House leader and the Minister of Housing, to name but two, inviting honourable members of the Liberal and Conservative parties to a parliamentary decorum that they systematically ignored and refused to submit to over many years, in my experience.

The Speaker: I have already made a ruling on this alleged point of order. If there is something new to be added, okay. Otherwise, I am not entertaining further discussion.

Mrs Caplan: To the point of order, Mr Speaker: I want to point out to you, because I know this is something that concerns you, that the point just spoken to by the member for Renfrew North is a real concern to my constituents in the riding of Oriole. Just these last few months I have had several constituents mention to me the concern they have about decorum in this House.

We have discussed the fact that over quite a period of time it was the practice of the new government to behave in a way that is less than what would be expected in this

use. They told me they were very concerned. They used the word "hypocrisy." They felt the government was behaving in a very hypocritical way, and today's display I now will only increase the cynicism. I would ask the Speaker in his ruling to consider how cynical it is making constituents to hear—

The Speaker: Would the member for Oriole take her seat, please.

Hon Ms Lankin: On the same point of order, Mr Speaker: In terms of trying to add something new to the debate, I would say that there are a lot of people who have been taken who have very long institutional histories in this province and institutional memories that give light to past procedure, past practices and past behaviours, all of which, as a new member to this House, I listen to and I think are something the voters of this province would like to see changed. As a new member elected to this House, I would like to be part of making a new decorum and I invite all members to look at it in that respect and not with respect to institutional history that has existed.

The Speaker: To the member for Etobicoke West, is there something new?

Mr Stockwell: It is new and improved. On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: May I suggest in my defence I am not—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Mr Stockwell: I cannot believe that the two members opposite show such grave concerns about holding up a sign, yet have no concerns about sending the police into opposition party offices. It seems to me a very large contradiction. Rather than worrying about signs, maybe the members should worry about where the police are going, what they are investigating and who is introducing this—

The Speaker: Would the member for Etobicoke West please take his seat. To the member for Ottawa Centre who raised the point originally with me, and to the member for Jeffrey M. Brown North who I know has always respected the dignity of the chamber, this Speaker, like past speakers, discourages the use of signage within this chamber, but the standing orders do not give the Speaker the ability to make a ruling on a sign such as we saw this afternoon. Members may wish to take this matter to the standing committee on the Legislative Assembly for further discussion.

COMMITTEE SITTINGS

Mr Cooké moved that the standing committee on resources development shall meet to consider Bill 118, An Act to amend the Power Corporation Act, during the winter adjournment in accordance with the schedule of meeting dates to be agreed to by the three party whips and to be tabled with the Clerk of the assembly at a later date as follows: one week to receive public submissions at meetings in Toronto, two weeks to receive public submissions at meetings outside of Toronto and one week for clause-by-clause consideration of the bill.

All proposed amendments shall be filed with the clerk of the committee prior to the last day on which the committee is authorized to consider the bill clause by clause. At 4 pm on the last day on which the committee is authorized to consider the bill clause by clause, those amendments which have not yet been moved shall be deemed to have been moved and the Chair of the committee shall interrupt the proceedings and shall without further amendment or debate put every question necessary to dispose of all remaining sections of the bill and any amendments thereto. Any divisions required shall be deferred until all remaining questions have been put, the members called in once and all deferred divisions taken in succession.

The committee shall report the bill to the House on the first day of the spring meeting period. In the event that the committee fails to report the said bill on the date provided, the bill shall be deemed to be reported to and received by the House.

The Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

Mr Conway: Is that a motion that can be spoken to?

The Speaker: Yes, it is indeed.

Mr Conway: I would just say a few words. There has been, as members will know, a great deal of interest in this House and an even greater degree of interest outside this House in the government's Ontario Hydro policy. Bill 118, which was brought to our attention by the member for Peterborough, the former Minister of Energy, was, I believe, introduced back on June 5, 1991. It has been, as I say, the subject of an intense debate in some quarters here. I must say at the outset that I appreciate the agreement that has been worked out among the House leaders to have this bill go forward to hearings outside of the legislative sitting period this fall.

It was quite surprising to me that there was some thought—quite an active thought, apparently—that this bill, very significant and highly controversial, would be dealt with in the fall sitting of this Legislature. The expectation was, in some quarters, that it would be passed into law by Christmas 1991.

I am pleased we have an agreement that will take this bill into the hinterland during the winter. I know my constituents are going to be very keen to have an opportunity to speak to the standing committee on resources development. I have to believe that there are a lot of other people in northern and southwestern Ontario, among other parts of the province, where that interest is going to be similarly high.

I do not remember, although I could stand corrected, too many, if any, references quite like the one we have just had. It is quite clear why we have this motion. The government, at the direction of the chairman of Ontario Hydro, wants this bill as quickly as it can get this bill.

One of the things about Bill 118 that I really find fascinating is the marvellous retroactivity that is built into those sections of the bill that deal with the empowerment of Marc Eliesen. I have said before that I find it deeply offensive that not just one but two ministers of Energy, on behalf of this government, were sent into this Legislature to present facts in support of this bill and the policy that underlies it which were manifestly inaccurate. I do not hold either the member for Peterborough or the member for Kitchener accountable for that. Quite frankly, I absolve them of responsibility because I know who the architect of that disinformation was.

The member for St Catharines-Brock nods her head negatively. That is her right. But I just want to say that I know the chairman of Ontario Hydro wants this bill. He wants it yesterday because this is the bill that empowers him in a way that I think is not in the public interest. I repeat that I have no difficulty whatsoever with this government choosing Marc Eliesen to be the chairman of Ontario Hydro. I think that is a perfectly understandable and appropriate thing for the Bob Rae government to do. That is not my quarrel with either this bill or with Mr Eliesen, because I believe that he does have a certain talent that will serve him and the government in some respects rather well.

I repeat that what I have seen in Bill 118, and particularly the unfortunate circumstance in which two ministers of Energy have been put to defend something that was simply not true, to see the retreat that the member for Kitchener had to offer by way of a curtailment of the directive power, just invites me and my colleagues, not just on this side but private members on the other side, to look very carefully at this bill and the policy that informs it.

I am delighted, I say again, that we are going to have an opportunity over several weeks in the winter break to look at the bill clause by clause and, more important, to hear from farmers and others in the community about how they feel the government is proceeding with Hydro and energy policy.

I just want to say again that I observe the language of the motion, and the very careful language, as being in a real sense a time allocation motion with respect to the clause-by-clause. The government has that right. I myself have invoked it on one or two occasions.

But I want to say, as I look forward to joining this committee for its travels around the province, as I look forward to having Mr Eliesen before the committee, that Mr Eliesen came to the appointments review committee in, I think it was, May. He denied, for example, ever asking anyone on the board of Ontario Hydro to be appointed chief executive officer. We have, I might add, a letter signed by a number of very distinguished citizens who serve on that board, which letter states that he said so to them.

So we have a very difficult situation, with the current chairman denying he ever asked anyone at the board to be appointed by it as the chief executive officer—he denied it flatly—and now there is a letter in the public record which states quite clearly that there were members of the board who heard him ask for that very thing. I am looking forward to having Mr Eliesen and some of those people come to the committee to find out who is telling the truth.

We have had a debate in this House around what kind of employment contract Mr Eliesen has arranged with the government or the board. I have got to tell members that the answers provided to me to this date are wholly unsatisfactory.

I repeat that I have no difficulty with Mr Eliesen being the chairman. I think it is not a surprising thing that he should be appointed chairman. But I do have a problem with his being appointed chairman and chief executive officer, particularly under the circumstances of his appointment.

There has been a lot of debate in this assembly about conflict of interest. I think what we have seen with the writing of Bill 118, and I have said it before and I will repeat it now, is that one person wrote that bill and that person was the then Deputy Minister of Energy, the now chairman and chief executive officer of Ontario Hydro. In my years in this assembly, I have never seen a situation which I considered to be more classically a complete and total conflict of interest than Bill 118 when it relates to Mr Eliesen.

We have had some debates around here, and I was not here the day that the member for Sudbury East and the member for Scarborough West were grilled about whether or not they were in breach of conflict rules, but there has not been a word to date about Mr Eliesen's conflict in the writing of that bill and being therefore, as a result of its passage, the single most noteworthy beneficiary of its enactment. I am certainly looking forward in the course of these hearings to have a discussion about that as well.

We have had some discussions in this House around the employment contract and we have not had very satisfactory answers, to my way of thinking. There is absolutely no question in my mind that the government has the right to determine its own Hydro policy. I have said that before and I believe it. I may not agree with it. Chances are that in some respects I am not going to agree with it, but I respect them for their decision to move forward in a way to put their stamp on Ontario Hydro.

What I will not accept, however, is to be told on the one hand that a hallmark of that policy is going to be accountability and openness and to be told day after day after painful day that: "I, Mr Premier, leader of the executive council, never discussed the terms and conditions of Mr Eliesen's employment. I don't know whether he's going to be paid $400,000. I don't know whether those press reports that he's going to get a 75% pension entitlement after six years"—which would be an entitlement of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year for the rest of his life—"are accurate. I don't know whether it's true that the Hydro board has already put tens of thousands of dollars into Mr Eliesen's pension."

There are many issues about which this Legislature should be seized in so far as Bill 118 is concerned, and I want to say I look forward to these hearings and I want to serve notice now that I, speaking only as the member for North Renfrew, will participate in those hearings, I look forward to an active discussion around the committee stage and I want there to be no confusion some months hence that when that bill is reported back for the committee of the whole stage and third reading, I will expect those of us who have had an opportunity to monitor and to pursue this most central of government policies will certainly want to take some time to talk about what we heard in the committee, what people have told us about the hydro policy of this government and its impact on real people in the community.

I can only say that I wanted to take some time this afternoon to put myself on record as to what we are dealing with here as Bill 118 proceeds on its way through the committee stage and later to committee of the whole and third reading.

Motion agreed to.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Mr Runciman from the standing committee on government agencies presented the committee's 16th report.

The Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 104(g)11, the report is deemed to be adopted by the House.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

RETAIL BUSINESS HOLIDAYS AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES JOURS FÉRIÉS DANS LE COMMERCE DE DÉTAIL

Mr Carr moved first reading of Bill 142, An Act to amend the Retail Business Holidays Act, 1991.

M. Carr propose la première lecture du projet de loi 142, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les jours fériés dans le commerce de détail.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Mr Carr: This is the bill that was talked about in question period. The bill would permit retail business establishments to be open on Sunday from October 27, 1991, until the end of the year. This is at the request of the Solicitor General, who asked that we join hands with some constructive bills, so that is what this bill will be doing.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

TOBACCO TAX AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI DE LA TAXE SUR LE TABAC

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 84, An Act to amend the Tobacco Tax Act.

Suite du débat ajourné sur la motion visant la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 84, Loi portant modification de la Loi de la taxe sur le tabac.

Mr Bradley: I enjoyed the opportunity yesterday to indicate why I was opposed to this particular bill. I was afraid at some of the uses this money might be put to, and today I am even more fearful, after the question period, that the funds that would be derived from the tobacco tax would in fact be used by the government to fund investigations of members of the opposition. That is always a concern we are going to have, that when the government derives some funds, when the government does some taxation in this province, it can be used for various purposes.

We look at a tobacco tax and its total impact on the economy. I think a number of the members who have discussed this particular bill have talked about the fact that it is very difficult to oppose a tax of this in normal times because it is considered to be a product which is detrimental to the health of people, and certainly anybody who views the evidence that has been put forward by members of the medical profession over the years would agree that tobacco has certainly not been beneficial to the health of those people, so normally one would say it is a reasonable tax. In fact, some governments might choose to even withdraw that particular product or others to tax it out of existence. That is one particular way of dealing with it in terms of its health effects. This government has decided to put another tax on it this time.

I am suggesting that there are some people in our society—I talked to a person, for instance, in my own constituency who is confronted with schizophrenia. I was quite surprised by this. If you are not exposed to it directly or you do not know people who are in that predicament, you would not know, but this person indicated that the only time he seemed to be avoiding his problem and some of the implications of this particular condition was when he had cigarettes. He lamented the fact; in fact in his particular case he said: "I know they cause me problems because of things such as lung cancer or heart disease or things of that nature, but in my everyday existence I believe I require cigarettes. It's the only time I can keep myself stable."

I was quite surprised by this, and it places me in a dilemma. I suppose one way of dealing with it is an exemption from this particular tax, but it is an interesting wrinkle on the whole idea of taxing tobacco products.

A second group I am concerned about that is hit by this are people who are very senior in their years, senior citizens who, no matter what you do, you are not going to convince them not to smoke. Those people, most of them at least, live on fixed incomes. When they are confronted with the federal tax which Mr Wilson put on in his last budget, and then a provincial tax in the Treasurer's budget, the member for Nickel Belt's budget, these people feel it is a great imposition on them financially, yet many are addicted to it or at least feel it is one of the enjoyments they have in their life in advanced age. I do not smoke and I do not know whether that is a legitimate health case or not, but it is nevertheless something which exists in reality. That is again why, when we keep piling tax upon tax on tobacco products, I wonder whether we are necessarily doing the right thing.

I applaud any efforts by a government and I think the three governments that have been in power have attempted to educate people not to smoke cigarettes, or pipes or cigars or anything else they might smoke, and the school system certainly has. I think you, Mr Speaker, were part of the education system at one time, if my memory is correct, and so was I, and I know there are many people in the education system who have worked extremely hard to convince people that there are adverse health effects related to smoking tobacco products.

I certainly applaud that and I believe that is the way we eliminate the problem, rather than by simply taxing people into oblivion, those who are particularly addicted and cannot stop the addiction, those who are senior citizens or low-income people and cannot afford it, and of course the individual I mentioned with that particular disorder. I believe him when he said that in fact it stabilized him. He was quite sincere in this and concerned about the increase in taxation.

In terms of utilization of the money, I could go on at some length on that. I do not think I will this afternoon. There are other taxes that I think are more ominous for the province than this. After I spoke in the House yesterday, I received some communications from people who watch the parliamentary network who are certainly in agreement that this is one of the factors that sends people to other jurisdictions to purchase their cigarettes, particularly over the border. I was quite surprised by that, because it was as much conjecture as anything else on my part, though I had heard it from many people, that the gasoline tax, the alcohol tax, the cigarette tax and the all tobacco products tax in fact had the effect of driving people to the other side of the border to make those and other purchases. It was confirmed when I spoke to people about this or when people phoned in. Some of them admitted that this is what brought them across the river, that they would like to shop in Canada but that they are relatively low-income people.

Sometimes it is a lecture. This is one of the dangers of cross-border shopping. People who make lots of money and do not find it as hard to make ends meet perhaps do not tend to shop in the United States as much as others. Some do—I am not saying they do not—but there are some low-income people who consider it almost essential, because of certain products they want to purchase, to go to the United States.

I think the cumulative effect of this tax and the tax that was levied yesterday, even though it is on high-income people—it certainly does not hit cabinet ministers and I do not think it necessarily hits anybody in this House who is an MPP, certainly not his income as an MPP—along with the gasoline tax, the fuel tax and the tax on auto workers—that is, the tax on vehicles, which is going to be detrimental to auto workers—those total taxes put together are taking a big bite out of the wallets and paycheques of people in this province, those who are fortunate enough to have a paycheque today.

There are many working people in this province who are concerned when they see tax upon tax piled upon them. There are many people who normally might be expected to support this government. The member for Chatham-Kent smiles over there because he knows who I am talking about. Certainly the Speaker himself, who no doubt is in very good touch with his own constituency, knows what people think about these onerous taxes on folks in Ontario.

I implore this government to reconsider this tax. I implore this government to reconsider all the taxes it is levying on the people of Ontario in these difficult economic times. People never like taxes. They tend to tolerate them more in boom times than in other times. We recognize that this is not the only Legislature which is levying taxes.

There are people who perhaps expect the federal government under the Progressive Conservative Party to levy certain taxes on certain people, but they do not expect the New Democratic Party to levy the same kinds of punitive taxes on the people of this province.

I have been in the union halls of this province and various places and have heard people complain about taxes. I know some of the members here enter those places from time to time. In Sudbury, I was in the Caruso Club. I am sure some of the people there who smoked were concerned about this tax. They were certainly concerned about the next tax we will get to, which I will not talk about today, the increased tax on alcoholic beverages we see being implemented. That, again, is driving people to other jurisdictions.

I hope all members of the Legislature, particularly the government members, who have it within their power to raise a ruckus in caucus, will speak for working people in Ontario, will speak for low-income people in Ontario, will speak for everybody in Ontario in attempting to convince the Treasurer and the Premier, who is the boss of everything, that these taxes should be withdrawn.

If they do so, I will be one of the first people to stand up and applaud that action. I even promise I will not call it a retreat in that specific case. If they were to withdraw any of those taxes, I at least would not stand up in this House and call it a retreat. Others may view it that way. I would not view it as a retreat. I would view it as what happens from time to time when the government listens to the opposition. As the member for York Centre said today, a collective sigh of relief is often heard in Ontario when this government backs down from some of its early initiatives. I implore them to do that today.

The Minister of Agriculture and Food is here. He has another interest in this, other than simply the tax, and he knows the difficulty those farmers face. In fairness to the Minister of Agriculture and Food, when this happens, if it discourages consumption, he has to find money—it is a diminishing return after a while—to deal with the plight of tobacco growers in the province. Indeed, he has to find money to deal with a lot of problems that are not easy to deal with. They were easy in opposition, but they are not easy once one assumes the mantle of office.

They should think about it over there and give it a lot of thought. I implore them, as New Democrats who portray themselves as friends of working people, as friends of low-income people and as friends of all the province, to withdraw these draconian taxes.

Mr Hope: I always listen to the member for St Catharines. Sometimes he does not think I do, but I do. He pointed out one specific, that it was all right for the Liberals during their five-year reign. He mentioned that under good economic times it is okay to tax people but they do not like it. We have seen the actions of the Liberal government in good times, not looking at the books and trying to make sure things were properly spent in the appropriate places, instead of offloading it to the municipalities and then saying, "It's all right, good economic times are here."

I am sure the member will reflect on his comments throughout these debates. As he is the critic, I am sure he will take a close look at his comments when he reflects on auto workers and other workers across this province who are being affected severely. In the rough economic times we are in, we must understand the value of the programs this province has in place and make sure they are appropriately funded, and make sure the municipalities are not carrying the burden of the programs the government inflicted upon them in previous years. This is where this government has been very committed, through the taxation process.

Unfortunately there are those who will be taxed somewhat. If anyone believes in a day when there will be no taxation, I guess he is wrong. There is always a taxation somewhere, and where it hits is unfortunate. I, as a smoker, understand where taxation has to come from. I am not afraid to pay it; I do smoke. I enjoy it and I do not mind paying.

Ms Haeck: The member for St Catharines and I usually have this sort of friendly repartee, but it is usually on the dais at a softball dinner or something like that, when the master of ceremonies has made the mistake of calling on the member for St Catharines-Brock and me the member for St Catharines. I know that in this House he would not want to make that mistake.

At this point I want to correct one or two of his comments, one in particular, because it really has affected the peninsula and I think it is not the kind of impression we want to leave with people that only low-income citizens and people of moderate means within the peninsula go across the border to shop. The member for Lincoln and other members of the standing committee on finance and economic affairs were presented with a myriad of statistics and information which indicated that in fact it is mainly middle-income or upper-income individuals who are crossing the border on a regular basis to do the kind of shopping the member is alluding to. It is important for us to make sure people understand that it is not strictly an activity of need. This is an activity done very consciously by people who have the means to shop in Ontario.

Mr Bradley: I will respond in reverse order. To the member for St Catharines-Brock, the point I am attempting to make is that people of modest income, people who do not have a lot of disposable income, are those who are most justified, if anybody is justified, in seeking lower prices. They have to have their everyday needs met. Some of those are in terms of basic entertainment, sometimes in terms of cigarettes and sometimes alcohol and gasoline. They are the most justified, if anybody is ever justified, in seeking lower prices.

The member for St Catharines-Brock and the member for Lincoln, who share the peninsula with me and some other members, know we are a part of the province that is very significantly impacted. There are businesses closing in the communities we represent. There are farmers who are finding it mighty tough in the areas we represent. Because people are heading to the other side of the border, farmers cannot get them to purchase their products.

Very often they are not heading to the other side of the border to purchase food. Often it is beverage alcohol. It is often dinners they wish to have that are much cheaper over there because of the price of alcohol. It is often cigarettes, which are extremely expensive here and not nearly so expensive there, and of course gasoline, which is the main factor in taking them to the other side of the border. I know my colleagues in the Niagara Peninsula would certainly want this government to retreat—or at least withdraw, because I would not use the word “retreat”—from the taxes that are inclined to make us less competitive in Ontario and drive people to the other side of the border.

I am always interested in hearing from the member for Chatham-Kent. I know he would have supported those taxes in tough economic times to meet the obligations that were there in terms of social programs in this province.

Mr Stockwell: I would like to start off by saying that if you are going to approve any new tax or fight tax increases in general, the first and probably the foremost taxes you deal with are the sin taxes: tobacco and alcohol. Those would be the taxes most governments feel most at ease in increasing, probably because there are many special interest groups out there that will applaud any increase in any of those taxes. There are a number of people in anyone's constituency who see this as a definite advantage, plus or positive from any government.

That being said, we, in government, and particularly those in the government today, must be very careful and vigilant in ensuring there is not any disproportionate tax or overburdening of a tax situation. I think what we have reached today is a situation where tobacco is taxed to such an extent that it is now beginning to affect obviously not only the lives of the people who buy this product, but the lives of the people who produce this product. It is now a situation where the main reasons for people to go cross-border shopping—I sat on the cross-border shopping committee and the members across the House will admit this, I am sure, very readily—are gasoline, alcohol and tobacco. I do not think there is any debate about that.

When government examines places where it would like to see increased taxes, I think all governments come to the sin taxes, alcohol and tobacco, and feel they are justified and politically correct. It is an easy mark. Today we are generating from the tobacco industry something in the neighbourhood of $1 billion in taxes; $1 billion is generated by taxes on cigarettes.

It seems to me we have crossed that threshold. We are at the point now where I almost think the government, if it is truly going to live by its words—any of the three governments that were in power—should just ban the substance, abolish it if this is the debate, if the debate is going to reach a higher level, a higher plateau. Is it health care? It is the cost of maintaining in the health care system people who have smoked all their lives. The question then should be, why is the substance available for purchase and why is it available with government taxes added on?

The thought I have is that maybe the government, if it were truly going to entertain the thoughts that it professes, would be better having a debate about banning tobacco. Clearly that is not the case. No government is prepared to do that. No government is prepared to see a windfall—and I use the term “windfall”—of incredible sums of money, $1 billion a year in taxes, evaporate. That is probably why we do not reach that next plateau, which is to ban the substance.

The argument may be made for alcohol, although they did try that once and it was not very successful. But specifically with tobacco, we then have a byproduct of the decision-making. The byproduct is that we are faced with a series of people who are involved in this industry who are being told on the one hand by government that they are important, their jobs are important, their pay is important and their vote is important, but what is also important is that we ensure that they do not work. Really, that is what this tax comes down to.

There have been studies that have directly shown that if a government raises taxes, it is going to drive a certain number of people out of work. In effect, on the one end the government is taking $1 billion out of the system, but on the other end it is taking jobs away. Farmers have a terrible time surviving in the tobacco belt in Ontario.

I think we must be very vigilant as a government, as representatives here today, that we are prepared to debate the issue. Is the issue taxes on tobacco? If that is the case, let us debate that. Or is it whether tobacco should be sold? If that is the issue, then let us debate it.

The argument that comes forward on a number of occasions from the opposite side is the health care costs etc. The government could solve that problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): If I may interrupt the member, the issue is Bill 84. If the member would refer to Bill 84, that would be helpful as we proceed with the debate.

Mr Stockwell: Okay, Bill 84.

The government could straighten that out if it simply abolished smoking cigarettes. They would be banned. Then we would have the groups that endorsed this position applaud the government to no end. It would resolve the health care problems because you could not smoke, but I really do not think that is the issue. The issue on Bill 84 is the cash cow that has developed over the years, and the cash cow is $1 billion a year.

What do we do with a government that is prepared to suck a tremendous amount of tax dollars out of the system but not prepared to deal with the responsibility that is left, and that is a whole bunch of farmers who are in real trouble? We can quote the statistics but they do not even need to be quoted any more; they have been used so often. There are 1,200 growers in Ontario. The number is down from 2,500 in the early 1980s. A very great many of them are not a profitable operation.

The question is—I put this to the Minister of Agriculture and Food—of the $1 billion the government collects, and this new tax will add more on top of that, does that all go back into farming? Does that go back to the tobacco farmers? What percentage of that goes back to the tobacco farmers?

If the government is going to accept the accolades and the pats on the back, then it had better be prepared to make the decisions to help those people who are affected by those said decisions. I do not really believe this government is doing that in Bill 84. I think tobacco farmers would take great exception to this tax and they would have a list as long as my arm of reasons and rationale and non-support from government. I do not say it is specifically this government's fault. Tobacco is an easy mark and this is a tough decision. Any time politicians are faced with an easy mark or a tough decision, they take the easy mark, and here it is again.

The questions we ask ourselves are: Where are the resources to fund these farmers? Who is going to pay for it? I think the person who should pay for it is the person who is collecting the money. If the government is prepared to accept the tax, then it had better be prepared to support the farmers. We cannot have one without the other. I do not think that in Bill 84, with another cash grab, the government is doing that. I think it is irresponsible and it is a disservice to the growers in this province.

What is painfully obvious to me as well when we deal with this issue is that the backbenchers in this caucus have very little input into the decision-making at the cabinet table.

Mr Wiseman: You are wrong.

Mr Stockwell: The member suggests I could be wrong, and it would not be the first time. I could have sworn somebody sent the police in. Apparently I am wrong on that one. I could have sworn they promised government-run auto insurance in their last election bid. I could have been wrong about that one. I could have sworn they made a whole bunch of promises in the Agenda for People. I could have been wrong about that, but it is all here before me.

Maybe I am wrong, but it seems to me from the history of this government and this member, including with respect to Bill 84, what you say at election time and what you do when you are in government are two completely different things. Before you start chastising members for being wrong, maybe you should examine your history and exactly where you came from, because I do not even recognize you people any more.

The Acting Speaker: Would the member speak to the Chair, please.

Mr Stockwell: On Bill 84, what is painfully obvious and what I think is missed in the address is, when is enough enough? I guess that is what I would like to hear from the Minister of Agriculture and Food. What about next year? What do the farmers have to look forward to next year? Can he give them any guarantees, any security that they do not have to be faced with this enormous burden to carry? Can he give them any guarantee: “Okay, this is a one-time tax and for the rest of our term we are not going to increase it”? Can he give them those kinds of guarantees, and if not, how come? They deserve that, because their lives, their livelihoods, their investments are resting precariously on whether or not a single group of people, a small group of people in cabinet, decide whether y want to go for the easy mark again rather than making tough decision.

As I was saying before, I cannot understand how this cabinet which listens to its caucus members cannot understand the pleas I am sure it hears in caucus from some of its members on its own side of the House. I cannot believe the government does not hear their pleas, because I know that they are telling it. They are telling it their farmers cannot afford it. They need some help, and if it is going to take them to death, it had better redirect some of the money back to them.

I am fundamentally opposed at this time in this province to increasing taxes on absolutely anything. I think as a province we are tremendously overtaxed. We have too much government, we have too many bureaucrats, we have far too much of everything involved in government to go on and live our lives in a fair and profitable fashion. I use that term "profitable" very carefully. I will not accept a tax on tobacco as I will not accept it on alcohol and as I will not accept it on gasoline, for some of the reasons I have outlined, not the least of which, I might add, is that it is one of the major problems for cross-border shopping.

I doubt very much if this government—just to allow it to feel at ease—could bring forward any tax that I would support at this time. I doubt very much the previous government under its Premier could have brought forward any of those taxes that I would have supported at that time. I think it is counterproductive. It is a tax that will penalize farmers and obviously smokers disproportionately. It is an easy mark for a government to make to get left-handed applause, left-handed backslaps from certain special-interest groups.

I have been very interested and I have listened very attentively to that side of the House. I heard the rationale from a number of speakers on why this tax had to be increased this year. I did not hear from any members who told me exactly what the farm community was saying to them and I did not hear from any members who felt they were speaking for the tobacco farmers, which I find very interesting from a party that previously supported, spoke for and endorsed the farmers at great length. It is a government that I think no longer listens.

In conclusion, Bill 84 will go through just like all their other taxes. It will do a number of things. It will probably raise a little bit more money. It will ensure a few other decisions made by the public. It will ensure more people will cross-border shop for tobacco. It is going to ensure that when they go over to cross-border shop, they will buy gasoline. It is going to ensure that they will buy more alcohol. It is going to ensure that they will spend more disposable income across the border. It is going to ensure that this government will make the farmers that much more unhappy and insolvent, and it is going to ensure that this government fattens its coffers to a very small degree.

When you analyse this tax and stack up the negatives against the positives, it seems to me there is only one argument left and that is the health argument. If that is my friends' argument, which a number of members have made, then I suggest they make the argument, they introduce a ban, they go forward and ban this, because if that is their point, what they are doing today is not servicing anyone. They are hurting cross-border towns, they are hurting farmers, they are hurting manufacturers, they are hurting union jobs, they are hurting the companies that produce this product, all for a minor gain in their tax revenue.

I will close. I do not think there is a tremendous amount of thought in this, other than the fact that this government was very short of money, it was very short of ideas, it had a $10-billion deficit, it had a 13.5% increase in spending, it had expanded the civil service to the tune of some 14% in payroll, and it seemed like the easiest thing for this government to do was to tax tobacco, alcohol and gasoline. This government taxed the three of them. It was probably the wrong tax, not very thoughtful and clearly the easy way out. I do not particularly think it was the right choice.

Mr Johnson: It heartened me to hear the member for Etobicoke West say he does not blame this government entirely for all the state of taxation we are dealing with in this province right now, the present state of taxation we find ourselves under. That heartens me.

I have to say that I too am not a smoker. I think it would be wonderful personally—and I speak personally now—to eliminate cigarettes altogether. It would mean we would have healthier people and the costs to the health care system would be diminished. I think that is a positive thing. But the implications of doing that are very complex and quite profound, and I see the member agrees with me.

The member mentioned some things that concern me with regard to these items being less expensive in the United States. He said, "Why don't we ban tobacco?" One of the implications certainly would be that Ontario cannot do that. It is not within Ontario's jurisdiction to make these laws. Only Canada can make laws to regulate trade and commerce in the country. I suggest this is not a responsibility we have.

I might pose a question to the member. I might ask him—

The Acting Speaker: Would the member direct his comments to the Chair, please.

Mr Johnson: Yes, Mr Speaker. I would like to ask the member what he would like to cut. I hear him mention some things with regard to the government making cuts, but the people of Ontario want their services and they want them administered properly and efficiently. I think if we make cuts, then the people of Ontario will not get what they want. I think this would be most unfortunate.

Mr Sterling: I listened with interest to the member for Etobicoke West. He talked about the whole issue of banning the sale of tobacco, or the consideration of that. I think that was half in jest, quite frankly, because I think our lesson with prohibition during the 1920s showed that it was a very difficult goal to achieve.

I think what is important in terms of the growing of tobacco is that governments getting this tremendous source of wealth from tobacco taxes—over $1 billion—should offer the tobacco producers an opportunity to get out of that business and into something else.

At the present time, there are over 500 tobacco producers in Ontario who are lined up at the gate to take advantage of the Redux program. This government and the previous Liberal government have not funded a program in order to offer any money at all to these tobacco growers who want to get out of the business. There was a $45-million program that was instituted in 1989 and now has run out.

I think it is absolutely essential that when a government takes this much out, $1 billion, and is putting absolutely nothing back in—that is totally unfair to the communities. Whether or not we could ban this would probably involve criminal law, if we are talking about the actual banning of it, and therefore those offences would properly fall under the federal government.

Mr Carr: I want to rise and compliment the member on his part of the debate. It is interesting when we look at his background. He is somebody who has been fighting taxes at the municipal level for many years and is known as somebody who has a respect for the taxpayers' dollars. I have seen very clearly that what he says when he comes to this particular Legislature is exactly what he talked about doing.

I say to my friends opposite who talk about the taxes and say they had to do it, the fact of the matter is that where they have to start is to control spending. It is not an easy process to do that. It is very easy to play Santa Claus, as they did in the last election campaign, and give to everybody what they want when they want it and say to this group, "You can have what you want," and to that group, "You can have what you want."

Unlike some of the backbenchers who honestly thought the money would fall out of the sky for all these programs—and I honestly say that a lot of them thought there would be enough money; most of them did not have the experience—my criticism to the Premier was that when he made those promises he knew the money was not going to fall out of the sky for them. So now we have the tax increases, I say to them that what they need to do is look at spending.

On that point, I will just say very briefly in the time I have left that tomorrow morning we are going to be having a particular piece of legislation, which is basically known as a sunset provision, introduced by myself. If the members opposite are truly interested in the tax situation, tomorrow I hope I will have their support in the sunset laws controlling spending, because that is where it starts. They need to control spending before they can reduce taxes, and this government has shown very clearly with the 13.5% increase that it does not know how to control spending. Tomorrow morning we will be looking for their support, and I want to thank my colleague the member for Etobicoke West for a very fine statement earlier.

Mr Stockwell: I want to thank the member for Carleton and the member for Oakville South for their kind comments.

Mr Johnson: Mine were kind too.

Mr Stockwell: They weren't that kind.

I have sat here and listened and I have heard really nothing in response with respect to how hopefully the tobacco farmers can look forward to the future. I will read a paragraph or so from this document called An Agenda for People. It speaks about farmers in here, not specifically tobacco farmers, but farmers in general.

"New Democrats propose making long-term debt financing available"—and here we go—"to farmers at the government's long-term borrowing cost. Up to $100 million would be made available."

That to me—

Mr Hope: Excellent.

Mr Stockwell: That could be very well, I do not know. We should debate that one day in the House when the piece of legislation comes through.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Chatham-Kent may recognize the significance of this yellow card. I would certainly appreciate your co-operation by listening to the comments.

Mr Stockwell: Those are the kinds of things that I think farmers today are looking for. When the government takes $1 billion out of the system from tobacco farmers, farmers are looking for some kind of give, something on the government's part. Not once has any member from the government caucus stood up and told us or the farmers what they are going to do for them. Not once during this debate have I heard anything that the minister said he would do to help the farmers. The government told them in the election that it would lend them $100 million at preferred interest rate—a pipedream. They told the tobacco farmers they were going to increase taxes, that they are going to help them with rebates and farm programs—another pipedream.

Rather than standing up and mouthing words, maybe the government could do something if it is going to suck this much money out of the system.

Mr Mills: It is a pleasure to stand in my place here this afternoon and take part in this debate. I am at somewhat of a disadvantage in that I spent Monday and Tuesday in the standing committee on administration of justice and had to follow what everybody said through Hansard; that makes it a little bit difficult to speak succinctly.

On Sunday afternoon, in my own riding, I was at the opening of a new separate elementary school, very wonderfully named the School of Mother Theresa. We were there and it was one of those wonderful things that happens in your community. The children were lined up and they were in their best clothes and they were singing songs like "We Are The People." There was the junior band in the background playing some wonderful uplifting music. After the ribbon was cut and all the speeches were made, we adjourned to the lounge and had tea, biscuits and little pieces of cake baked by the parents of these children.

In that period of time, I was able to mingle with these families and inevitably the talk centred on what a wonderful facility had been built in my riding. Indeed it was. It is a credit to everybody who participated in it.

Inevitably too, we touched on what schools like this cost, and I said, "It's wonderful to have all these facilities but they cost money, and the only way the government can get money is through taxes, through you, you and you, to ate this." They did not really want to listen to that. It seems that people want things, but there is a price to be paid.

I bring that up in this debate because the tax that is being raised on this tobacco is needed in Ontario at this time for many reasons. We came into government expecting the books to be balanced and, alas, they were not. There was even supposed to be a surplus, but we found ourselves in a huge deficit position.

I have great difficulty standing here this afternoon and listening to the self-righteousness of the third party. There are not many of them left now, but at one time of day there were many of them. Notwithstanding the fact that the faces have changed, the philosophy is still there. I would like to touch on perhaps the biggest tax hoax that was ever perpetrated on the people of Ontario; and it was done by the third party through—most of us do not remember—the ad valorem tax that was placed on tobacco.

Probably a lot of people who are listening do not know what I am talking about, but we had taxes set at budget level by the third party in those days and they were not satisfied with that tax. They are self-righteous and talk about how—the member has gone now who said, "We are doing tax reductions, tax fighting, we went all over the province on a bus." They perpetrated the most insidious form of collecting taxes. They had their forces of tax inspectors, which numbered about 30, fan out all over the province—

Mr Ruprecht: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I have listened to the comments very carefully and I had assumed that when the Premier and many of the ministers were getting up almost daily in question period and saying: "There shall be absolutely no finger pointing. We shall be having an easier time in this Legislature"—

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. That is not a point of order. Will the member for Parkdale please take his seat?

Mr Ruprecht:—"and we shall be much more easy on each other and this member still keeps"—

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Please take your seat.

Mr Ruprecht:—"finger pointing every minute of the day."

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would remind you—

Interjection.

Mr Ruprecht: What's positive about you? You just drag us guys down. What is your policy?

The Deputy Speaker: Order. I would remind the member for Parkdale to be a little more respectful vis-à-vis the Chair. The member for Durham East.

Mr Mills: Why I am giving this slight history lesson—as the member for Renfrew North gave a history lesson talking about Bill 118, the Power Corporation Amendment Act—I just feel that I have some obligation to talk about the history of tobacco tax in Ontario.

As I was saying before I was rudely interrupted, the tobacco tax inspectors fanned out over Ontario gathering the prices from all these stores so they could be put into some sort of computer and then come up with an increase in taxes every three months.

I can tell the members, some of whom are too young and do not remember, that discount stores were out of bounds because if you went to a discount store you might get a slightly lower price and that would not reflect a tax increase, and for goodness' sake they could not come back with a tax increase.

We just look at this dismal litany of tax increases, when the third party stands there so self-righteous today. They increased tobacco tax in May, July and October, 1981; January, April, May, July and October, 1982, and January, April, May, July and October, 1983. They stand there with audacity and talk about this government raising taxes to take up the slack from the deficit position that it inherited from the official opposition.

While I am on the subject of tobacco tax inspectors, I would just like to say a word about that fine band of people. There have been 30 of them in Ontario, and they do an absolutely first-class job trying to contain tax evasion, tax fraud, and keeping a lid on the tax collection in this province. I must say that there is not a finer bunch of people working in the government of Ontario than those people, and they are led by some very fine superiors, too.

I looked in Hansard and saw that the member for Ottawa East asked some questions: Is the tobacco marking system working? It is my understanding that it is working very well and that it has really stopped a lot of the fraud and circumvention of the tax act that was taking place.

This went on, and then when the opposition came in, it formed that government in its brief spell at the top. They recognized that this ad valorem tax was a terrible thing, and to their credit they abolished it right off the top. But that is not the end of the story. They saw fit to increase taxes on tobacco in January, April and July 1984; in January 1985; in January 1986; in January 1987; in April 1988; in January 1989, and in January and April 1990, so their record as tax fighters does not stand up to much scrutiny.

I want to talk briefly to the amendment proposed about reasonable and probable grounds to enable detentions of vehicles for searches. I can speak with some experience of that. It has been a flaw in the legislation for months, and it really prohibited these fine inspectors from carrying out their job efficiently because they were hampered by that flaw in the legislation. A change was set about through the Johnson v Ministry of Revenue case, which said the section contained no requirement of reasonable and probable grounds or even of probable suspicion. So this amendment sets that right and will enable the inspection staff to better carry out their duties.

In closing, I want to speak about farmers. A lot of farmers in my riding of Durham East were tobacco farmers, but in their enlightened view of what was going to happen in Ontario they switched their operations to tomatoes, cucumbers, carrots, potatoes, bedding plants and all manner of things.

I do not think they can really blame the government about the decline in smoking. It is a fact of life that smokers are declining, albeit the tax may be one form of a gentle way of making people give up smoking, the facts are out there. The health data are out there and people are giving up smoking by the hundreds on their own intuition that it is not healthy.

When I was a young man we did not know that smoking was not healthy and we smoked, but now in the schools and everywhere we go, young people are getting the message that smoking is unhealthy, and I do not see, as the member for Etobicoke West argued, that we are out to set smoking aside by reason of taxes because it is unhealthy. We do not have to do that. People are getting common sense, so I applaud the farmers in my riding who are using alternative methods for their land and are doing very well at it.

In closing, I would like to be part of a government that does not see any need to increase taxes, members should believe me. I have great empathy with the folks out there, the working people and everybody who has to pay these taxes, but the fact of life is that society demands a level of services that have to be met, and unfortunately in these times the only way we can meet the demands upon society is through the tax revenues: tobacco, cigarettes, gasoline or diesel.

Mr Ruprecht: I have listened to the comments of the member for Durham East with great interest, and while we have a certain respect for him as one of the senior men in the NDP government, I would only say that he should also consider listening to his own boss, the Premier, and to some of the ministers when they say that in order for this Legislature to be more effective—in this case, of course, we are talking about special taxation—and to be a kinder and gentler place, let there be no finger-pointing.

While the member for Durham East is quite open in his criticism of opposition, I would like to caution him and all members of his government that simply to criticize what the tax policies were previously, and simply to say, "They were adding on tax after tax and got us into trouble economically," is taking away from their own policies, taking away from their own sense of justice and their own sense of making a significant contribution to this Legislature in terms of the formation of tax policies.

I would like to ask the member for Durham East a question in terms of his own point: Are these taxes this government is now proposing on tobacco really sin taxes, or as he says are those taxes inclined to nudge and encourage and influence people to stop smoking? Which of the two is it going to be?

Mr Sterling: I heard with some amusement about the distaste the member for Durham East has for the ad valorem tax. I only remind him that the bill we just debated prior to this bill, Bill 83, which was a surcharge on the income of high-wage earners and high-income people in this province, is in fact an ad valorem tax in itself. The whole argument as to ad valorem taxes was a bit of a bogus argument in terms of comparing one with the other. The retail sales tax is in effect an ad valorem tax. All the taxes that depend upon an escalating value and inflation, for instance, in the prices of goods each year, as we have seen from year to year over the last 10 years, leads to a higher amount of income the government gets and is in effect an ad valorem tax. It is a percentage of what is there and if what is there increases, so does the tax take. It is a bit of a bogus argument.

What I find extremely humorous about the member for Durham East is that I know his job before he became a member of this Legislature. Surprise, surprise, it was as a tax collector. Is it not amazing? When a person is a tax collector, he finds a great deal of trouble with the government's suggestions as to a change in tax policy like the ad valorem tax, but when he transfers from being the tax collector to sitting in this noble chamber he can defend the tax very easily. I understand his defence as a former tax collector but now a legislator, of the government's increase in taxes because the member no longer has to collect them.

Mr Hope: It is always a pleasure to listen to the member for Durham East when he speaks, because he speaks of a lot of history. To us young lads who are sitting in this House today and the people who are viewing the proceedings, it is very important for us to understand the system that has been in place—I think he eloquently put it—and the increases that were laid upon it.

That brings me to the comment about the effect of this issue on the tobacco farmers. A lot of the tobacco in my area is exported; very little is used for import. The member for Durham East talked about the taxation policies of previous governments, and then we heard from the opposition. As the member so clearly put it, it is because past practice made a lot of damaging things. Take a look: Since 1981, the government before the previous one, the Conservative government, implemented a lot of changes and put in 90% and 100% increases in taxation. It was not talking about the care of the farmers then.

It is very important that we as a new government look at strategies. I know the minister and the parliamentary assistant are looking at strategies to try to help the local farmers, which the member for Durham East talked about. A lot of the farmers are changing their product, looking at other products to produce on their land. We are making sure there are initiatives there to assist them in this. I know the minister and parliamentary assistant are looking at long-range programs and following the Agenda for People, which we put out during the campaign.

I must reiterate that it is not something new currently devastating the tobacco farmers or devastating the people of Ontario. One good thing was that we never went after their paycheques and made sure we were not hitting them there.

Mr Runciman: The reality is that fewer and fewer people are drawing paycheques in this province as a result of initiatives of the former Liberal government and this current government.

The member for Durham East talked about the tax on cigarettes, going back to Conservative years and Liberal years. I can only go back to mid-1985, when the Conservative government left office after 42 years of good government in this province, and I do not think we had the situation we currently face with respect to cross-border opping, where tobacco purchases are a major element of incentive for people to cross the border to make purchases on that side. Of course, another major element, which we have heard in this debate as well, is the question of smuggling.

If the member for Durham East really believed in the argument he was making, the government would initiate a total ban on cigarette sales, with respect to the health care costs associated with smoking cigarettes.

The member for Chatham-Kent mentioned a 100% increase, I believe, for the Conservative government. I would like to have him stand in his place and spell out when that may have occurred. Certainly those of us on this side cannot recall any such increases ever taking place.

Obviously tobacco farmers are suffering in a significant way, but I think we also have to take a look at the tobacco companies in this country and this province who make a contribution. We can look at the DuMaurier Jazz Festival, the Rothman's International and the Player's International tennis match. They get involved within the communities where they operate and make a contribution which all of us benefit from. That is another side of the equation that is rarely talked about and that has to be given some consideration.

I think we have gone beyond striking a fine balance for what is an appropriate taxation level in respect to cigarettes. We have taken it beyond that point, to where it now is really encouraging people to either break the law or cross the border and hurt the economy of Ontario.

Mr Mills: I really appreciate all the comments on the few things I had to say. I would like to speak specifically to the member for Parkdale. I must say that my own personal view—and it is not necessarily the view of the Premier—is that, yes, when the government increases taxes on cigarettes, at the price they are today, $30 or $40 a carton—nudge, nudge—maybe it is best to give up. The feeling that we will effect is in health care. That is my own personal view.

I think back to that hot, sweaty day, I think it was in June, when we had the big tax revolt out here. All these people from Bay Street were standing there with their little phones and their Rolex watches glinting in the sun, and I went out there. There was a fellow standing there with perspiration running down his face, and I said: "What's the matter? What's the big deal here?" I did not know what was going on.

He said, "It's the taxes." I said, "Well, what's wrong with the taxes?" He said, "We can't take it any more; we've had enough." Where were those people in 1981-85 and 1985-87?

[Applause]

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I remind the members of the public in the gallery that they are not to participate. The member for Durham East.

Mr Mills: Thank you kindly, Mr Speaker. I thought you were cutting me off and I hurried up, but I would just like to say again—

Mr Sterling: There wasn't any reason to be there in '81.

Mr Mills: There was no reason because the people were not organized. Had they known what was happening to them in those years, they would have blocked the Queen Elizabeth Way and every road into these Parliament buildings to protest the way they were operating here.

M. Poirier : Merci, Monsieur le Président. J'aurais bien aimé que Madame la Ministre soit présente parmi nous cet après-midi, parce que j'aurais voulu pouvoir m'adresser directement à elle. Mais, puisqu'elle n'y est pas, je suis certain que ce soir, avant de se coucher, elle aura l'occasion de lire le Journal des débats pour prendre connaissance de ce qui a été dit et de comprendre notre frustration avec une situation toute à fait particulière.

Avec ce genre de projet de loi pour augmenter les taxes sur le tabac, il est évident qu'on pourrait faire très facilement une discussion philosophique, à savoir la responsabilité de l'État à charger, oui ou non, des taxes sur les produits tels le tabac, mais aussi la philosophie du consommateur, et surtout, en ce qui a trait aux fumeurs et aux fumeuses, à savoir leur réaction face à l'utilisation du tabac, le tabagisme, mais aussi à comprendre et accepter, pas seulement le coût de la cigarette, mais les coûts que le gouvernement doit déboursier pour offrir des soins de santé à ceux et à celles qui abusent du tabac.

Je me rappellerai toujours d'avoir eu une discussion, il y a quelques années, avec la ministre de la Santé lors de notre gouvernement. Je lui avait posé une question: «C'est évident que nous récoltons un certain montant de taxes sur le tabac, et selon les chiffres que j'ai vus récemment, on s'apprêterait à récolter cette année plus d'un milliard de dollars en taxes sur le tabac.» Elle m'avait dit, «Pour chaque dollar que nous récoltons en taxes sur le tabac, le ministère de la Santé doit déboursier quelque 3 $ en soins de santé pour les maladies liées au tabagisme.»

Évidemment, les fumeurs et fumeuses, lorsqu'ils voient augmenter la taxe sur leur produit favori, rouspètent, et c'est bien normal. Je pense qu'il n'y a aucun député, peu importe le parti, qui va recevoir une lettre de félicitations d'avoir augmenté les taxes sur le tabac, l'alcool, etc. C'est normal. Après sept ans, je ne me rappelle, moi-même, d'avoir reçu aucune lettre de remerciement.

M. Grandmaître : Ou de félicitations.

M. Poirier : Ou de félicitations, bien sûr. Mais, par contre, il faut que les gens comprennent que ça vient de la même recette, de la même poche de revenus : les dépenses de soins de santé versus les recettes pour les taxes sur le tabac.

Je rappelle à mes amis fumeurs et fumeuses, et j'en suis un moi-même, que, puisque nous sommes en minorité, lorsque—pas si—nous aurons besoin des soins de santé reliés à notre tabagisme, ce sont les contribuables non-fumeurs qui vont, d'une certaine façon, subventionner nos soins de santé. Puisque eux et elles ne fument pas, et leurs taxes vont contribuer à payer nos soins de santé.

Mais il faut que le gouvernement comprenne, également et surtout, lorsqu'il taxe à ce niveau-là, que nous sommes voisins d'un pays, les États-Unis, qui n'a pas le même niveau de taxes sur la vente de tabac dans les magasins. Il est évident que cette différenciation-là entre deux pays voisins, ça cause un problème particulier. Je me rappelle, il n'y a pas si longtemps, l'année passée, en voyage au New Hampshire, j'ai acheté deux paquets de cigarettes et j'ai demandé à la dame combien c'était. Elle m'a dit, «C'est 3,10 $.» Donc, j'ai mis 6,20 $ sur le comptoir. «Non, non, monsieur, c'est 3,10 $ pour les deux paquets.»

Évidemment, pour un fumeur c'est la superbe occasion ; on croit que c'est l'aubaine instantanée. Mais, malheureusement, je suis certain que les fumeurs et les fumeuses de cet état, ou de tout autre état américain qui n'a pas une tax élevée sur le tabac, lorsqu'ils auront des problèmes de soins de santé, ils feront mieux de faire une neuvaïne pour s'assurer qu'une compagnie privée accepte bien de couvrir leurs assurances-santé. S'ils n'ont pas d'assurances-santé, ils pourraient facilement faire face à une note de santé, via une facture de l'hôpital, qui pourrait atteindre 100 000 $, 150 000 $ ou 200 000 $. Je suis certain que si c'est le cas avec ce fumeur du New Hampshire ou d'ailleurs, qu'il aurait peut-être préféré acheter son paquet au Canada, et avec le niveau de taxes du Canada.

Bien sûr, les fumeurs n'admettront jamais qu'ils auront besoin d'une opération à coeur ouvert qui pourrait coûter à l'État 250 000 $ et peut-être même un million de dollars de soins pour la durée de leur vie. Ça, ils l'apprennent après l'opération, jamais avant.

Mais que fait-on, nous au Canada, pour avoir cette différenciation de prix du niveau de taxes ? Surtout pour nous dans l'Est de l'Ontario, étant très près de la frontière américaine, je peux assurer les députés que plusieurs dépanneurs m'ont dit que lorsque la taxe a été augmentée à ce niveau-là, leurs ventes de produits de tabac, de cigarettes, tout ça s'est envolée en fumée. Excusez l'expression, le jeu de mots.

Pourquoi ? Parce que tout le monde a arrêté de fumer ? Non. C'est parce que, tout d'un coup, il y a des gens moins respectueux de la loi, sans grands principes, qui ont trouvé moyen de mettre la main sur des cigarettes canadiennes, mais contournées via un petit voyage touristique aux États-Unis, et qui nous sont revenues en grandes cargaisons dans l'est de l'Ontario et, j'en suis certain également, partout à l'échelle de l'Ontario pour ne pas dire du Canada.

Je me demande quelle sorte de voyage touristique ces chargements de camions de cigarettes ont bien pu faire. Mais, de toute façon, peu importe d'où elles viennent ou comment elles se rendent là, elles se rendent chez nous dans ma circonscription. Les dépanneurs crient aux méventes. Mais les gens qui fumaient, ils fument toujours, et les gens se promènent se vantant de l'aubaine qu'ils ont bien pu faire auprès de certains vendeurs de cigarettes illégales chez nous dans Prescott et Russell.

J'ai entendu dire mon bon ami le député de Durham-Est, qui malheureusement nous a quitté pour le moment, qu'il est certain que les inspecteurs font un bon travail, qu'ils vérifient bien que les dépanneurs, les propriétaires de magasins, respectent bien la loi et ne vendent que des cigarettes dûment étampées, disant que les droits d'accise ont été payés en Ontario.

Mais je pense qu'il y a quelque chose qui se passe qui est un peu bizarre. On fait l'inspection des vendeurs ayant une licence de vente. On rentre dans les magasins, on vérifie le stock, etc, mais on me dit que les gens qui vendent ces cigarettes illégales ne sont pas, malheureusement, des vendeurs licenciés, ne sont pas des dépanneurs, ne sont pas des propriétaires de petits magasins de coin. Se sont des gens, M. et M^{me} tout le monde. On me dit qu'il y en a même qui sont au chômage, qui ne travaillent pas présentement mais qui font des bonnes recettes en vendant des cigarettes illégales.

À la demande des propriétaires de ces magasins-là, je me suis renseigné auprès du Ministère. On me dit qu'on fait des enquêtes, qu'on viendra voir, qu'on surveillera la situation. Au moment où je vous parle, les ventes de cigarettes illégales continuent de très bon train. Les dépanneurs sont toujours frustrés. Ils n'ont pas retrouvé leur niveau de vente d'avant l'augmentation des taxes. Il y a quelque chose de bizarre qui se passe.

Ce qui m'inquiète — je ne veux pas blâmer les fonctionnaires du Ministère ; je suis certain qu'ils sont débordés — mais il semblerait que le gouvernement ne fait pas bien son travail pour s'assurer de couper à la source ces ventes de cigarettes illégales. Ça se passe chez nous et je sais que ça se passe ailleurs, d'où le dilemme d'un gouvernement.

Jusqu'à quel niveau de taxe le gouvernement est-il permis de demander des taxes si en retour la contrepartie de ça va dire qu'un trop grand nombre de consommateurs et de consommatrices, de fumeurs et de fumeuses, vont se procurer librement sur le marché illégal des cigarettes canadiennes qui n'ont pas été assujetties aux droits d'accise au Canada et en Ontario.

C'est un grave problème. D'après des études que j'ai faites là-dessus, il est évident qu'il y a un manque à gagner épouvantable au gouvernement de l'Ontario avec ces ventes de cigarettes illégales-là.

M. Grandmaitre : Des pertes de taxes.

M. Poirier : Des pertes de taxes tout à fait épouvantables. Des taxes où, avec le niveau de déficit, sûrement, le gouvernement apprécierait avoir la main dessus pour combler son déficit, notre déficit global à l'Ontario et s'assurer d'offrir encore plus de soins de santé à ceux et à celles qui auront des problèmes de tabagisme tôt ou tard. C'est la seule certitude qu'on a en fumant : ce n'est pas «si», c'est «quand» on aura des problèmes de santé.

Donc, moi je m'inquiète. Je crois que ce projet de loi a été au-delà du raisonnable. Bien sûr je le dis au fumeurs et aux fumeuses qui me disent : «Je peux menacer de cesser de fumer. Vous seriez mal pris. Vous ne pourriez pu récolter, à ce moment-là, la taxe sur le tabac.»

Avec l'explication que j'ai donnée tantôt, je leur dis : «Bravo ! J'espère que vous allez tous cesser de fumer.» Ça voudrait dire, pour chaque milliard de dollars de taxes qu'on perdra de la taxe sur le tabac, ça va nous coûter 3 milliards de dollars de moins en soins de santé, comme je le disais tantôt, qui sont subventionnés par les non-fumeurs de cette province.

Donc, si les gouvernements persistent à aller à des niveaux astronomiques de taxation comme ça, sans mettre en place un système beaucoup plus à l'épreuve de l'eau, des inspections pour s'assurer qu'il n'y a pas si librement de ventes de cigarettes illégales, on va passer à côté des millions et des dizaines de millions, sinon pas des centaines de millions de dollars en taxes perdues à tout jamais.

Le gouvernement aura établi en Ontario une tradition de s'approvisionner illégalement, librement de produits de la cigarette venant de marchés noirs. Une fois que ces systèmes-là seront mis en place — il semblerait que ces systèmes-là sont très bien en place en Ontario présentement — la tradition aura été établie et ce sera mille fois plus difficile par la suite d'essayer de pouvoir maîtriser la vente illégale de cigarettes qui n'auront pas été assujetties aux droits d'accise de l'Ontario.

Je voudrais dire à la Ministre quand elle lira bien mon discours dans ses moments perdus avant de se coucher le soir, qu'elle m'explique ce qu'elle va faire pour s'assurer que les enquêtes que son Ministère va faire seront des enquêtes qui sont beaucoup plus à l'épreuve du contournement de ceux et celles qui font la vente illégale de cigarettes comme ça se produit chez nous. Les gens qui en raffrent, les vendeurs qui sont honnêtes, les dépanneurs qui ont leur licence et qui ont toujours respecté la loi, ces dépanneurs qui sont à la merci de la qualité de la loi du gouvernement, attendent avec impatience sa réponse à savoir comment il va boucher tous les trous et arrêter ces ventes libres de cigarettes illégales.

Donc, voici le message que j'aurais préféré dire directement à Madame la Ministre, et j'espère que mes collègues, mes bons amis du gouvernement, pourront bien transmettre ces inquiétudes-là, et je suis certain que chez eux également, se produit cette vente illégale.

Ms Haeck: I am very glad that the member for Prescott and Russell has really raised these, I think, very valid and important issues because he makes some very good suggestions as well and puts forward some very good questions.

I would respond initially by saying that the issue of border inspection has existed for many years. This is not something that occurred as of September 6, 1990. Having lived on the border for virtually all of my life, I know that the issues of alcohol and tobacco in particular you could never have enough inspectors to take care of what comes across the border. Trying to hire more inspectors to deal with that problem obviously would open that particular situation for more comment from his own party as well as from the third party.

I also think it is extremely important to address the issue that virtually every country in the world has to recognize: the situation faced by the consumption of tobacco. On the one hand it is quite clear that it is a health problem. Countries like France, in particular, where they own a large share of the Gauloises cigarette company, realize that it is nice to have those tax dollars, but it is also a rather large liability to take care of large numbers of individuals who then have serious health problems and are severely affected.

This government is facing that very same issue and has to address it. It is something that this tax around the health care issue does take care of, because you have to pay for these lifestyle issues. In the United States they have taken on the issue of the private insurers forcing workers off the job for lifestyle reasons. It is not a situation that I, personally, want to see. I think we really have chosen the best method to deal with a very tricky problem.

Mr Bradley: If the government really wanted to stop the problem from a health point of view, of course it would ban the sale of cigarettes in Ontario. Instead they see it as a cash cow, and that is the real reason.

If they were to take the money from this and allow the operating costs of CAT scanners in the Niagara Peninsula, one could possibly say that would be a good idea. But one has to suspect that there will be a diminishing return from this tax, because as people rush over to the other side of the border to purchase their cigarettes and other tobacco products, of course there will be fewer tax dollars coming into Ontario. In the very short term they may get an increase as a government in the amount of revenue that is derived from this particular measure; however, they are going to find it is declining and they will have even less money and they will be even more resistant to putting a second CAT scanner in the Niagara region.

You, Mr Speaker, live in the Ottawa region. You know how important it is, but you do not have a lineup of over five months for people to use a CAT scanning machine as a good diagnostic tool. If this were being applied directly to this particular measure, if this were a tax the revenue of which would go to CAT scanners across Ontario or other diagnostic machines, there might be some people who would say it is a reasonable tax. But we are obviously not going to have that happen from this particular tax. Instead we have a very complicated system, after people have already made a determination that there is a need for such a CAT scanner—the dogs and cats are getting scanned in York region, but in St Catharines and in the Niagara Peninsula, other people have to wait for up to five months—on that basis, since it is not going to that particular reason, I think that it is yet another reason for not supporting this particular tax.

M. Sola : Je vais essayer de dire quelque en français. Je veux applaudir mon collègue le député de Prescott et Russell, d'avoir démontré la «fallacy» que la taxe sur le tabac peut accomplir deux choses : diminuer l'habitude de fumer et augmenter les revenus du gouvernement.

Personne ne peut prouver que la foule fume moins après cette taxe, mais tout le monde peut montrer qu'il y a beaucoup plus de magasinage aux États-Unis. Ça veut dire que le public n'a pas changé ses habitudes ; il a simplement changé la source de ses achats.

En même temps, ce projet de loi a pratiquement forcé les honnêtes vendeurs à essayer de vendre des cigarettes illégales et les encourage à devenir des criminels.

M. White : Je peux donner un petit discours sur un petit sujet. Le député a parlé des chômeurs, qui sont des fumeurs et des fumeuses. Mais ces chômeurs ont des choix : ils peuvent fumer ou ils peuvent ne pas fumer. Quand ils sont mis à pied, ils n'ont pas le choix. J'espère que nous avons leur appui et que notre budget leur donne de l'espoir et du travail.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Prescott-Russell, you have two minutes to reply.

M. Poirier : Donc, il n'y a plus de temps pour les autres, n'est-ce pas ? Bon. Je remercie ma collègue justement pour les suggestions, mais je lui rappelle qu'il y a une nette distinction entre la théorie de l'application de la loi, les grands principes et les faits.

Dans les faits, lorsqu'on taxe à ce niveau-là, je pense que les députés vont voir une corrélation tout à fait parfaite à un niveau astronomique de taxes avec un niveau astronomique de contrebande, ce qui va demander un niveau astronomique d'inspecteurs.

À ce moment-là ça va devenir un cercle vicieux : plus de taxes, plus de contrebande, plus d'inspecteurs répartis partout en province avec des nouvelles méthodes, pas seulement pour inspecter les dépanneurs légaux mais les autres sources illégales :

M. Grandmaître : Les frontières.

M. Poirier : — les frontières, les gens qui ont des commerces illégaux, qui font le commerce illégal de la cigarette juste à côté, à quelques coins de rues des dépanneurs légaux, dans les réserves, un peu partout, au nez et sous les yeux des inspecteurs qui font ce commerce-là, qui font une très bonne affaire ; et pour les travailleurs, qu'ils soient au chômage ou non, le choix demeure de faire un travail légal ou non. Si les gens vont faire de la contrebande, que ce soit pour la vente de cigarettes ou non, c'est un geste illégal. Je suis certain que les membres du gouvernement et moi en tant que député de l'opposition, jamais aucun d'entre nous va supporter quelqu'un qui fait un commerce illégal, qu'on parle de la vente de cigarettes ou d'autres choses.

Donc, ce qui m'inquiète : que le gouvernement me dise comment il va mettre en poste un nombre astronomique d'inspecteurs, parce que sa taxe est astronomique et la contrebande est astronomique, pour ceux qui font le commerce légal de la cigarette légale pour qu'ils puissent continuer à survivre.

The Deputy Speaker: To the members of Mississauga East and Durham Centre, I want to let your professors know that you are doing extremely well in the Molière language.

Mr Conway: Mr Speaker, I would like to join this debate for a few moments this afternoon and I certainly want to concur in your last observation. I think the members referred to set a very good example which the rest of us ought to try to emulate.

Tobacco taxes are on the agenda today, and I simply want to say that this is certainly not the first time tobacco taxes have been raised in this Legislature and it will not be the last. I participated in a cabinet where I believe tobacco taxes were raised at least once. I probably stand corrected, because they were probably raised on more occasions than that. They were certainly raised by the Conservative government as well.

At a personal level, this tax is immaterial. I do not smoke, and they can raise these taxes to the stratosphere as far as I am concerned. I like speaking to tax bills where I have no personal interest as a consumer. I say that quite sincerely. I am in a rage about this Hydro bill because of course that is a tax that one of my places of residence is going to pay and I am not very happy. I am going to take it right in the ear in a way I have very little choice about. But in this case, I do not pay tobacco taxes and I am fortunate enough not to have succumbed to this addiction, although it does not mean to suggest I am vice-free.

In good old Upper Canada we have had this interest in and support for vice taxes over the decades. We have taxed liquor, because of course it was bad. It was worse than bad. We still tax liquor and this budget, I think also as part of responsible revenue management, continues the age-old tradition of increasing levies, namely taxes, on alcoholic products by five cents a litre effective May 27, 1991. This tax of course will increase the levy on cigarettes and other tobacco products.

I want to raise a couple of points today, again simply as a local member, because I have been struck by the number of ordinary people who cite this as one of the ongoing irritations. People have talked to me about this over the last number of years, to be fair, but certainly in the last two or three years the rate of taxation on tobacco has really started to attract people's attention.

Let me say personally that I support absolutely the government's position with respect to trying to wean people away from this very bad habit for health reasons. I have watched many of my friends trying to cast off the demon weed, and it is not easy. I have seen some good friends succumb to lung cancer, which, it has been pointed out, is thought to be directly linked with cigarette smoking.

Having said that, I feel an obligation to convey to the assembly this afternoon a view expressed to me on quite a number of occasions over the last two to three years by people who say, "I know what you're trying to do and I give you kind of support that, but you're going to a point that may be just a little bit too far."

My own father is in that category. He would want me to say, in the presence of my illustrious colleague the member for Carleton, that he has not appreciated some of the more extreme views, in his mind, that have been advanced over the last few years, most notably by the member for Carleton. My father is now 74. He would not admit to this, but I think he has probably smoked for about 60 years and considers it one of life's little pleasures. He understands the health argument and I do not think he would fight it too vigorously in any kind of public place. But that for whatever reason, has not yet had sufficient compulsion to have him stop smoking. He, like a lot of people I represent, has started to complain rather regularly now about the rate of tax on tobacco particularly, although I have had some of my other friends point out that the tax on alcohol and related products is attracting people's attention to quite a considerable extent.

I just simply make the point that a lot of people I represent—I do not think I have ever met anybody who argues that we should not really tax these products—are Increasingly concerned about the rate of taxation. In fact, some people have said what my friend the member for St Catharines has observed, "If you feel so strongly about this, why not go the full distance?" which I would support or recommend, but they would argue: "Why don't you just outlaw it? Get it off the shelves and make it illegal." I suspect our experience with Prohibition 60 years ago will make us all the wiser and cause us not to do that.

That is the first point, that there is a growing sense among smokers in my constituency that we are getting to a point of taxation that may almost be unreasonable if we are going to outlaw these particular products. Personally speaking, this tax does not affect me. I am glad to be talking about a tax that does not impact on me directly, though the revenues it will raise, as the member for Durham observed, will certainly be applied to the good works or any other government will seek to accomplish. I was in the presence of someone the other day who said to me, "Your reliance on the so-called vice taxes is quickly going to force you to start taxing virtue, because there is not much left to tax in vice." God forbid, should the Treasurer of this or any other government start to tax virtue, then all members of this Legislature will obviously be expected to carry a much greater burden of these revenue-raising matters.

As a member from eastern Ontario, I have been hearing some of the things to which the member for Prescott and Russell addressed himself a moment ago. I am surprised at the number of people I now meet in corner stores and other retail outlets who tell me people are not buying cigarettes where they bought them before. They do not perceive that there is a marked decline in cigarette availability or consumption, anecdotally, in their experience. They say to me, "Something's up," and I think something is up.

I think it is well known to the Ministry of Revenue officials, who I am sure could not and would not want to confirm this too publicly, that there is now a very significant incursion of American cigarettes coming across in many ways. I will have to confess to this: Because my father likes to smoke, I will on my return from the United States, which I do from time to time, often stop and pick up a couple of cartons of Marlboros for him. I am not alone. I see the cigarette displays around those border points and it is clear they are very popular.

My friend the member for Prescott and Russell made a point: There may be a whole raft of cigarettes entering the market in something of an underground fashion. We have a very real problem with the tobacco tax in this connection. It has reached such a level that we are now apparently creating an incentive for consumers and some retailers, I gather, to actively engage in some kind of underground market. It will be interesting to see, for example, whether or not the Treasurer will achieve the levels of revenue expected from this tax. In the fiscal year 1989-90 the tobacco tax yielded some $770 million. In the fiscal year in which we now find ourselves, 1990-91, it is expected that those tobacco tax revenues will rise by $105 million to $875 million. As a result of this budgetary change, which will affect this year in part and next year entirely, it is projected that those revenues will rise to slightly more than $1 billion—$1.04 billion.

It will be interesting to see how much of that target we reach, because as I say, there is growing evidence to suggest that our tax regime in Ontario is creating a very active underground market as well as more and more pressure for people to cross the border quite legitimately and use the exemptions that are provided under the federal regulations to bring certain of these products, which are very highly taxed in Canada, back into the country duty-free. We are going to have to look at that. It is no secret. It has been commented by a goodly number of people in this debate that when one looks at what is fuelling most of the cross-border shopping, three things are invariably cited: tobacco, alcohol and gasoline. Again, all my anecdotal evidence suggests that is true.

One of the things I might add that quite disturbs me is that in those not ever to be forgotten budget hearings I participated in this summer, in Kingston and Cornwall, on the southeastern Ontario frontier, there was a surprising amount of testimony that dairy products were also taking a lot of people across the border. People were buying milk and butter and those kinds of products. Again, that causes me some real concern because most of us are trying to defend supply management in this province and this country at a time when there is enormous pressure in the international trade debate to lower some of that protection for our domestic producers.

I simply want to say, as someone who does not smoke and who both supports and understands the government argument about trying to use tax policy to encourage people to stop smoking, that we may have reached a point where those arguments are not winning the day to the extent the theoreticians would like us to believe. We have some growing evidence to suggest that particularly with cigarettes and alcohol we have reached the law of diminishing returns. I cannot prove that; only events will prove that. I sincerely hope the haemorrhage across the border stops, but I have a feeling that will have something to do with the price structure of some of these commodities.

As we think about the taxation of these products, I want to say that the argument rings very hollow with me when people stand up and say they would never raise these taxes. We all have raised these taxes and we all probably will at some future point.

Mr White: Our innocence is so short.

Mr Conway: It has nothing to do with innocence. It has everything to do with reality. The member for Durham East was quite correct. We all like to go to the school opening, we all like to cut the ribbon and we all like to say three cheers to the good public or social works that make us feel good about being citizens of Ontario or Canada. Unfortunately we have to tax for those things. If you are fortunate, as we were for five years, growth in the economy provides some of that revenue by simply producing a level of activity that at the existing rates produces more revenue. We were fortunate in most of our years in having that. This government has not had that pleasure. Some day it might.

The difficulty is that when a certain level of expenditure is reached, the government—any government—is then forced to pay for that level of expenditure, in the short term at least, irrespective of what the revenue line suggests. The revenue line is clearly in trouble. I understand that. I know why the government is beginning to retreat on Sunday shopping. I understand perfectly that people have said to the Treasurer, "Listen, if you don't do something around the holiday period particularly, those retail sales tax numbers are unachievable."

He has done what I think responsible finance ministers have to do. He has, with the support of his colleagues in council, directed the government to say: "Our policy, whatever it was on the regulation of retail store hours and whatever it was around a common pause day, is running headlong into the integrity of this budget. We want this budget to at least stand up to the scrutiny of not more than a $9.7-billion deficit and to achieve that we need nearly $8 billion worth of retail sales taxes." Anyone who knows anything about the retail trade will know which period of time, particularly in November and December, is the most active period for sales and therefore for the taxes that accrue to the consolidated revenue fund as a result.

But I repeat that these tobacco tax revenues are not inconsiderable. We rely to the tune of $1 billion this year on this vice tax. Again, I have a bit of a conflict of interest. If the virtuous succeed and we strip this terrible vice from the land, there is a practical problem. Then the Treasurer is going to have to find $1 billion worth of revenue. I can tell members, it is more likely it will be a replacement of revenue than that he will want to strip out $1 billion worth of expenditures.

As I say, when I look at the numbers, and we are talking about increasing that by almost 20% over a period of two years, $770 million to $1.04 billion, that is a very considerable increase in revenue. I repeat, everything I am hearing in the corner stores of Renfrew county and around eastern Ontario suggests to me that we are at a point where people are starting to actively engage in some civil disobedience, where people are simply not prepared to pay. They are engaged in some kind of underground market or to a much greater extent are going across the border and bringing their cigarettes and gasoline back.

I was talking to a friend who came back from a social engagement in New York state just this past weekend. He said it is really interesting when you sit in the line for two or three hours at Akwasasne and see what people do, and they are all doing the same thing.

I met yesterday with some of the people from Sault Ste Marie—and I am sure my friends opposite did as well—the community action team, a very impressive group of people with a very good cause. I could not believe what they were telling me. The city of Sault Ste Marie—I probably should have known this—is reporting that it is losing $140 million annually to cross-border shopping. I think that was the figure. It is in the report they left with me. The member for Sault Ste Marie is here. He may want to correct me, but I committed the figure of $140 million to memory because I thought that was a stunning amount of money for a city of some 85,000 or 95,000 people.

There is an argument. I think most of us in the House certainly some of us more radically and completely than others—I cannot help but look at my friend the member for Carleton in this connection, who in this matter is a new Puritan like no other I know. I say that most respectfully, I think there is a real issue here now that we are all going to have to look at. I hope the government, through the inspection branch of the Ministry of Revenue, is going to be monitoring the situation very carefully. I suspect this cabinet and subsequent cabinets will have to make some very tough decisions about this kind of underground activity, of whatever kind of activity it is. As I say, my evidence is just anecdotal, but it does suggest to me that we have reached a point of significant non-compliance and what the economists would call the law of diminishing returns.

Having said that, and having tried to recoup some of my father's vote, I will simply rest my case.

Mr Johnson: I listened with interest to the member for Renfrew North. He always impresses me with the amount of detail he can so eloquently project in the House. I am sure anyone who has the opportunity or takes the time to listen to him is also impressed.

The member says some of his evidence is anecdotal and I appreciate that, because sometimes people use anecdotal evidence as fact and we know that is not correct. Smuggling is not something new. Smuggling has gone on for a long time. He suggested the rate at which people smuggle cigarettes into the province is increasing, and certainly that is something that would concern all of us. The police and provincial authorities that exist look after this particular problem, and maybe it means the problem is going to be exacerbated by the tax, as he suggests.

I also want to speak to the law of diminishing returns which I think is something we have to be concerned about. There is a point in time when the tax will increase to such an extent that people will either stop buying cigarettes altogether or they will buy so few that the tax increase will not be of any benefit. But I would like to let the member know that at least at this time we have not reached that point, because tobacco revenues are on target at $250 million for the full year as a result of the budget change that included this bill. I thought he might find that interesting. I would suggest we are not even close to reaching that point, as the law of diminishing returns would suggest.

Mr Wiseman: I have been listening intently for the last few days on the discourse about the revenue bills that have been before the House. I found rather interesting the other day, when we were listening to the revenue debate on the surcharge on income tax, the great angst from the third party over the increases on the income of a single person who made $84,000 a year. From the calculations I have seen to determine how much that would be, it would be $11.63. It is hardly enough to fill the gas tank of their BMW or to have their Rolex watches fixed, so I am not going to bend myself out of shape over $11.63.

would like to point out a number of things that my honourable colleague the member for Renfrew North has pointed out, and why we need to have tax revenue. In 1982, for example, the contingent liabilities of Ontario were approximately $11 billion. Today they are in excess of $26 billion. That is a huge increase. Under the mismanagement of the previous Tory regime, from 1982 to 1985, those increases went up by $4 billion, which is approximately 30% in a period of less than two and a half years.

I would also like to point out that under the management of the third party, which continues to say it is the best fiscal of managers in the country, from 1982 until 1985, the accumulated deficit went from approximately $17 billion to $25 billion. That is an increase of $8 billion, which is almost a 50% increase.

I would like to conclude my remarks by pointing out that this information is available in the budget document.

Mr Hope: The honourable member for Renfrew North indicated one clear point that was really good, I thought: Sometimes we become victims ourselves when we go to a cross-border shop. I was very surprised to hear that he went over there to buy a couple of cartons of cigarettes, because as we take our revenues outside of our province to go where we lower the revenues coming into this province in order for us to administer programs, we hurt ourselves. As a government, we have to look for new sources of revenue to replenish that revenue that is leaving our province.

I thought the honourable member brought up quite clearly that we like to be there to open the new schools and we like to be there to open up the new facilities or social programs that we have developed. We, as individuals in our communities, love them. We enjoy the benefits we have here in this province, but when taxation hits, we take our revenues outside the province. We just do not want to pay any more for the nice social programs we have. I think I brought that out clearly, and I just wanted to bring out more clearly that we think we are saving ourselves by taking our revenues outside the province. What we are doing in reality is hurting ourselves, because there is no going to be some other place where we are going to go to find the revenue to replace the revenue that is leaving our province.

One of these areas is cigarettes. The honourable member brings up an important point, that if we keep taxing, eventually people are going to go out and purchase them somewhere else, thinking they are saving, or they start the underground. But in reality, we are going to turn around and maybe implement another tax because we have to provide the moneys for our hospitals, our schools, our programs, the moneys to keep our communities going, to build the roads, to build sidewalks, to keep the infrastructure of our towns and communities alive and to assist our citizens. As the general public, we have to take a very hard look that we are not hurting ourselves by doing anything else.

Mr Solá: I would like to congratulate the member for Renfrew North for pointing out the fact that honest citizens are almost being forced into criminal activity by the additional taxes that we are imposing upon them. I am not blaming just the NDP government now, because all three parties that sit in this House have had their fingers in that pie and have added straws to the camel's back, but eventually we get to the straw that breaks the camel's back. This may be it.

When we read in the paper that the corner store, the one that is open 24 hours a day or from early dawn to midnight, carries contraband cigarettes, when it carries smuggled goods, then we have to start questioning whether we have reached a point where we have to reconsider what we call the sin taxes. When organized crime finds it more profitable to smuggle cigarettes than to smuggle drugs, we have to ask ourselves whether we have reached that point where the camel can no longer haul the load.

It is nice to point fingers at the federal government or at other parties. Every level of government in this country has done it and every party that has ever been in power has done it, but I think we have to start looking at how to solve the problem. All we have to do is look at the countries behind the former Iron Curtain where people were forced into smuggling by rationing. There was not enough to go around. If you wanted something legitimate, like food, if you could pay more for it under the table, you did. I think we are doing that with tobacco in this case.

Mr Conway: I just want to say a couple of things. First, I would not want my friends opposite to get the idea that I am spending a great deal of my time or money outside this country. In fact that is not the case. I would think I probably have on two or three occasions, at the absolute most, over the last 10 years brought back cigarettes. I am quite prepared, at the risk of being mildly self-congratulatory, to put my local spending up against anyone else in this chamber.

As well, I think we have to look at the underlying causes for some of this movement. It may be very painful to look and see who is going and why they are going. I heard some member, I think it was the member for St Catharines-Brock, describe what she or some of her colleagues heard. I well remember what the Kingston and District Chamber of Commerce said about who was doing what vis-à-vis cross-border shopping. I do not have that data with me, but I think it is at some variance with what I heard earlier this afternoon.

The point is that more and more people from all walks of life, all income levels are crossing the border to buy an increasingly wide range of services and products. I well remember stories from places like Sault Ste Marie and Thunder Bay, where people in the housing and hardware business were talking about people literally buying and bringing back houses in component parts, which I thought was extraordinary.

We are going to have to look at the underlying causes for this cross-border shopping phenomenon, and I think all of us have to recognize that tax regimes have not a little bit to do with that. For that we are all responsible, and I think we are all going to have to collectively recognize that we may have to start addressing that.

Mr Sterling: I had not intended to speak on this bill because I have mixed feelings about this bill, to be quite truthful. Mr Speaker, you and other members of this Legislature who were here before the last election will understand that, because on previous occasions I called for higher taxes on tobacco. I must say that over the last two years things have changed dramatically in our world in terms of our abilities, either as provincial or as federal governments, even to make policy in isolation from what is happening around us.

When we discussed Bill 83, the bill dealing with increased income taxes for our higher-wage earners, I had some sympathy with that concept. Who can argue with the people of Ontario, that those who earn more should pay more? But there is also the counterargument to that, which I quite frankly accepted on that bill: If you tax those who are earning more and those people are the leaders, the entrepreneurs, the people who are creating wealth in the province, if you tax them more and more so that you eventually chase them out of our jurisdiction, you no longer have the kind of economy which can support the social services which we have grown accustomed to.

In approaching this debate, I am caught between the conundrum of knowing that higher tobacco taxes, in my opinion, affect consumption. Particularly, according to some Michigan state studies done by universities there, it has a more profound effect on young people who smoke. In other words, young people with less disposable income are more likely to cut down or quit as a result of a higher tobacco tax.

On the other hand, we now have a situation which has developed, particularly over the last year or two, where we discovered that our taxation regimes are out of sync with those in adjacent jurisdictions, so much so that we are asking our people to break the law, in effect, because the difference has become so great.

I remember one of my law professors at university, Professor Hubbard, saying to us once a long, long time ago, when he was talking about legislators making law, that lawmakers cannot make laws which people do not want to follow. Therefore if we sit here in the Legislature and think for a moment that we can make laws, perhaps on Sunday shopping, which the people or the shopkeepers do not want to follow, if they think we make laws dealing with very high taxation rates where people can get around those laws by doing other things, like cross-border shopping or buying cigarettes which have been illegally smuggled into this country, then they will do that if the penalty is so great on them in terms of buying cigarettes under our system.

I listened to the arguments brought forward by the member for Chatham-Kent, that we should be willing as Ontario citizens—and I heard this in the standing committee on finance and economic affairs when we were talking about the budget—to acknowledge that we have these wonderful social services and therefore we should be quite willing and most anxious to go out and pay these taxes. Well, I can tell members this: The people of Ontario and the people I know in my own community do not believe that politicians spend their money wisely. They are not willing to buy the argument that we are nearly prudent enough in the expenditure of the tax dollars, those money we collect—I am saying in the generic way, “we” being part of the government—that they will say to us, “Well, we will be good citizens and we will pay these taxes.”

I was amused when the standing committee on finance and economic affairs was in Cornwall that the Cornwall board of trade or chamber of commerce had commissioned a consultant to do a study—and I think, Mr Speaker, you were at that meeting—as to what cross-border shopping was taking place across the border in Cornwall. What amazed me was that they identified, quite innocently, the group that participated in cross-border shopping more than anybody else. I could not believe my ears that it was public servants, teachers, in this community who were the greatest cross-border shoppers of all the people in the Cornwall area, people who had been receiving money from the taxpayers of this province, from property taxes, who should above all others understand the importance of the social argument of having a good education system. Should they not be the very people who should be willing to step forward and pay the taxes? No, they were the greatest cross-border shoppers.

The argument was brought forward by the member for Chatham-Kent that we should understand and expect the people of Ontario to understand that we have to pay for these social services, and that therefore we can somehow convince the Ontario public that it should pay higher tobacco taxes, higher sales tax, whatever other taxes are required of us. I am afraid that cannot even wash among the educators of this province, as was proven in the city of Cornwall.

There is some good argument for higher taxes on tobacco, as I mentioned before. But unfortunately at this time with the way the world is changing, we no longer can make taxation policy in isolation from what is happening around us in the world. Therefore, my caucus decided we would not support this bill and would ask the Treasurer to consider taking some of the tremendous revenues they have received from this—I know you pointed out in your speech earlier this week, Mr Speaker, that this government is doing absolutely nothing for the tobacco grower. They are not doing anything. They have taken $1 billion.

If they took one cent from each package of cigarettes sold in this province in a year, they would have some where around $10 million—not one cent a cigarette; one cent a package. If they put that into the Redux program to get our tobacco growers out of growing tobacco, they would at least be saying to the tobacco growers, “We understand you’re in a bad situation.” I know the member for Norfolk is not satisfied with this government’s help to tobacco growers whom he represents. I would hope that he can impress upon his colleagues that they take maybe one cent, maybe two cents from each package of cigarettes and give it back to the people who are suffering as a result of the decline in their ability to sell their product.

We have increased tobacco taxes, which I think has led to a lowering of the consumption of tobacco in this province, but we must take care of the people who have been olved in the tobacco industry who are suffering as a result of that. That not only includes the tobacco farmers; it includes those who process it and the communities that have suffered as a result of that. We know, for instance, in the Brant-Haldimand area the decline in the ability of farmers to sell their product has decreased the value of land that has been used for growing tobacco, and therefore has skewed the whole market value system that has been in place there. This government should step in and do something to rectify that situation.

I only hope that the Treasurer will not, in his next budget, bring in taxes without a view to what is happening in adjacent jurisdictions, will not encourage citizens to break the laws of this country, and will keep our laws within reasonable limits so the average citizen will buy his products here and pay his fair share of tax.

Mr Conway: I am glad to have my friend the member for Carleton enter this debate, but there was a certain want of passion in his speech. I know the position of the Conservative Party, as is the position of the Liberal Party, is to approve this as part of the budgetary policy of the federal government. That is why certain positions have been taken and will be advanced in a moment. However, it was interesting to hear the member in a very calm and dispassionate way advance his opinions, which I know you, Mr. Speaker, have heard more often and more closely than perhaps the member for Scarborough and myself, because of those members who have not seen the member—

Mr Sterling: You haven't had to ride with him in a car with his cigar.

Mr Conway: The member for Carleton really found his region when he found this cause and I just thought he was strangely secular today on the subject that has come to define him in this place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): Further questions and/or comments? Seeing none, the honourable member for Carleton has two minutes to reply.

Mr Sterling: I thought I was being passionate.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate on Bill 84? Seeing none, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Revenue, the honourable member for Prince Edward-Georgian-South Hastings.

Mr Johnson: In winding up the second reading debate on Bill 84, I would just like to touch briefly on some of the issues raised by members of the opposition. On the matter of the size of the tax rate increase on cigarettes, I would like to remind members of the official opposition that the Liberals raised tobacco taxes on four occasions during the life of their government. The tax rate on cigarettes went up during the Liberal years from 2.66 cents per cigarette to 4.83 cents per cigarette. On cut tobacco the federal government increased the tax rate from 1.5 cents per gram when it took office to 4.83 cents per gram by the time of the last Liberal budget.

To my friends in the third party, I point out that the federal government increased its taxes on tobacco earlier this year by $6 per carton. Our increase in the spring Ontario budget amounted to $3.34 per carton. I would also like to add that from 1981 until 1985, while the Conservatives were the government of Ontario, they increased taxes on tobacco by over 100%.

On the issue of cigarette smuggling, there is no question that this is a serious question and that any increase in the rate of tax on cigarettes at either the federal or the provincial level increases the financial incentive to evade the tax. However, tobacco marking has certainly helped to limit the extent of tax evasion, and earlier in the debate the minister provided members with current statistics on the retail tobacco inspection program.

In addition to its own inspections and investigations, the ministry works closely with federal law enforcement agencies to investigate significant evasion schemes affecting both jurisdictions. So far this fiscal year, tobacco tax revenues are in line with initial projections. There will be $250 million more in tax dollars raised in a full year as a result of amendments to Bill 84.

As the Treasurer indicated in the budget he brought down this spring, tobacco-induced diseases cause 13,000 premature deaths each year in this province. To the extent that tax increases contribute to a decline in consumption, I think the increase in tax on cigarettes could probably be justified on that ground alone.

There is one other very good reason for this tax increase, and that I think is clear to everyone: We need the revenue.

Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Table des matières

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au (416) 325-7400.

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi que celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1, page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

MANDATORY LEGISLATION REVIEW

Mr Carr moved resolution 30:

That, in the opinion of this House, all future legislation which would establish an agency, board, commission or regulatory system or create new direct expenditures or tax expenditures must contain a sunset provision which would, after a specific period of time, require mandatory review of the original legislation by a committee of this House. The committee would be mandated to report to this House on the impact of the legislation, the degree to which the program and policy objectives have been met and make recommendations on whether the program or agency should be continued, terminated or amended. Further, that all existing legislation which has established an agency, board, commission or regulatory system or created new direct expenditures or tax expenditures should, over the next five years, be reviewed by a committee of this House with the mandate indicated above.

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 4(c)(i), the honourable member has 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Carr: I want to say first off that I am pleased to be able to move this resolution and to speak to it this morning. I think it is a very important resolution. When you look at the objective of this particular resolution, what we are talking about really is efficiency in government.

I was interested to note that in a recent poll called NDP Watch: The First Six Months, 80% of the people said they believed there is a tremendous amount of waste and duplication in government. That was non-political; that was 80% of people who identified themselves as NDP supporters, Liberal supporters and Progressive Conservative supporters. This is something that I think crosses all party lines. I was interested to note in my riding, when a recent newsletter came back with the survey, people were saying the same thing. The perception out there is that there is a tremendous amount of waste. What this resolution would do is say to the people that we are reviewing it, we are taking a look at the programs.

I know in our household there is not a month that goes by where we do not take a look and say: "Can we cut some costs here? Should we be spending it here? Should we maybe reallocate some of the resources?" In fact, right across this province companies and businesses are doing the same thing. Workers are being asked to look at their particular area to see where they could be more efficient. Was something that was put in place a few years ago now become outdated? I think that government in this period of time should be doing what we as individuals with our households and in our workplaces are doing almost every day. It has become more critical.

One of the big factors with this is that I honestly, truly believe that all the social programs that all of us care about in this province do not depend on the compassion of any particular government or any particular party. What they depend on is having money to be able to afford them. As was mentioned, I guess in the throne speech, the Premier said that what we have to do is to look at priorities, and priorities change. Something that might have been a valid program in 1985, for example, might now be outdated, it can be improved or it may be at a point where we can reallocate some of those resources. If we do not do that, I am afraid there is not enough money to be able to provide for all the programs that are out there, and I think what the people of this province are looking for is some guidance.

I was at the Constitution convention this weekend, and the member for St Catharines-Brock and the member for Middlesex, during one of the workshops, said what we need are some sort of sunset provisions in government to take a look at some of the expenditures. That was when we were talking about the Constitution, so hopefully we will have some support.

What I attempted to do was get something that was non-political. I tried not to get something that would be aggressive and slamming the government of the day or the previous government or any particular government. I tried to get something that would be practical and I tried to work with it as best we could.

I think the reason we need to have each ministry look at it, and I would like to have the elected officials do it, is that with agencies and boards, some people will say, "They're supposed to look at their own programs and decide what happens." Unfortunately, they look at it from their own perspective. A particular board may look at it and say, "I think this is the most important thing in this province," and if you are in fact dealing with that every day, day in and day out, it becomes the most important thing to you.

But I think, as elected officials, what we need to do is have elected officials look at the bigger, broader picture. The person administering the particular program that is being put in place may think it is the best and the most efficient program, but I think we need an objective view and it needs to be done by the politicians, who can be elected and ultimately are accountable to the electorate.

I think governments of all political stripes realize the old days of when we had programs and every year it was just inflation-plus are gone. There just are not the tax dollars to be able to afford it. We all know that unfortunately we are the highest-taxed province in all of Canada and in fact the highest-taxed jurisdiction in all of North America, so if we want to pay for any new programs, what we need to do is reallocate the money from some of the other programs.

Some ideas were originally thought out and very worth while. I had the pleasure of going to a rent review hearing yesterday morning. When it was put in place, the simple idea was, "We'll have this board that will review it." I also had my eyes opened a great deal with that, because we literally spent all morning, from 10 o'clock when it convened until 11:45, just deciding whether they would proceed that day because one of the lawyers was not there. Basically half a day was wasted, and in fact they tell me it was the second time this has happened, so there has been a full day basically on debate about whether they were going to adjourn or not.

Obviously, something like that particular board or agency needs to be reviewed to see how we can streamline it, how we can be more efficient. I am a little bit used to delays, having sat on some of the committees in here, but I was interested in some of the tenants when I walked out. They were saying to me: "The system doesn't work. This is ridiculous. It's crazy." A well-thought-out idea that I think everybody thought was terrific when it came in needs to be looked at from the standpoint of reviewing it to see what can be done to make it work, because there were about 100 tenants and every one, to a man and a woman, said, "This system doesn't work."

What we are saying with this particular resolution is that we need to look at them with a very clear understanding to make improvements. In some cases it may be that we amend what is done; in other cases it may be that we terminate what was a good idea at the time, but there needs to be that review.

Anybody who has done any studying of modern management techniques knows that controlling is probably the most important key element in getting things done. That is regardless of whether you are a supervisor or you are a worker in your particular area and you are managing that area. Controlling the results, I guess probably second after staffing and getting the right people, is the most important thing. What we are saying with this is that we are going to control, we are going to measure, we are going to monitor the results to see where we can be more efficient and streamline them.

It was interesting to note that when we talk about how man made the journey to the moon—and everybody knew what the objective was, we wanted to get the spacecraft from here to the moon—they tell us that when they travelled to the moon, that rocket going to the moon was off course virtually 95% of the time. They knew the goal was to get to the moon, but they were off course, and what they kept doing was bringing it back on course continually so they could reach their objective.

I think we in government should set very clear, very worthwhile objectives for our programs, and then what we need to do is, along the way, keep correcting, keep refining, keep improving them so that at the end of the day people will say that we in fact did everything to the best of our ability to make the government as efficient and as effective as possible.

I say to the members opposite and my friends in the Liberal Party as well—

Mr Hope: Where are they?

Mr Carr: —those in their offices watching me, I am sure, with the television on this morning, that the public perception is that there is a tremendous amount of waste, a tremendous amount of duplication of services. This resolution, which was put forward in a spirit of non-partisanship is something that is very practical. I believe it is something that is needed. When we sit back and reflect on the future and see the young people who come in here to watch, it is their future we need to guard, because as members know if we do not begin to be more efficient and to improve, the legacy we are going to leave to the next generation is unfortunately going to be one of a tremendous amount of debt and overtaxation.

I think this will be a first start. Rather than taking a look at the taxes and saying, "We're just going to reduce taxes in that area," I think this will be a good start towards making government more efficient. I believe it is needed. I encourage all members in the Legislature to take a look at this resolution and offer their support to it. I hope they will. The future of this province is too important not to have this resolution passed today.

Mr Winninger: I believe the resolution put forward by the member for Oakville South is a very thoughtful one, as I might expect from one who has served so ably on the standing committee on administration of justice and who is one of the select few from his party to be elected in 1990 as support for his party slips gently away.

While a sunset provision calling for mandatory review of agencies, boards, commissions and regulatory systems may be appealing on the surface, I submit it is unnecessary and represents additional costs the taxpayer does not need to bear at this time. To borrow the metaphor used by the member, I believe his rocket is indeed off course in this matter.

We have a standing committee on government agencies that is working very well. It reviews the operations of agencies, boards and commissions of the government of Ontario. It has reviewed and reported recently on TVOntario, the Ontario Municipal Board, the Ontario Human Rights Commission, the Rent Review Hearings Board and many other tribunals too numerous to mention. Under standing order 104(g), reviews are made "with a view to reducing possible redundancy and overlapping, improving the accountability of agencies, rationalizing the functions of the agencies, identifying those agencies or parts of agencies which could be subject to sunset provisions, and revising the mandates and roles of agencies." It is difficult to find a more comprehensive mandate than that of this committee.

Pursuant to a provisional change in the standing orders adopted last December, the government agencies committee also reviews intended order-in-council appointments to agencies, boards and commissions to ensure appointments are made in accordance with merit or a legitimate governmental policy initiative rather than as a political favour, as has often been done in the past.

In addition, standing order 106 provides that the standing committees on justice, general government, resources development and social development are "authorized to study and report on all matters relating to the mandate, management, organization or operation" of agencies, boards and commissions reporting to ministries and offices these committees are concerned with. Further, as the member well knows, a member of a subcommittee of these committees can designate a matter under standing order 23 "to be considered by the committee relating to the mandate, management, organization or operation" of an agency, board or commission.

It would be remiss of me not to mention the good work of the standing committee on public accounts, which reviews the public accounts and reports of the Provincial Auditor, to promote the economy, efficiency and effectiveness in public spending that I believe the member for Oakville South is honestly seeking here today. We also have the standing committee on the Ombudsman, which reviews complaints to the Ombudsman against agencies, boards and commissions, and the standing committee on estimates.

I urge the member for Oakville South, before he would establish yet another committee, to consider the mandate of the committees I referred to with a view to identifying possible duplication. This kind of review may in fact be more useful than the creation of a new committee. While there may be room for improvement, the existence of these committees certainly contributes to increased efficiency, public accountability and democracy.

I might add that internally we have the Management Board of Cabinet directives and guidelines, which contain criteria to evaluate the creation of new government bodies and procedures and review guidelines and implementation plan guidelines that ministers are expected to follow when undertaking sunset reviews. In many cases sunseting can certainly be handled by the respective minister, Management Board and cabinet.

I might add that a sunset review provision is required in all memorandums of agreement entered into between agencies, boards and commissions and the respective ministries. These sunset provisions provide the minister with an opportunity to assess ongoing programs in relation to new priorities and to determine whether funds could be spent in another area or not at all. It could be argued that it is generally better for ministers and their departments to decide, as part of a coherent approach to policymaking, if programs are to continue.

Less government is not always better government. Experience with sunseting has shown that the termination date for regulatory or operational agencies is not high compared to that of advisory bodies, which brings me to two other relevant issues when we are considering the kind of mandatory sunseting called for by the member. I speak of time and cost.

The resolution calls for mandatory review of all new agencies, boards and commissions within a fixed time period. This approach is fraught with difficulty. It is too inflexible. Different bodies may require different sunset periods for review. Who would decide which bodies are to be selected first for review while others go without scrutiny for a period of time? There is no clear way of knowing where potential savings are greater or services are of greater significance.

This resolution also calls for review of existing bodies within the next five years. At last count, this government had 510 agencies, boards and commissions. Five years may not be enough time to review the enabling legislation.

Last, dealing with the question of cost, sometimes the cost of establishing and maintaining the kind of committee the member recommends can outweigh any cost-saving benefit from reducing the mandate of or closing down a committee. Resources may be difficult to justify in this period of restraint. I note that the Macaulay report of 1988, which reviewed Ontario's agencies, boards and commissions, concluded that sunseting was not meeting its desired goal of self-justification. It went on to observe that since 1980, when sunseting began, out of 580 agencies only five were actually terminated and 10 merged with other agencies while 77 new agencies were created, of which 15 could be classed as regulatory.

John Chenier, an employee with the federal Secretary of State and professor in the school of public administration at Carleton, has identified in an article many drawbacks of sunseting. To name but a few, the fixed renewal date frequently becomes an excuse to delay desirable changes, beneficiaries of the program about to expire will only remind the minister of the good works of the program when the sunset date arrives, and a fixed renewal date often raises expectations that the program will be enhanced and problems solved with more effort and money.

Another study published last year noted that 12 US states have abandoned sunset review due to high monetary and temporal costs, unfulfilled expectations of agency termination, low levels of citizen participation and other problems.

Finally, I think I have identified many of the weaknesses in the member's resolution and provided the underpinnings, the basis, for my position in this matter, which is opposed to his.

However, the implementation of new measures announced last fall guaranteeing greater fairness in the appointments process will continue. We hope to secure more trust and respect from the people of Ontario for our government through an open system of applications for government agencies, boards and commissions, accessible to people with diverse backgrounds and experience.

Mrs Caplan: I am pleased to rise this morning during private members' hour in support of the resolution of the member for Oakville South. I think it is important that it be read out. I have been listening to speakers who oppose it. I look at it as an amendment and a resolution of the House that everyone should be able to support, because it really calls on the individual private member, in his role as a member of the committee, to be able to do his job better and to play a meaningful role in a process that already occurs within government.

I am very much aware that sunset review, program review, was an ongoing mandate of the Management Board of Cabinet during the five years I was on the government benches. During that time, as any new agency was established, there was an automatic five-year mandate review conducted by the Management Board. It seems to me that the new government, which has spoken about enhancing the role of all members of this Legislature, and members of the government benches would be supportive of a resolution that would do just that. It would take that five-year mandated review, which occurs right now within government, and allow a standing committee of the Legislature to be part of that process.

I do not think it is anything that anyone could philosophically oppose. It is certainly a part of the process today because we know the agencies, boards and commissions are reviewed by a standing committee of the Legislature. We know there is a standing committee on the Ombudsman which also has the powers to review programs of the government in depth, even though it has met only a very few times.

Let's take a minute and read again the resolution of the member for Oakville South. It says:

"That, in the opinion of this House, all future legislation which would establish an agency, board, commission or regulatory system or create new direct expenditures or tax expenditures must contain a sunset provision which would, after a specific period of time"—it could be five years, it could be longer—"require a mandatory review of the original legislation by a committee of this House. The committee would be mandated to report to this House on the impact of the legislation, the degree to which the program and policy objectives have been met and make recommendations on whether the program or agency should be continued, terminated or amended. Further, that all existing legislation which has established an agency, board, commission or regulatory system or created new direct expenditures or tax expenditures should, over the next five years, be reviewed by a committee of this House with the mandate indicated above."

As we look through this resolution, what we find is that it is really a way to involve, inform and fully educate not only members of this House but the public. We know that standing committees of the Legislature, which today review most pieces of legislation and have full and open public hearings, are a vehicle for informing the public in an open public forum about what the work of the Legislature is, what the role of the individual member is and how we conduct our business. The public is very cynical today. They are very cynical about all politicians. They do not like any of us very much. Anything we can do that will inform the public about who we are and what we do is a positive way of reducing the level of cynicism through public education, of reducing the level of cynicism by opening the doors even wider rather than excluding anything the government does from review.

For me, as a private member of the Legislature, one of the most exciting opportunities I have had over the last six years as a provincial legislator has been the opportunity to ask questions not just in the theatre of question period but as a member of committee, to meet with people who are very knowledgeable in their field of expertise, both inside and outside government, and then to take the information I have gathered and share that.

I want to share one experience, particularly with some of the new members of the government caucus, because I think it will help them to understand why I support this kind of resolution. I was a member of the standing committee on finance and economic affairs and we were studying what was then to be the free trade agreement. The more we looked at it, the more concerned we were about the impact it would have on Ontario's workers and jobs. In fact I think we were quite prophetic in our view of what was going to result.

As a member of the committee that studied intently the proposal by the federal government, we also had the opportunity to meet with the office of the negotiators. We met with the European Community. We met with the people who were knowledgeable in the field of macroeconomics, and I remember coming home from one of these meetings and saying to my children, "I now understand macroeconomics." My son, who was in business school at university, said, "You understand it all in just two days? There are people who study for years."

I said: "It is a different kind of understanding that we, legislators, we members of this process here in the assembly at Queen's Park, must have. We don't need to have the technical expertise of the master's degrees and the PhDs. We have to understand it so that we can bring common sense, take a look at what is proposed and what we think is going to happen. We represent the people in our constituencies. We need to be able to go back to them and not give them a professional, professorial response. We need to be able to explain in common, everyday language, what is going on, how this is going to affect you and why we either support it or we don't."

When I look at a resolution such as the one proposed by the member for Oakville South, I think it would be an opportunity for members of this Legislature to become even better informed about how precious tax dollars are being spent. I think it would allow members of the Legislature to review in depth and make recommendations to the government about whether a proposed agency, board or commission, whether a proposed expenditure which had been fully reviewed at a legislative committee and passed into law, had achieved its goals. By allowing members to be a part of that review, I think the public of Ontario would be better served.

The members are already today involved in those reviews to a minor degree. As I mentioned, the standing committee on government agencies today is empowered by the standing order of the committee "to review and report to the House its observations, opinions and recommendations on the operation of all agencies, boards and commissions to which the Lieutenant Governor in Council makes some or all of the appointments, and all corporations to which the crown in right of Ontario is a majority shareholder, such reviews to be made with a view to reducing possible redundancy and overlapping, improving the accountability of agencies, rationalizing the functions of the agencies, identifying those agencies or parts of agencies which could be subject to sunset provisions, and revising the mandates and roles of agencies."

That exists today, so this proposal by the member for Oakville South just enhances a role which already is available to members of the Legislature. It takes it one step further.

It seems to me it is something which would be difficult for members, particularly members who are new to the Legislature, who when they talked about wanting to come to this place were not sure whether they were going to be on opposition benches or government benches, as we were not sure. When we stand for public office in this province, under the British parliamentary system, we never know which side of the House we are going to sit on. We run as members in our ridings to represent our people and their views. We tell them what our policies are, what our party's policies are, and then after the election is over, it is the electorate who determines where we sit.

To be perfectly honest, in 1985 I had as one of my goals, as I said before in this House, to sit in opposition. I consider my five years in government as indeed a privilege and an honour to have served the people of my riding in the cabinet and in the government of Ontario. But I am privileged and honoured, as a member of this Legislature, to serve today as a member of the official opposition and I have pledged to the people of my riding that in my capacity as a provincial member of Parliament, I will be as well informed as I can be, I will be as responsible as I can be and I will be as effective as I can be.

I have a role as an opposition critic of the new treasury board, which has exactly the same kind of mandate of review, of looking at programs, as we talked about a few minutes earlier, as the Management Board of Cabinet formerly had. It has undertaken a massive program review. I believe, as a member of the opposition, that it should not just be the critic who has that opportunity to review what the government is doing. It should not just be one individual critic who has the opportunity to be part of the sunset review provisions.

I think it is important that members of the standing committees of the Legislature be fully informed and have the opportunity to fully scrutinize, to hold the government accountable. That is a very important function. I cannot stress that too highly. As well as holding the government accountable, frequently members of those committees come up with very good ideas.

One of the things I have said to my constituents in the riding of Oriole is that I feel it is my role to oppose and to criticize. That is my role as a member of the official opposition. That is our role and function in our democracy. The official opposition has a mandate to criticize the government, to keep it on its toes, to fight with words and to hold it accountable by a kind of responsible criticism, to oppose when it has made a mistake or erred or when its proposals may not yet be perfect and in the public interest.

I also believe, and I believe this with all my heart, that as a member of the official opposition I must have the opportunity to propose. To be blunt, the best way, the best forum and the best vehicle to be able to propose new ideas, good ideas, is at committee. I have been a Chairman of committee, as I am now. I have been a member of committee, looking at rent review, pay equity, the free trade agreement, and good ideas came from the opposition members.

As I speak in support of the resolution of the member for Oakville South, I think it would increase the opportunity for all members of this Legislature on the government side and in opposition to bring their good ideas forward as we review expenditures, as we take a look at agencies, boards and commissions, make recommendations on sunsetting those that have not achieved their goals and objectives, be critical about those that have not been fiscally responsible, and at the same time serve the people of this province well by doing the job we were sent here to do.

Mr Villeneuve: I am here to strongly support my friend and colleague the member for Oakville South in his private member's notice of motion. As my colleague the member for Oriole repeated, the resolution is simply that agencies, boards, commissions and regulatory systems, once in place, have a sunset provision which would not put them out of business but which would simply ask: Are they doing the job they are mandated for? Are they too expensive? What direction should they be going in if they are not going in the right direction?

With this member's background as a professional hockey player—and as I was going from the baseball game last night to the Nordiques and my Montreal Canadiens—maybe the Nordiques should have brought him up and kept him. But I am glad they did not because we now have a new, fresh outlook in this Legislature with my colleague the member for Oakville South. He could have probably helped the Nordiques last night. However, he is here helping the people of Ontario.

As an athlete, and I understand his background, he had to make the team every year. You are only as good as your last game. So this goes right in line with his thinking. It is somewhat different from, say, a lot of the thinking of union members who somehow or other would prefer not to bring any more stuff into the open than need be. That is a known quantity. I congratulate my colleague the member for Oakville South for his openness and his refreshing outlook on politics, "Let's have a look at it; let's open it up." I have no problem with that.

I do have a little problem with some statements that were made by the member for London South, however, when in his participation here, he had the audacity to say how well the committee system is working. I happen to have substituted on a committee, the standing committee on general government. It was mandated, after sections 1, 2, and 3 were put in by my party, that we have one opportunity during a session to look at changes in regulations.

With the stroke of a pen, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations shut down 14 registry offices, three of them in my riding, two of which had been there since 1795. The amazing thing is that this was all done and he continues to systematically close these registry offices in spite of the fact that a committee of this Legislature had hearings. Not one person who came to the hearings was in favour of closing these registry office, yet the minister continues to systematically do it.

The idiosyncrasy here is that a solicitor acting on behalf of the ministry made these statements, and they are worth repeating because it is an absolute insult to the committee system of this Legislature and to the members who participate. When the member for London South says that the committee system is working well, he needs to listen closely. I will read some remarks that were uttered by a solicitor on behalf of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations:

"The solicitor for the ministry said it would serve no purpose for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations to await any input from the standing committee on general government, which is looking into the closure of land registry offices under standing order 123."

The solicitor gave three main reasons. "The general government committee is of no significance." That is the first statement.

Mr Winninger: That is one opinion.

Mr Villeneuve: Acting on behalf of the minister. The member is a solicitor and he knows what the solicitor-client relationship is. They are acting on behalf of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

"The general government committee is really just a way of creating political heat." That is statement number two.

Statement number three: "The general government committee is composed of six members of the NDP and five from the other two parties and all the NDP members could be absolutely counted on to stick to the government's position of closure of the land registry offices."

It is an insult to the members of committees, it is an insult to anyone who sits in this Legislature, and they will tell us it is working. Mr Speaker, I cannot accept that. I will strongly support my colleague the member for Oakville South.

Mr Fletcher: It is a pleasure to rise and speak on this resolution presented by the member for Oakville South. I can sympathize with what the member is saying about trying to get control over government. In fact, I think that through the years, whenever new governments come in, one of their first priorities is to try to get control. But then the governments of the past have already implemented a system, and we are using the same system, where reviews are done periodically throughout the ministries and then Management Board has the job of reviewing them.

As far as sunset legislation is concerned, it has been used in the United States, as my colleague the member for London South has already said. Some of the problems they had with this sunset legislation were that—let me just read: "There was a failure to reduce the size of government; high monetary costs; lack of meaningful citizen participation; disappropriation; influence of agencies and their lobbyists; a lack of adequate evaluation criteria." The only recommendation that came from any committee was that they "should lengthen the review cycle to permit more thorough reviews of fewer agencies each year." In other words, going from a five-year review, as this system evolves, we will be looking perhaps at an eight-year review, a 13-year review. How many governments will pass through this Legislature in that time? How many governments will be controlled because they cannot go against this sunset committee?

An hon member: They will all be NDP governments.

Mr Fletcher: We hope they are NDP governments, as my colleague says.

Having a five-year review and then watching it go to a 13-year review would only start an evolution in the system getting back to where we are now. As my colleague the member for London South has already said, we have standing committees that are already doing the job. These standing committees were not put in place by this government; they were put in place by previous governments. They seemed to work for those previous governments and they work for this government.

Also, each ministry does a review. In fact, when we did a review of the land registry offices and came up with a conclusion that would be more expedient and cheaper, the opposition jumped on us and said: "No, that's wrong. You can't do this." Now they are standing there saying, "We need a review." Each government, when it comes into power, will do a review of its plans and policies and will implement programs that go along with its ideology, its way of looking at things.

To my friend the member for Oakville South, I can understand the frustration, but instead of just starting to implement a program that suits today, we have to look at the long-term effects. From what we have seen in the United States so far, the long-term effects are a lengthening of the process.

Mr J. Wilson: I am very pleased to rise today to express my support and that of my other caucus colleagues for the resolution put forward by the member for Oakville South. As my colleague from Sand, Dust, Gravel and East Grenville said just a few minutes ago, this resolution is a fresh, new way to do business around here.

One thing that struck me—and it is a new point to the debate this morning—upon my arrival at Queen's Park many years ago when I was an assistant here was how media-driven and interest-group-driven governments' agendas tend to be. But this resolution would give the government—and I cannot understand for the life of me why the NDP would not support this resolution—a fresh opportunity to be proactive, to take the bull by the horns around here, as it were, and to review, on an ongoing basis, agencies, boards and commissions and the programs they deliver.

The good part of the resolution that says the review must be conducted by a standing committee of this Legislature—and there are two points there—is that, first, we will be sure the review takes place and, second, we can have elected people ensuring that the taxpayers of this province are actually getting value for their tax dollar, which certainly was a demand made on us as we went to the doors during the last election campaign.

We are overtaxed. We are the most highly taxed jurisdiction in North America. We have many boards and commissions and I am sure most members of the government could not tell me what their purposes are. We have a Commission called the Soldiers' Aid Commission which was established in 1960. It is still operating, but no one seems to be able to tell what it does. It has never had a review of its mandate.

As the member for Oriole pointed out, since 1986 the Management Board has been doing internal reviews of programs—Management Board with the exception of the chairman and the cabinet members who sit on it; the reviews though are done primarily by bureaucrats. It is an internal review. My experience with bureaucrats over the last eight years is that their first inclination is to protect their own turf. Their own inclination is to send the minister a briefing note about how important their program is, whether that program is delivering value for money or not. Their first inclination is to ensure that the status quo is maintained.

I have talked to some cabinet ministers in the NDP government privately. They say, "We can't do that because the bureaucrats sent me a note saying we're going to have to hire X new civil servants" or, "It's going to require new money for anything we try to do." I remember very well talking to the Minister of Tourism and Recreation. He said, "I can't do this, that and the other thing because I'm told it will require new civil servants." Those are the standard briefing notes they get from bureaucrats. They have to cut through that.

By reviewing programs and referring them to a standing committee of this Legislature, which does not include bureaucrats—there are no bureaucrats on the standing committee; it is politicians from all three parties sitting around—presumably on something like this they could work in a co-operative atmosphere and could actually find out whether taxpayers are getting value for the billions of dollars, some $52.3 billion, that they give to this government each year.

I also want to mention that we do not have to set up a new standing committee of the Legislature, as the member for London South said. He said it might cost more money to do this than it is worth. I sit on the standing committee on regulations and private bills. We do not do anything. We meet once a month to rubber-stamp five or six bills. Frankly, and I will say it publicly, it is very often a waste of time and taxpayers' money.

The only good thing about that committee is that the legislative counsel, again a bureaucrat, has a mandate to review some of the regulations of government from time to time, but he can only review regulations to see if they are constitutional. He has no authority whatsoever, because he is not elected by the people, to inform the committee whether there is value for money in the regulations or the bills he is reviewing. He will simply tell the committee whether it is constitutional or not.

In questioning the other day I said, "What if you found something that the government was trying to do to be unconstitutional?" He said: "I have no teeth to do anything about that either. I would send a memo to the appropriate minister, hope the minister reads it and hope the minister will amend the legislation or regulations to conform with Canada's Constitution."

A standing committee such as regulations and private bills could easily undertake this task of reviewing regulations to see if taxpayers are getting value for money and certainly reviewing legislation and the mandate of programs delivered by boards and commissions around here. It is an excellent idea.

In 1988, the member for Nipissing, the leader of my party, the Ontario PC party, brought forward this exact resolution. Unfortunately the Liberals—the word "hypocrisy" comes to mind because the member for Oriole today—

The Deputy Speaker: Order. I will not accept that. Please rephrase your sentence.

Mr J. Wilson: I withdraw the term. I thought if you called her the H-word, that would certainly be directed at her, but certainly the terminology—

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I ask you to apologize.

Mr J. Wilson: That was then, this is now. We see that with the NDP in opposition and in government; we see that with the member for Oriole in the Liberal Party, who in 1988 would not support this resolution. It made perfect sense then and now we see the government also not supporting this resolution. It does not make any sense for the NDP this time around not to support this resolution. This resolution is long overdue. I credit the member for Oakville South for bringing it forward. It shows real courage. The only reason I can think of why this government will not support it is that it is afraid if it gets into sunset provisions, the public of Ontario will actually sunset the government right out of office.

Mr Martin: I am happy to rise this morning to speak to this resolution. I would like to make perhaps three points about what has been presented to us here today. One of them is that when we look at all the things this government has to do today regarding the recession we are dealing with and all the pain that has been felt out there by the people of Ontario, this is not a piece of business we have time for. Perhaps at another time when the economy is better and we do not have so many pressing things to deal with we might want to look at this again, because it certainly has some things in it that have some value and that we should perhaps look at.

The other thing I would like to say is that in my estimation of how government runs, we do not at this time need another level of bureaucracy. Who pays for it? Who is going to spend time on it? How do we involve some of the members of the public when we need all the energy we all have here focused on more important things, such as the legislation this government is trying to put through this House and is being obstructed in doing by the opposition so many of the days that we sit here.

I would also like to say to the member for Oriole, who spoke earlier, that I agree we have an opportunity here for input on various pieces of legislation. When she was in government, she said that she listened to the opposition as it presented points of view. I want her to know that there is not a piece of legislation that we as a government have put through in our tenure so far that does not reflect a very serious attempt to listen to both the opposition and the public out there so that legislation we bring down actually reflects those in our communities. I suggest when it comes to the regulation of boards and commissions that we are listening as intently at that level as well.

So in fact at this time this particular provision is not necessary. It would be a waste of resources and a waste of people's time and energy. Perhaps another time, but not now.

Mr Turnbull: I am delighted to speak on the issue today that my colleague the member for Oakville South brought forward. I think it is essential to get some responsibility back into governments, and I am surprised the government does not embrace this as it looks at ways of saving money, which undoubtedly it is going to have to do. This gives them a tool to do it, one which we would support them in. It is reasonable that people cut out the bureaucracy. It is quite obvious that bureaucrats have a vested interest in making sure that programs are ongoing.

If we have sunset clauses in all the new legislation and indeed over the next five years bring in existing programs for sunset reviews, we will have an opportunity to determine whether the programs are working or not. I also suggest that we should consider zero-based budgeting as a viable tool. If we do this, we will finally be able to wrestle this massive government to the ground and start getting value for taxpayers' dollars.

The suggestion made by the previous speaker was that the opposition was stopping the government getting its legislation through the House, but if he reads parliamentary journals, he will find that is the job of opposition. Only 23% of the people who were eligible to vote in the last election voted for them. They do not have a sweeping mandate to do whatever they want.

Constructive opposition is what we are offering, and this, more than any other measure, is constructive opposition. It gives the government a tool to be able to address the massive, clogged bureaucracy that we have. Indeed, we should put this into one of the committees that exist so that we do not create extra committees. We have to make our committees work more effectively.

Having sat through two days of estimates on the ministry which I critique, I would say it is just an opportunity for the bureaucrats to strut their stuff and baffle us with bafflegab. Anybody who has watched Yes, Minister will know that is exactly what goes on.

I suggest that if we are going to make committees more useful, we should have equal representation on the committees and, believe me, the NDP will get the benefit of it when it is chucked out on its ear, as it is undoubtedly going to be after the next election. The taxpayers are fed up with what it is doing with this province. They are destroying business and they are destroying jobs, and if we started to be more constructive with the way we operate government, we would then start to see the province moving again. Sunset clauses and zero-based budgeting would be the most appropriate start. It would help the government and it would help the taxpayers.

Mr Carr: I want to thank everyone who participated this morning for their valued comments. I want to just touch on the remarks of some of the people who spoke against the resolution.

The member for Sault Ste Marie said that now is not the time. I say to him that because of the crisis we are in, now is the time to do it. When things are going well and there is enough money, there is not the need to review what has already been done. It is now, when the times are pressing, that it is so serious. I think he is a little mixed up. The government cannot get through the legislation he is talking about, not because of the opposition but because there is no money to pay for it. They could not put all the best-thought-out programs in legislation that they might want to, even if there were no opposition here, because we are flat broke. There is no money. We are almost out of business in this province. That is the reason it cannot go through.

To my friend the member for London South, who said the system is working, I say the system is not working, not in my estimation nor in theirs. In the recent poll, the NDP Watch, 80% of the people who say they are NDP supporters say that with governments at all levels and of all political stripes, whether it be municipal, provincial or federal, there is a lot of waste and duplication in the programs that are there. I say to him that it is not what I believe and it is not what he may believe; the public, 80% of them, say that with all political stripes, the system is not working as effectively as it can.

To my friend the member for Guelph, who said it is based on ideology, I say it has nothing to do with political stripes. I listened to Mr Harcourt after the election, the following morning. Four times—I counted them—he talked about a balanced budget. Four times he said, "If we have no money, we can't do it." So it does not matter if you are an NDP member, a Liberal or a Conservative, the fact of the matter is that the public needs to look at it. I say very clearly that the reason it is not working is that there is no money. Members have to look to the chief Treasurer of this province who has talked about selling assets off because the system does not work. There is no money left.

I encourage members to support this resolution. It is needed and the province needs it today.

MOTORCYCLES

Mr Cooper moved resolution 29:

That, in the opinion of this House, given that motorcycles use less of everything, the government of Ontario should promote the use of motorcycles.

Mr Cooper: The purpose of this resolution is to initiate a broad-based discussion on a much-maligned form of transportation, the motorcycle.

I believe, along with our government, that public transportation is the best solution to our transportation problems, but in reality most people, because of their busy schedules and their refusal to give up their personal automobile, have chosen not to embrace public transit. As a rule, the people of Ontario still use their own cars as their main source of transportation. Car pooling does not seem have caught on and I believe it is because of the loss of independence, somewhat the same reason people do not rely on public transit. In most cases, if members look around they will find most cars on the roads and highways contain only one person, and that is the driver. This is the reason I believe the government of Ontario should promote the use of motorcycles as an alternative to the car.

Environmentally there is at present nothing superior to the motorcycle, except maybe the bicycle. Motorcycles take up less space on highways and roads and need very limited space for parking. At a time, especially around Toronto but also in many larger communities across Ontario, where one feels the entire province is being paved over, the increased use of the motorcycle will slow down the need for more highways and parking lots and save our precious agricultural land.

The growing number and size of tire dumps across the province is causing the government problems. While not a solution, obviously, replacing two tires instead of the four which have to be replaced on the automobile gives the motorcycle the advantage as a better choice of transportation. Motorcycles are for the most part more fuel-efficient than cars. We therefore have less pollution and preserve our limited fossil fuels.

I believe that if the government of Ontario actively promoted the use of motorcycles as an alternative to the car, it would eliminate the "bad boy" of transportation perception people in general have. Motorcycles are slowly becoming more popular, as can be seen by the growing number of people using them. Motorcycle enthusiasts include all ages and groups, from students right up to senior citizens.

Much more needs to be done and a good start would be to follow the lead taken by the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation. In a news release in Markham on October 18, 1991, the ministry states:

"The Ontario government and the snowmobile industry have joined forces to help launch a major awareness campaign to reduce the number of serious snowmobile accidents in the province.

"The Snowmobile Safety Committee is conducting an ongoing public education campaign about trail safety. The new committee is supported by the Ontario government, Arctic Cat, Bombardier Ski-Doo, Polaris, Yamaha, the Ontario Federation of Snowmobile Clubs, the Ontario Cottagers Association, the Royal Life Saving Society and the Canadian Sport, Head and Spine Injury Research Centre.

"'People are dying and suffering serious injuries from accidents that could have been prevented,' Dan Waters, parliamentary assistant to Ontario Minister of Tourism and Recreation Peter North, said today at a news conference in Markham. 'It's time to reverse that trend.'"

This same approach can be taken to promote the use of motorcycles. The government of Ontario, along with the major motorcycle dealerships, should join together in a promotional partnership to this end. The Bikers Rights Organization of Ontario would be the ideal group to spearhead this initiative because it is the main group chosen to be the lobby to the Ontario government. Its constitution states:

"The Bikers Rights Organization of Ontario is a non-profit organization composed of motorcycle enthusiasts, standing together in a common interest to make government and law enforcement agencies aware of the necessity for reasonable and fair motorcycle legislation along with safety education and public awareness programs.

"Their aims and objectives are:

"to foster and develop improved community understanding and awareness of motorcycles and operators, by actively supporting charities by providing services and/or moneys, and by instigating motorcycle safety through public awareness programs.

"to foster and promote motorcycle safety and responsible riding practices in the motorcycling community.

"to promote and develop friendship and understanding among all motorcyclists.

"to promote legislation affecting motorcycles generally and to oppose and support as the case may be any contemplated legislation by provincial, municipal, or other authorities in so far as same may affect the motorcycling community.

"to endeavour to achieve a closer relationship and better understanding between motorcycle owners/operators and law enforcement officers with a goal to identifying and solving problems of mutual concern."

There are several areas of concern to the motorcycle enthusiast. The first and possibly most important issue is that of insurance. This can best be explained in a letter submitted to the Ontario Automobile Insurance Board in 1989:

"Dear Mr Kruger:

"I am writing this letter in response to the upcoming hearings on establishing motorcycle insurance rates. As a citizen I have often felt that we could not change what bureaucrats were about to do, nor was I convinced that writing a letter could help. After realizing the errors in my thinking, I've decided to at least say my piece.

"I've been riding for more than 20 years now and belong to a club that is very aware of safety and impresses on its members the need to be safe motorcyclists. It always astounds me when my insurance premiums come in to find that complete coverage on my bike is higher than my brand-new car. I've never had a claim on my bike. I have on the car. I've never had a ticket on the bike, not quite as good a record on my car. Recently I bought a slightly larger bike (500 cc up to a 800 cc) and my insurance company said that they don't insure bikes over 750 cc. They have made an exception but to be sure I had to give them my automobile coverage first. I'm very concerned that insurance agencies can do this but am afraid to rock the boat or I'll be without insurance.

"What is going to happen when insurance companies decide that motorcycles are too small a portion of their business and we are unable to get coverage? Will one or two companies be allowed to charge outrageous rates so that we enthusiasts will no longer be able to afford coverage? Will more people get coverage to get their plates then cancel and take a chance? What happens when one of them hits me? I'm also very concerned about how easy it is to get a licence for a motorcycle. If insurance companies insisted on safety courses and restricted the size of bikes a beginner could use, we would all reap the benefits.

"In conclusion I feel the cost of motorcycle insurance is high enough now and with recent releases of information on payout, it appears that this statement could easily be supported. I hope your board rules that rates can be held, that all insurance companies should provide coverage and not just through the facilitator, that restrictions be suggested on size of bike a new rider can have and that licences be made more difficult to obtain.

"Thank you for taking the time to read my letter. I hope it gave you some food for thought. Your job is not an easy one but I do hope you remember the little guy who pays those premiums when deciding about the rates."

Mr Harnick: You're not a little guy, Mike. You're the biggest guy in the Legislature.

Mr Cooper: This is not my letter. I have gone through similar circumstances and I feel the government may have to take a lead on this issue.

As mentioned in the letter, it may be necessary to bring in legislation requiring that for the first year of riding a motorcycle only a bike under 125 cc can be used. This would prevent people from going and getting their licence on, say, a 100 cc Honda and then going out the next day and buying a 1,000 cc rice rocket and killing themselves, which is what we read about in the paper every spring.

This is the law in Britain. Also, a mandatory motorcycle safety and operation course is necessary to receive a licence in Britain. The Ontario Ministry of Transportation, working through the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, has set up such a course, but unlike in Britain this course is not mandatory. As a graduate of this course at Conestoga College in Kitchener, I would endorse that these training courses become mandatory.

These classes include things like classroom instruction on "maintenance and inspection, controls and operation and pre-riding drill."

Then there are the practical courses which cover "basic operation, balance, starting, stopping, gear changing, basic braking and slow turns; starting, stopping and parking on grades; operations using cones and barricades to achieve serpentine weave, circle and figure-eight performance; off-road riding (ie sand, gravel, grass, shallow ditches); emergency braking and collision avoidance; Ministry of Transportation written and visual tests; riding on public roads with the objective of introducing the students to every conceivable type of road condition and riding experience, and individual discussions, evaluation and licensing of students by instructor.

"It is understood that all phases of this course are to be demonstrated by instructor before being performed by students."

With better legislation in conjunction with a better-educated rider, I am sure insurance rates would come more in line with that of car insurance, making the motorcycle a more economically viable alternative to the car.

The public's perception of the motorcycle needs to be changed. During the 1990 election campaign I was interviewed by the press and they knew I owned a bike. One of the questions asked was, "Are you a biker?" When I asked what that meant, they responded, "Have you ever belonged to a gang?" I do ride a bike but, no, I have never belonged to a gang. These images have to be changed.

In contrast to having belonged to a gang, what I have done in conjunction with riding is to take my son on a 1,000-kilometre road trip to northern Ontario to visit his grandfather, and I found this was very well spent, quality time with my son. For all these reasons, and to help save our environment, I would like to see the government of Ontario promote the use of motorcycles as an alternative to the car.

Mr Mancini: I am pleased to have the opportunity to make a few brief comments on the resolution introduced by the member for Kitchener-Wilmot. I think it is imperative that the resolution be read into the record again. He moved, "That, in the opinion of this—

An hon member: Spare us.

Mr Mancini: No, it is important for us to get the true feeling and essence of this resolution. "That, in the opinion of this House, given that motorcycles use less of everything, the government of Ontario should promote the use of motorcycles." It is not often we get a resolution like this. It is not often that we get a resolution that is so wide-sweeping, impacts on so much of the government policy and gives the government members so much to think about.

We heard the member this morning, and I apologize for only hearing the last portion of his comments because I was in committee, talk about insurance and the high cost of insurance, and we know how the government feels about that. We know about its promises to bring in lower premiums for car owners through the use of public policy. We know they campaigned from Windsor to Ottawa and from Ottawa north and west to the Manitoba border telling citizen after citizen, "You vote for us, you give us your trust and we'll give you a public auto insurance scheme that will cause you to pay less for your insurance."

That is what they said. They got the votes. So I was surprised and I am sure my colleagues on this side of the House were surprised—

Mr McClelland: Shocked.

Mr Mancini: —some say "shocked"—to hear the honourable member for Kitchener-Wilmot bring up the issue of insurance and insurance premiums as it relates to the operators of motorcycles. Why would any government member, after having participated in repudiating the centre of his party's campaign platform, the centre of its manifesto, want to talk about premiums, auto insurance, motorcycle insurance, or anything of that nature? Why would any of them want to bring that subject up? Why would they?

They have broken their promise to give Ontario drivers lower premiums. They broke that solemn promise they made. Every New Democratic Party candidate in Ontario asked for votes based on government-owned car insurance, based on the fact that the premiums would be lower. The people believed them and trusted them, and they have broken that trust.

Why should we believe the honourable member for Kitchener-Wilmot is concerned about premiums motorcycle operators have to pay when he showed complete disregard for the premiums car drivers had to pay by repudiating the centre of the NDP platform, the core promise of his vote-getting scheme?

What else did the member talk about? He talked about safety. He talked about legislative authority and initiatives to make motorcycle riding a more pleasurable and more safe activity. That reminds me of something which came up in the estimates of the Ministry of Transportation just a day or two ago. It reminded me, after listening to the member, of what his colleagues had to say a number of weeks ago about bicycle safety and it reminded me of the speech given by the member for Windsor-Walkerville. It reminded me of the demonstration that he gave the House.

Mr Hope: You can't put any foot pedals on it.

Mr Mancini: Does the member for Chatham-Kent have to continually interrupt my speech? Is it part of the standing orders that he has that privilege?

The Deputy Speaker: Please go on.

Mr Mancini: It reminded me of the speech that my colleague the member for Windsor-Walkerville, who also campaigned on government-owned auto insurance and lower premiums, gave to the House on bicyclists wearing helmets. During that speech and in the estimates I recalled some of the words. I also recalled for the members of the committee and the Minister of Transportation the questions that I had raised in the Legislature that morning that were pooh-poohed by the government members. They want to make it mandatory, along with some other members in the House, that everyone who rides a bicycle wear a helmet. In principle, there is nothing wrong with that.

But I asked a number of questions. I said to them: "Have you consulted with the municipal police forces to see if they would be able to police such a new regulation? Have you had discussions with the municipalities to see where the extra money would come from when additional resources were put into specific policing?" Most important, "What would you do for families, large families or families whose finances would not allow parents to buy helmets?" Some of these helmets go from $40 to $80. If you have three or four children or if you have just lost your job, if you have just been laid off, maybe you cannot buy a helmet. Who would ensure that those children who could not be provided with a helmet would in fact be provided with one so that they could ride their bikes to school or to the corner store and partake in an activity that all of us, as young people, took for granted?

During those moments in the Legislature a number of weeks ago when I placed those questions there were cat-calls and I was interrupted but there were no answers to those questions. In the committee we got no answers from the minister on those questions.

I say to my honourable colleague the member for Kitchener-Wilmot, it rings hollow to me when I hear government members get up and speak about safety, speak about courses which are necessary, increased safety regulations which he deems to be necessary for motorcycle riders, when they have done absolutely nothing, taken no initiative whatsoever to answer any of my questions about the statement they made and the principles they espoused on helmets for bicyclists.

I say to my colleagues on this side of the House, why should we believe the honourable members opposite?

Mrs Caplan: You shouldn't.

Mr Mancini: My colleague the member for Oriole says that we should not believe them. Based on the government's performance, based on the performance of all of the backbenchers who come to the Legislature regularly to support the activities of their Premier and cabinet, we should not believe them. My colleague the member for Oriole is absolutely right. We should not believe them.

I understand that the member is a motorcycle enthusiast and I understand that is quite a thrilling sport and I understand from conversations that I have had with other motorcycle enthusiasts that there are certain things we can do to make the highways safer for all, to make this activity one not only for sports enthusiasts but for people who would like to use their motorcycles to go to work or any other legal activity they would like to undertake. I understand his interest in this matter and I understand his right to present this resolution to this House.

But I would say to the honourable member that he does his resolution some disservice by making it so wide-sweeping, by making it without any specific details in the body of his resolution. When we read that the government should promote the use of motorcycles because they use less of everything, it leads us to believe that maybe the member himself was not quite sure what the government should do and maybe he was looking towards other members of the House to find their views and to see what we could do to advise him.

We are willing to do that. We are willing to be of help to the member. We are probably willing to be of more help to the member than his cabinet colleagues will be, because as the Liberal Transportation critic I am willing to wager a glass of water that we will see absolutely no initiatives from this government on this honourable member's resolution in the next 12 months.

Mrs Caplan: You could bet the mortgage, never mind the water.

Mr Mancini: I would love to bet my mortgage, but we cannot. I say to the honourable member that we want to support him in making the highways safer for all who use the highways. We want to ensure that people who wish to ride their motorcycles to work or for social activities have that right and privilege and all the safety that goes with it, appropriate premiums, etc. We expect no action from the members opposite on that.

We will sit here patiently and we are prepared to support some of his initiatives, but I think he will find that he will get more support from us on these benches than he will from his own cabinet colleagues. I would like to conclude my remarks by saying that in a year's time or two years from now this will be just another NDP broken promise.

Mr Villeneuve: I too want to participate for a short time and share some of the time with my colleagues on this particular motion. I am quite prepared to support it, but I do not believe it will make very much difference to whether there are more or less motorcycles on the roads of Ontario. The interesting thing is I get a very confused message from this government right now. They were the ones that this spring said that the Golden Helmets OPP precision driving would be cut off. "We don't want you any more."

Yet in the same breath we have a member, a backbench member I will grant, come up and say, "We should encourage motorcycles and the use of motorcycles, because they are more fuel-efficient and what have you." That is a very different message than I got whenever the OPP Pipes and Drums band, which came to my town of Maxville to participate in our Highland games, was done away with. The Golden Helmets came to my rural areas on a number of occasions. I was very proud to have them there. They came and they entertained. They entertained as proud OPP officers, precision motorcycle drivers setting an example for exactly the type of legislation that is being suggested this morning. But they do not exist any more. A very confusing double standard. I have a problem with that.

I did some research and it is interesting. There are a number of very high-profile, well-known and well-accepted motorcycle groups across the province. The Harley Owners Group, very important people, I understand basically are in the salary range of $45,000 to $50,000 a year and are 40 years old and over. That is very interesting. I guess this is where that puts this particular member of the Legislature.

Mr Cooper: I am too young.

Mr Villeneuve: He is not 40 yet. I am sorry.

Mr Cooper: Mine's a Yamaha.

Mr Villeneuve: He has a Yamaha. Whether he is driving a Yamaha, a Honda, a Davidson, a Suzuki or whatever, they are all machines. My wife and I are the parents of five children and one thing we dreaded was that our son would want to purchase a motorcycle or that one of the boy-friends would come down the farm lane some day on one of these motorcycles.

It made us very nervous as parents, and I think rightly so, because I have some statistics here from the Ministry of Transportation. They go from 1984 to 1988, and they are a little bit alarming. I will quote—1984: 116 drivers killed, 19 passengers killed and almost 7,000 serious injuries; 1985: 97 drivers killed, 23 passengers killed, 6,000 serious injuries; 1986: 99 drivers killed, 15 passengers injured, almost 6,000 serious injuries; 1987: 120 drivers killed, 12 passengers killed and over 5,000 injuries; 1988—the statistics get better—only 76 drivers killed and 13 passengers killed.

One little mistake when you are on that motorcycle and you do not live to tell what happened. There is the problem. Some are lucky, but those are the real facts of life. I do not care about insurance at this stage of the game. I am talking about people who are either scarred or maimed for life or indeed gone from this world because of a slight mistake.

We have the reasons for some of these same accidents and I will not list them because time is of the essence. But it concerns me very much when someone has suggested that and there is nothing wrong with suggesting we should encourage, but with that goes the awareness of the danger of the vehicle. That must be first and foremost, and with that goes putting the OPP Golden Helmets precision riding team back in business to set the example. What is wrong with that? I did not see that as part of the member's motion. I could support his motion much more easily and readily if that were part of it.

"Institute tougher licensing requirements." I do not know who is going to buy the first motorcycle and who is going to buy the second motorcycle, but quite obviously we are talking about a smaller, slower machine for the first year and then as you realize how dangerous the machine can be you are licensed for something a little more. Experience is all part of the learning process.

Will the member clarify the Highway Traffic Act to outline and enshrine motorcyclists' rights? Let's face it, these people pay fuel tax and they pay for their licence. Sometimes it is only a motorcycle. For us as car drivers "Well, it's only a motorcycle." It is not only a motorcycle. It is a person or two people on a motorcycle and a life could well be at stake.

Will he include motorcycle awareness components in the training of OPP officers and in the training of new drivers who see the fun side of this but do not see the very dark side of it, which is injuries and death?

Will the member reinstate the Golden Helmets? I ask him to address that. Will he suggest to the Premier to reinstate the Golden Helmets? The cost was minimal. They were already on staff and they were very much appreciated by people particularly out in rural areas. On a number of occasions I had them in my communities. People—and young people—came out en masse and they were very proud to see the excellent job the Golden Helmets did.

Will he work with the municipalities to encourage parking laws and safety for motorcycle drivers?

I will speak from personal experience again. Certainly those members from northern Ontario know that at this time of year it can be very nice and warm on a particular Saturday morning and by the time Saturday night or early Sunday morning comes along, you could be in a snowstorm. I have experience. Coming home from the farm show in Ottawa, for example, at 2 o'clock in the morning I was following a motorcycle and it was snowing. It was a heavy snow. He was having trouble staying on the road and I can appreciate why. It was not easy for cars either. Those are the circumstances motorcycle drivers sometimes find themselves in—being victims of weather conditions. Certainly the weatherman can be of assistance, but we know he is not always correct.

Those are the perilous areas, the real areas of concern, where human life is involved. I am quite prepared to support the motion, and I would very much like to see the Golden Helmets come back.

Mr Mills: It is indeed a pleasure for me to stand in my place this morning and speak to the resolution of my colleague the honourable member for Kitchener-Wilmot. I do not intend to parlay the discussion of this resolution into some political battle, as the member across the way started off doing and as some of the other members tend to continue.

My experience in motorcycles goes back to 1944. I was living in England at the time and, rather foolishly—the war was winding down and the American troops who were in England were disposing of some of their assets over there—I was persuaded to purchase an Indian 500 they did not want to bring back to the United States. Having purchased this motorcycle, what I failed to take account of was that gasoline was rationed and I did not have anything to make it go on the road. I remember going down to the war surplus store and picking up this motorcycle and pushing it home, which was no easy feat.

At the time I was working on a farm, and we used to have German prisoners of war arrive every morning to work on the farm by way of an army truck, with two British soldiers as guards. The Speaker will appreciate this, as an ex-military man. I guess the guards must have had some hard nights, but they used to fall asleep and thus leave the truck unguarded. The Germans would come to me and say, “We can get you some gasoline for your motorcycle out of the truck, because the guards have fallen asleep, if you’ll give us a pack of cigarettes.” I must say I agreed to this arrangement and that allowed me to have gasoline to run a motorbike when, to all intents and purposes, all the motorcycles in the country were shut down.

It is rather interesting—and I just pass this along for members’ general information—that the policemen of the day over there were riding push-bikes. My good wife, whom I was courting at the time, lived some 15 miles away, and the pressures and urges of young love made me get my motorcycle out of the barn and ride it to visit her, knowing full well that I should not have done that. These Indian 500s have quite a purr to them and, being a young man, I really opened up this purr. It caught the attention of the local constabulary, because in the middle of the night, you wonder what is going on.

The next morning the policeman came to visit me on his push-bike and said he had heard and had reports of the exhaust of a motorcycle ringing through the countryside during the night. I said to him that he must be kind of nuts, because for me and for him there was no gasoline available to ride a motorcycle and where would I get such? He said, “Well, I’m just following up some reports on that and I just wanted to let you know.” That gave me the message that this foolishness would cease and I would keep the motorcycle in the barn until after the war, and then gasoline again was free for everybody to get.

Later on in my career I was a member of the Canadian Forces, as members know. During that time I had the opportunity to take proper courses on how to operate and maintain a motorcycle, and had the pleasure of being a dispatch rider, sort of, attached to the 2nd Battalion of the Canadian Guards. I had the pleasure of riding that motorcycle many, many times from Canadian Forces Base Petawawa way down to a Canadian Forces base in New Brunswick. I must say that was quite an experience. Through that motorcycle I was able, through my training, to effectively move large convoys of traffic through—I remember one particular city was Ottawa, which was no easy feat.

When I speak to this resolution, I am not a Johnny-come-lately-on-the-spot about motorcycles. I have heard my friend the member for Simcoe West, who is not here now, make some sort of comment that if you ride a motorcycle you are doomed to an early grave, and I think that as I stand here today I am living proof that you can ride a motorcycle carefully. It all depends upon proper training and proper respect for that vehicle. It does not necessarily mean that to promote motorcycles means you are doomed to a sudden death.

I think we have to go a long way to educate car drivers in the province that bicycles and motorcycles are indeed vehicles on the highway and they need and expect as much respect from car and truck drivers as other vehicles. I think therein lies the crux of some of the problems with the accidents that happen with motorcycles in our province today, that the respect for another person on a vehicle that does not necessarily have four wheels is lacking.

In a time of economic crunch, I can see that a motorcycle makes very good sense in so far as it uses less of everything. It uses less gasoline. You can park about five motorcycles in a space occupied by a car. I have some difficulty in coming to grips with the winter weather in Ontario in so far as the use of a motorcycle goes. That is a real challenge, to say the least.

Nevertheless, I think the member’s resolution is with good intent. He means it to be taken in its presentation, and I am sure that, like him, I remain very perturbed that such a harmless resolution, such a meaningful resolution, should be taken in such a political, partisan way and ripped to pieces in here.

I would also like to pay particular attention, as the member for Kitchener-Wilmot did, to the charity work that motorcycle riders do in Ontario. They are very well known for riding and raising money for all kinds of charities and I think that is very worthy. It just goes to show that sometimes people use the connotation that motorcycle people are a little bit less than we are, and that is not true. I know some very well-off doctors and dentists who ride motorcycles on the weekend and partake in these efforts to raise money for so many worthwhile charities in Ontario.

In closing, I commend my colleague and friend the member for Kitchener-Wilmot for bringing this very topical item to debate, and I thank the members for the time I have had here to debate it.

Mr Bradley: I find it passing strange, first of all, that a member of the government that is withdrawing the funding for the Ontario Provincial Police Golden Helmets, a group which is noted for maintaining the traditions of the province of Ontario, would be promoting at the same time the use of motorcycles.

The second thing I would note is that the people in St Catharines who are represented by Local 199 and Local 676 of the Canadian Auto Workers may be just a bit concerned about the fact that their automobiles would not be promoted to the same extent if there were promotion of motorcycles in Ontario.

I think one has to be very careful. It is a matter of choice. There are some people who are going to enjoy the use of a motorcycle and find that it is to their liking and to their benefit. There are others who are going to enjoy the use of automobiles in Ontario. They of course will reflect, as I do, upon the fact that there are many people employed in the automobile industry, represented so ably by the Canadian Auto Workers in St Catharines and other communities across the province.

My concern is certainly that. I will relay that concern to my good friends on the executive of the Canadian Auto Workers in St Catharines and indicate to them that the NDP is promoting motorcycles to the detriment of automobiles in this province.

Mr J. Wilson: I am very pleased to have a minute or two to express my opposition to this resolution put forward by the NDP member. It is probably the most vague, unrealistic resolution I have ever heard of being put forward in Parliament. The member for Oakville South had a very serious resolution in the last hour that the government is not going to support, something that would have actually done some good for the taxpayers of this province, and here we have a resolution that says because motorcycles use less of everything, we should promote their use.

This does not even make any sense. It is useless. The explanatory remarks from the member are pretty useless in the context of my experience. I used to work at Earl Rowe Provincial Park in Alliston and we had motorcycle gangs for many years. I will not, on behalf of my constituents, support a resolution that may bring back the possibility of motorcycle gangs. Wasaga Beach is cleaned up now, but for many years there was a very dangerous situation there. We had a tremendous number of OPP officers assigned to the Wasaga Beach detachment during the summertime to deal with the motorcycle gangs.

Interjection.

Mr J. Wilson: It was not in the 1950s because I was not alive in the 1950s. It was during my lifetime.

Second, I have a vision. I expect the members of the government to show leadership, if this resolution passes, by getting rid of their drivers, chauffeurs and limousines, which they criticized both the Liberals and the Conservatives for having for many years. But I am not sure I really want to encourage that, because my vision is that the unruly gang of former garbage truck drivers and motorcyclists and God knows what else who now run our government will be travelling down Highway 400 as Bob Rae's motorcycle gang, coming into your riding. Can members imagine what a scary picture that would be? I thought motorcycle gangs going into Wasaga Beach were scary in the past, but to see the NDP caucus gang come into your riding would be a scary sight indeed, and I fear for the lives of my constituents and their wellbeing.

Mr Mills: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I take exception to the member referring to the members of this government as ex-garbage truck drivers. That is not true and I would ask him to withdraw that.

The Deputy Speaker: There are times when language used in this House goes a bit too far. There are times when certain language is used that more or less entices people to get angry. It is as simple as that. This is not a point of privilege, but it is certainly a point for me to tell you that you should be careful in the type of language you use in order not to offend each other. It is as simple as that.

Mr Martin: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I was going to say that even if I were a former garbage truck driver I would have been proud of that job and that profession.

Mr J. Wilson: I will be careful—

Mr Frankford: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would also like to point out to the members that in my training in London, when I was in medical school, I rode a motor scooter. I would like that to be added to the record.

The Deputy Speaker: I think I have heard enough points of order on that issue. I ask the member for Simcoe West to continue the debate.

Mr J. Wilson: These frivolous points of order are taking up our party's time here in the Legislature. I will point out that the Minister of Energy used to be a part-time driver for Dusty's Disposal Service, so for the member for Durham East to tell me it is not true—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. When the Speaker stands, it is normal procedure that the member should take his seat. I just want to remind the member for Simcoe West that you still have three minutes and six seconds to debate the issue. You do not want to take advantage of it?

Mr J. Wilson: No, I have sat down.

Mr Turnbull: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: My colleague had sat down before that point of order was raised, and in fact you let the clock continue to run, so it was subtracted—

Interjection.

Mr Turnbull: It was not a point of order because everything my colleague said was absolutely correct. Mr Speaker, I would ask that you add the two minutes on to the clock.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you very much, but the Chair rules that there will not be any time given back. We will continue. I think it is a lesson for all of us that we should make sure debates are conducted properly.

Mr Hansen: I am proud to speak on this particular private member's notice of motion.

Mr J. Wilson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: My point of order—in fact it may be a point of privilege—is that I gather your ruling is that my debate was not conducted properly, and I find that offensive.

The Deputy Speaker: I made a ruling and as you know the standing orders are very clear. You cannot challenge the Chair.

Mr Hansen: I have to say to the member for Simcoe West that my dad was a motorcycle rider. He rode in the war. I took up riding a motorcycle when I was going to college. My son is in college and he owns a motorcycle also. It is very good alternative transportation, especially for long distances if there is no public transportation available. I would say that our government likes to recognize all sectors of transportation—not just transportation, but whatever it is.

The fabric here in Ontario is that there are quite a few people who do things in a different way, and some of them like riding bikes. I was a sponsor this last May for the Bikers Rights Organization of Ontario. For the first time they had a podium on the steps of Queen's Park to relay to Queen's Park and to people in Ontario what they are looking at as motorcycle riders. The member for Simcoe West has the wrong impression of motorcycle riders. I think that by coming out to one of these rallies, he will have a different impression. I think it is a stereotyped image that has developed over the years. We have to take a look at what a motorcycle rider is today compared to maybe 30 years ago with Hell's Angels. Not everybody out there belongs to Hell's Angels. Times are changing.

There are a few things that even the previous government has done. At one time bikers were not allowed to come and camp in provincial parks. There has been some change, some giving by the past government to give the bikers rights equal to those a car driver has.

I have to say too that during the war we exercised rationing when rationing was necessary. That is why a lot of people were riding motorcycles. This is one thing that puts down on pollution. I heard Pollution Probe yesterday outside Queen's Park talking about how maybe we should be taxing that second car a little bit more, or how maybe if there is already transportation in a particular area, there should be extra fees for using roads in that area. These are ideas from Pollution Probe. They are not government suggestions but suggestions from the public out there.

Something that came up on the insurance issue is that 35% of the insurance is purchased from a company outside Ontario and Quebec. In 1989, the latest statistics I have, income was $38 million and expenses were $25 million for the insurance companies, which gave them a 35% return on their money. One thing members have to understand is that while there is a popular perception that motorcycles are a bad risk for insurers, it is a fact that motorcycle insurance generally is far more profitable than automobile insurance. Ministry of Transportation figures indicate there has been an improvement in motorcycle safety resulting in lowered accident and fatality rates. The other thing is that the average age of motorcyclists in Ontario is increasing.

I have met with the bikers' rights organization and their whole thrust is on safety on the highway. As my friend stated earlier, they would like to get a learner's permit that would have a small bike, 125 cc and under. You would have to hold that for 180 days, and then you would go into a probationary licence that would be for 365 days, during which you would still be on a smaller bike. After you have completed 365 days, you would wind up going to a class M motorcycle licence with full riding privileges. Some of the restrictions would be that a learner would not be able to ride a half-hour before sunset or a half-hour before sunrise and would have to have a zero blood alcohol content. If you accumulate six demerit points, there would be suspension of the learner's permit.

This is coming from the motorcycle riders. It is what they are looking at. They are looking at their own lives and they want people out there to be aware that they are on the road too. They pay to have a licence. They have a right to also be on the roads here in Ontario, not just automobiles. I think this is what they have been trying to put across for a long time. There are 145,000 licensed motorcycle riders out there, and we cannot ignore those riders.

Mr Turnbull: In my abbreviated time I would comment that I am extremely disturbed that the members of the governing party find it necessary to bring such trivial motions forward in private members' hour. My good friend the member for Kitchener-Wilmot certainly has told me that he does not have enough time to ride his bike and I have a lot of sympathy. I will be voting against this, not because I have anything against motorbike riding, but I do have a few comments to make.

Surely this government should be trying to promote this province, and to my knowledge there are no motorbikes made in this province or in Canada. Here in Canada the automobile companies are struggling to make efficient, safe automobiles. Surely, given the fact that many of the large bikes today cost more than small automobiles, it would be in our best interests, if we are going to bring something forward, to try and promote their efforts.

If the member were to suggest that perhaps Bernard Ostry, the chairman of TVO, and his successor were to have motorbikes, I would say that would be a great idea when we consider that the taxpayers of this province paid in excess of $50,000 for his chauffeur last year until our party pointed this out.

It has been suggested that we encourage the practice of ministers going around on motorbikes. I would say absolutely not. Ministers have a very busy schedule, and we certainly want to make sure that on the way to their various functions, they learn the speeches their high-paid contract speechwriters have written for them. God help us that they should have an accident trying to learn the words or having them read for them if they have difficulty.

The automobile is surely a safer vehicle to be riding in here in Canada. In the summer, motorbikes might be relatively safe, but they are not very safe on winter roads in Canada. I do not want to be negative about this. I just want to say that I think the government should surely consider bringing forward more constructive private members' resolutions rather than wasting our time with this kind of effort. We are not against the motorbike riders, but we do not think the government should do anything to promote motorbike riding. It should do everything to promote the economy of Ontario, and that would mean safer, fuel-efficient cars and making sure we emphasize the made-in-Ontario aspect of it.

Mr Hope: In the short time I have, I would like to contradict some of the things that have been put forward today. What we are talking about is for the people out there to be safer-minded about using motorcycles, promoting the use of motorcycles. Those of us in rural Ontario, and I am speaking on behalf of the biking club in my community, do not have the luxury of GO Transit and other transits that are there.

I heard the member for St Catharines saying, "Well, your CAW friends will be upset with you." A lot of our auto worker friends will still be happy, because there still are certain times of the year we need the automobile, the car. But for us who travel back and forth to work, the motorcycle is cheaper on gasoline and is not as hard on the roads. It is very important for those of us who do not have high-wage values, when we need a second vehicle, to have the ability to purchase that second vehicle, because motorcycles are cheaper.

The statistics that were put out earlier, I must mention, did not tell members how many people are actually killed in car accidents. This resolution is not very detailed for the simple fact that we did not want to confuse the opposition. We wanted to keep it simple so they understand that what this government wants to do is promote safety in the use of motorcycles, promote their use, make sure we use them wisely and help the people of rural Ontario, who do not have the luxury of other transit, to take advantage of them.

Mr Cooper: I think most of the concerns raised by the opposition members have been covered by the members on this side. I started off this resolution saying it was to generate a broad-based discussion on the use of motorcycles. I think we have achieved that this time.

The second part was to change perceptions. As we have seen from the members opposite, the perception is that all motorcycle riders are gang members or long-haired hippies with tattoos and earrings.

I have ridden in groups. I have ridden with my union brothers on day trips. I have ridden with church members. I attend a United Brethren Mennonite church. The assistant pastor has a bike. We got a group of 15 church members together and went on a tour. We had some spiritual enrichment while we were out doing this. It was a day that was filled with quality, because we were out with our wives. That is the recreation aspect.

But I am not talking of recreation here; I am talking about an alternative form of transportation. I think motorcycles use less gas and cause fewer pollution problems, such as the tire dump problem that filters in here. I was hoping to get more constructive comments from the opposition, which I did not get.

Mr J. Wilson: Then put forward a more constructive resolution.

Mr Cooper: As for this being a trivial resolution, I think it is a very important one because it shows our commitment to the environment of this province. As for the economy of this province and my auto worker friends, if we had more motorcycle use, we could probably put on pressure and get some motorcycle manufacturing going here.

I thank the members on this side for supporting this resolution, and I am sure the members opposite will, in principle, support this.

The Deputy Speaker: The time provided for private members' public business has expired, but before we start to vote, I would just like to give you a few words of wisdom. Let me read from Erskine May, "Good temper and moderation are the characteristics of parliamentary language."

Mrs Caplan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker—

The Deputy Speaker: I will not accept any point of order. I am about to proceed to a vote.

Mrs Caplan: I think it is an important point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: I will listen to it, then.

Mrs Caplan: I think your interjection and the wisdom you shared with the House were very valuable. Certainly, members have to be reminded from time to time that language, the use of words, can incite behaviour in the House that is unbecoming. Your interjection was timely, and I want to thank you as part of my point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Mr Cooper has moved resolution 29.

Motion agreed to.

The House recessed at 1212.

AFTERNOON SITTING

The House resumed at 1330.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

DONATION BY PHARMACEUTICAL MANUFACTURERS

Mr Henderson: Many honourable members will share my sense of the tragedy of suffering and poverty in some Third World nations.

Several Ontario pharmaceutical manufacturers have made a significant contribution to the alleviation of shortage and suffering in Third World Latin America through a donation of medications with a total value of about 30,000.

Members will know that many Latin American nations are reaching very actively to develop stronger economic, trade, cultural and other ties with Ontario and Canada. Besides satisfying our altruistic wish to help less wealthy peoples, that can benefit Ontario as well. There is a real chance for Ontario to benefit by seizing the initiative in broadening our interchange with Latin America.

I applaud the generosity of these Canadian pharmaceutical manufacturers and especially wish to thank Richard Denyak of Nu-Pharm Inc, Leslie Dan of Novopharm Ltd, Ron Fofo of Genpharm Ltd, Saul Magder of Taro Pharmaceuticals Inc and Bernard Sherman of Apotex Inc.

VISITORS

Mr Carr: We are fortunate today to have in the members' gallery a group study exchange team from Rotary District 9750 in Australia. The five men are visiting Rotary District 7070 in Toronto and are accompanied today by Mr John Gregory, who is the chairman of international service for the Rotary Club of Toronto.

The team is here to learn about Canada and our way of life. They are midway through a five-week stay and have been living with Canadian families and touring Canadian industries and manufacturing firms, looking at various facets of commerce, law, education and government.

We welcome Graeme Watchers, Sam Carella, Nevelle Stephenson, Paul Brady, Kevin Barrington and Phillip Glutz and wish them an enjoyable visit and a speedy return to Ontario.

OPENING OF UNIVERSITY BUILDING

Ms Carter: On Saturday, the Minister of Colleges and Universities will be coming to my riding to open the new environmental sciences building at Trent University. Imaginatively designed by Vancouver architect Richard Henriquez to blend in with the existing buildings designed by the late Ron Thom, this $9-million addition to Trent houses the departments of biology, geography, environmental and resource studies and watershed ecosystems.

The university launched a major fund-raising campaign to pay for this building, which has been successful. In addition to funding for the building from the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, the Ministry of the Environment provided generous funding for a toxicity testing laboratory which Trent scientists will operate on contract to the ministry. Other research projects are funded by private industry.

Trent currently has environmental research teams studying atmospheric and botanical impacts of greenhouse gases, ozone layer depletion, acidification and solar energy. Toxicology studies are examining the transport of toxins through ecosystems and attempting to predict any harmful effects from them. Other research aims at developing strategies for rehabilitating lakes, wetlands, mine tailings and depleted species of plants and animals.

The new building and its research laboratories will be open to the public at an open day on Sunday. The research work in this building will play a significant role in helping to protect our environment for future generations.

DIABETES

Mrs Fawcett: Today I rise to lend my support to those from my riding who have expressed their very real concerns with this NDP government's projected $1-billion cutback in health care and how this will especially affect those with diabetes.

Last year I participated in the Diabetes Celebrity Challenge and gained a better understanding and appreciation of how this disease can affect one's daily life. I learned even more when I had the opportunity to speak with Ken McColm on his incredible journey.

Great strides have been made to expand programs in diabetic care. There is an urgent need to build on these achievements and to improve the services for diabetic persons.

Diabetes knows no barriers, yet it has been proven that seniors, natives and those living in rural communities are the most susceptible to this debilitating disease. In total, over one million Canadians have diabetes.

I remind this government that wise management of health dollars will mean less costly expenditures in the future. Proper care and education of persons with diabetes could mean better health and productivity, shorter hospital stays, fewer complications and a better quality of life. Diabetes is the second leading cause of hospital treatment.

I sincerely hope that as this government attempts to control its runaway spending, it will look to sound management of ministry dollars and careful consideration of the over one million Canadians who suffer from diabetes.

TOBACCO TAXES

Mr Villeneuve: Members may know that in the last seven years Ontario's revenue from tobacco sales has virtually doubled. The tobacco tax now brings in over $1 billion, almost double the entire budget of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food. Tobacco revenue has increased by some $457 million, but our agricultural budget has gone up by only $288 million. More than that, one quarter of the agricultural budget is nothing more than a property tax rebate for school and municipal taxes paid on producing fields, orchards and their service buildings.

In the region of Haldimand-Norfolk, there has been a very unfortunate relationship between tobacco and property taxes. Tobacco taxation has driven many tobacco farmers out of business. We all know that. High tobacco taxes have reduced the value of properties and farms on the Norfolk side of the region. The result is that under the last reassessment the Haldimand side is now paying much higher property taxes.

This is not the fault of the residents of Haldimand. The value of their properties and their wealth has not skyrocketed in the last four years at all. They have not received a bounty of new municipal services. And it is certainly not the fault of tobacco growers in Norfolk. There are no equally valuable crops to replace the tobacco that is being grown on the sandy soils.

If the government expects to collect huge taxes from tobacco, it should be willing to use that money to help the farmers and property taxpayers in areas hurt by that same tobacco tax.

BLOCK PARENTS PROGRAM

Mr Mills: It is currently Block Parents week in the town of Bowmanville, which is located in my riding of Durham East. I would like to remind members of the importance of this community project.

The Block Parents program plays a crucial role in keeping children safe in our neighbourhoods. Children can go to Block Parents for help in an emergency. For example, they can seek help if they are being bothered by strangers or if they are feeling unwell. A Block Parents home is easily identified by a red and white sign in the window. This sign tells children that the home is a safe place to go if they need help.

The program has been very successful and has spread to communities throughout the province. Local police forces are pleased to give advice on how to set one up. Any community resident over the age of 18 can become a Block Parent after police screening. It is a great way to serve one's community and I strongly encourage all citizens to get involved.

This program is an excellent example of co-operation between parents, teachers and the police. It shows how effective crime prevention can be when citizens and the police work together. I fully support the Block Parents program and encourage all members in the House to support it as well.

CLOSING OF TREE NURSERIES

Mr Miclash: We on this side of the House are very concerned about the planned Ministry of Natural Resources closing of tree nursery programs in Orono, Dryden and Thessalon.

Let me read a letter from a tree nursery worker from Dryden which he recently wrote me:

"Dear Mr Miclash,

"I'm a concerned worker who has worked for Dryden Nursery for a number of years. I work on a summer basis and need the income to make ends meet. Most of the other employees need it to make ends meet too. If the jobs are taken away, they would have to cut staff to one third of what they employ now.

"Dryden needs those jobs just as Thunder Bay. Most employed by the tree nursery are older workers and have not had the opportunity of proper education.

"I do not think in all fairness these jobs should be sent elsewhere. The size of this is greater than one might expect. We the workers will not stand for the uprooting of our jobs.

"I'm greatly opposed to sending Thunder Bay our jobs. Do you think if the shoe was on the other foot that they would let us have their jobs without a fight? I think not."

I have received a number of these letters and a good number of phone calls from some very concerned workers, workers who I think have a real strong sense of what they do in our areas of these three tree nurseries. I would just ask that the government take another good look at what it plans doing in terms of moving these jobs out of areas that very much need them.

HOSPITAL FINANCING

Mr J. Wilson: The proposal for massive staff cuts and bed closures at Toronto Hospital is another example of how Ontario hospitals are being forced to go it alone while this government sits on its hands.

Three years ago, the then Leader of the Opposition, now Premier, said in a news release:

"Ontario's health care system is on a collision course with Elinor Caplan and the Liberals' fatal prescription for health care. The Liberal government's hatchet job on hospital funding, combined with their broken promises on health care, has produced a growing list of casualties across the province.

"Bed closures and program and staff cuts are becoming a standard response to the Liberals' crusade on hospitals."

By now, no one in Ontario is surprised to learn that the NDP election promises were simply put together so they could con enough people into voting for them, but the people of Ontario are surprised to see just how silent the Premier and his caucus are on issues such as hospital bed closures that once were so sacred to the NDP before they inherited the government benches.

One half of all the hospitals in Ontario are forced to carry deficits because the government of Ontario continues to mandate programs and services on to the backs of hospital boards without a cheque from Queen's Park to pay for these services and wage settlements. It is unthinkable that residents in Ontario, who are paying more and more in taxes, now have less and less in the way of services under this NDP government.

In view of these circumstances, I want the Minister of Health and her government to immediately provide a coherent, co-ordinated plan for Ontario hospitals so they can retire their operating budgets without having to randomly slash services.

OKTOBERFEST

Ms Haeck: Oktoberfest is wunderbar. Those who visit Kitchener-Waterloo will agree with that.

There is another Oktoberfest in Ontario. On October 26 and 27, everyone is invited to St Catharines to participate and partake in the fun. This weekend will see bands laying, dancers dancing and even a re-enactment of the original reason for Munich's festival; that is, the wedding of King Ludwig's daughter in the early 1800s.

St Catharines is located in festival country. Throughout the year all and sundry can enjoy an array of activity: Folkarts, the Sausage Festival, the Niagara Grape and Wine Festival and now Oktoberfest.

A lot of credit must be given to the organizer of this festival, Mr Steve Ruf. Steve is credited with being the founder of Folkarts, two weeks of multicultural celebrations which have been taking place for over 23 years. Nine years ago he was integral to the start of the Sausage Festival, an activity which again demonstrates his energy and his commitment to the city of St Catharines. Now there is Oktoberfest. Steve truly deserves the local chamber of commerce award for his festival activities. I extend to Steve and his co-celebrants my wishes for a successful weekend. Ein prosit.

LAND REGISTRATION

The Speaker: On Thursday last, the member for Dufferin-Peel raised a question of privilege with respect to a matter in which I had given a decision on Tuesday, October 15, 1991, concerning remarks made in a court of law by a lawyer representing the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations on a matter which was before a committee of the House.

On October 15, I ruled that this was a matter which was specifically before the standing committee on general government and, as such, ought to be settled in the committee and not in the House.

I reiterate that this matter may only be brought before the House by way of a report from the committee. I did not ask or instruct the committee to report back to me or the House. Whether a report is made to the House on this matter is for the committee itself to decide. I do not propose to hear further submissions on this matter.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

Mr Conway: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Earlier this week, you ruled on the question of statements being made outside the House. I found it quite an interesting ruling. I was particularly struck by your reference to Mr Speaker Weatherill who gave, I thought, some very timely advice in the Mother of Parliaments on July 16, 1991.

I understand very much what you are trying to tell all of us, and in particular members of the executive council. I will say as well that I understand some of the pressures that are on any executive council in these matters, but I want to bring to your attention, sir, an incident yesterday that I find about as offensive and as obnoxious as anything I have witnessed in a long time.

Let me just tell you what happened, Mr Speaker, in light of your very sage counsel. Yesterday, outside the very doors of this place, an agent of the Attorney General was passing out a news release containing very significant, and I think positive, policy on behalf of the government with respect to advice and directives to crown attorneys across the province regarding victims of sexual assault.

My colleague the member for Eglinton raised this very point three or four weeks ago in a good exchange. An extremely sensitive and important public policy was raised in this House, and not for the first time. Just three days after your ruling, a member of the staff of the Attorney General stood right outside this chamber at the end of question period and distributed a positive, timely and important announcement of public policy with respect to the protection of victims of sexual assault.

I find it breathtaking and mind-boggling that this government, particularly on an issue of such sensitivity to all members, would do something as offensive and obnoxious as to stand right outside the front doors of this legislative chamber and hand out a statement of government policy that we all have a very real interest in and, I suspect, a strong and real support for. I want to register my most deep-seated personal complaint on this kind of ongoing manipulation and offensive attitude to this Legislative Assembly, something that I have to believe my friends Donald MacDonald, Stephen Lewis and the late Jim Renwick would have found even more obnoxious and offensive than I do this day.

Hon Mr Cooke: Mr Speaker, I would be glad to look into the matter. I might also point out to you that when this matter was raised a couple of weeks ago, the House leaders had a discussion. We said we would make our best effort to correct problems that offended the opposition with respect to announcements. The opposition House leaders agreed that if there was a problem and if a particular announcement were made outside the Legislature that they felt should be made in here, they would make sure they got on the phone and talked to me about it so we could try to correct it.

Until now I have heard nothing from the official opposition. I am trying to work with the opposition House leaders, but if they do not want to follow through with their own agreements, it is hard to do that.

Interjection.

The Speaker: We do not need to debate this. Would the member take his seat for a moment, please.

To the member for Renfrew North, I appreciate his observation on the remarks which I made earlier in this chamber. Indeed, I believe I expressed on that occasion that I shared the view expressed earlier by Speaker Weatherill in the House of Commons in England. I stand by that observation. The member also knows the rules are quite clear with respect to the opportunity to make statements in the House.

To the government House leader, if there is a demonstrated willingness to co-operate on this matter, that of course will be appreciated, I take it, not only by the Speaker but by all members of the assembly. Hopefully that process will begin to take shape. If in that process the office of the Speaker, in the capacity as described, can be of any assistance, then of course the Speaker is more than delighted to provide any assistance in making it a more smooth operation here in the chamber.

Mr Bradley: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: The government House leader has said that the opposition House leaders are supposed to go and tell him when a problem exists. It has happened several times. Surely somebody over there is giving the orders one way or another. Either the Premier has a strategy to deliberately avoid the House, which I think he has, or he has not. If he has not, then he should tell his ministers to start making their announcements in the House instead of playing the game they played yesterday.

The Speaker: The member for St Catharines knows it is not a point of privilege, but the Speaker knows it is a point of frustration.

Ms Poole: For me, this goes beyond a point of order; it is a point of personal privilege, Mr Speaker: On September 24 in this Legislature I specifically asked the Attorney General about his plans to ameliorate the effects of the Supreme Court decision on the rape shield law for the women of this province. I specifically mentioned training. I specifically mentioned crown counsel and some of the objectives he had said he was going to pursue. Outside this House, at the same time as the Attorney General's staff was handing out this press release, a member of the press asked the Attorney General, "Why are you not mentioning this in the House?" The answer from the Attorney General was that this was not a legislative matter; this was a legal matter.

Because I raised this in the House almost a month ago, surely this minister should be sensitive that this is a matter of great interest to the members of this House and the women of this province. If this Attorney General cannot seem to get that through his head, I suspect the Premier should be looking for a new Attorney General.

The Speaker: The member for Eglinton knows this is not a point of privilege. The matter has been addressed earlier, both by the member for Renfrew North and in a statement which was delivered to this House earlier by myself.

Mr Ruprecht: Mr Speaker—

The Speaker: Is this a different matter? Do you have a point of order?

Mr Ruprecht: Mr Speaker, if I can say one sentence, please, I want to tell you these are not isolated incidents. You will remember my discussion with the Minister of Tourism and Recreation about statements that had not been made in the House but were dropped on the way to the press room. They were not even indicated by a press release. If our residents and constituents are affected by announcements that ought to be made here, then we must really strenuously object to this kind of process.

The Speaker: Would the member take his seat. The member knows this is not a point of privilege. It has been addressed several times.

On a new matter, the member for York Centre.

Mr Sorbara: I want to rise on a point of order simply to advise you, sir, that what the Attorney General has done in this House would represent professional misconduct in the practice and profession he engages in.

The Speaker: Would the member take his seat, please. There is nothing out of order. It is time for ministerial statements.

Mrs Cunningham: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: On the issue of ministers' statements in the House as discussed by the House leaders, speaking for our caucus, expect that we would not have to pick up the phone after the fact. What we would like is for the ministers to make their statements in this House.

Maybe we have a new beginning today, right this very moment. I see there are two ministerial statements. None of us expects to have to have to phone, and surely the government House leader does not want a phone call after the fact. All of us, the representatives of the people of Ontario, should be expecting to hear from ministers in this House. I want to make that point very strongly. Hopefully we have a new beginning today.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

SALARY OF ONTARIO HYDRO CHAIRMAN

Hon Mr Ferguson: With regard to the controversy surrounding executive salaries at Ontario Hydro, I would like to make an announcement. Effective today, the salary of the chairman of Ontario Hydro, Mr Marc Eliesen, has been set at 80% of the salary paid to the Ontario Hydro president. This means Mr Eliesen will be paid at a rate of $260,000 a year. This formula is consistent with the compensation formula established by the former Conservative government for the previous Hydro chair and chief executive officer.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Will the minister take his seat, please. It would be very helpful if all members on both sides of the House could wait quietly and patiently and allow the minister to make a statement, after which there will be an opportunity for responses.

Hon Mr Ferguson: I find it somewhat inconsistent, Mr Speaker, that they complain about our not making statements in the House and when we do—

The Speaker: The minister will continue with his statement, please.

Hon Mr Ferguson: As for benefits, those paid to Mr Eliesen will be consistent with guidelines for Ontario Hydro executives and Ontario government deputy ministers.

Salaries paid to senior executives at Hydro are set, by policy established at the time of the previous Liberal government, at rates 25% below private sector salaries for executives with similar responsibilities.

Having said this, however, let me confirm that the whole matter of compensation for senior executives at Ontario Hydro has been referred to the Ontario Energy Board. We expect the board to make its report by the end of August 1992 as part of its review of Hydro's annual rate request.

In making today's announcement, I want to express the government's appreciation to Mr Eliesen, who came forward to assist us in putting an end to this controversy. Mr. Eliesen has already requested the Ontario Hydro board of directors to cancel the employment contract agreed to by the board in August. His initiative in this case is consistent with his outstanding record of public service, which was recognized by the former Liberal government when it appointed him Deputy Minister of Energy in April 1990.

As to the question of responsibilities at Ontario Hydro, Mr. Eliesen will serve as chair, with chief executive responsibilities for overall stewardship of the utility. Mr. Al Holt will serve as president and chief operating officer. This combination will provide Hydro with the strong leadership it needs to meet the challenges at hand, which are to keep its own costs in line, rehabilitate the electricity system and support the government's policy of promoting energy efficiency and managing demand.

As a final note on the question of salaries, Bill 118, which governs the relationship between Ontario Hydro and the government, will be amended so that the responsibility for deciding compensation for the Ontario Hydro chair and chief executive officer will remain with the government.

Further, I want to say to the leader of the third party and the member for Renfrew North that the allegations they made in this House about Mr. Eliesen's character and details of Mr. Eliesen's pension arrangements at Hydro were completely incorrect. Mr. Eliesen never had any special consideration with respect to his Hydro pension. I am sure the honourable members opposite will want to correct the record.

SKILLS TRAINING ACTIVITÉS DE FORMATION

Hon Mr Allen: It gives me great pleasure to announce that I have signed today, on behalf of the province of Ontario, the Canada-Ontario labour force development agreement.

In the first year of the agreement, the federal government will contribute $846 million for training in Ontario, and Ontario will contribute $751 million, for a total of $1.6 billion. Federal funding levels are expected to be similar in the second and third years of the agreement, which came into force retroactively on April 1, 1991. The figures for the first year of the agreement represent an increase of 33% over the amount, $463 million, received last year.

The agreement is not a renewal of an old agreement. It is a new agreement, inextricably linked to this government's strategy for renewing the economy in Ontario. This is also a much fairer agreement. It represents a more equitable share of the federal training dollars for Ontario and redresses the previously inadequate funding levels negotiated by other governments in this place. It is a measure of this government's success in ensuring that the federal government responds to Ontario's priorities for economic renewal and recognizes the special adjustment challenges we face.

L'entente est un bon reflet du succès de ce gouvernement à s'assurer que le gouvernement fédéral réponde aux priorités de l'Ontario en matière de renouvellement économique et reconnaisse que nous faisons face à des pressions particulières quant aux adaptations nécessaires.

The agreement sets out specific areas of responsibility for each level of government and strengthens the co-operation between them. For instance, both governments will participate in programs to increase access to training for women, aboriginal peoples, racial minorities and people with disabilities—that is the designated list for the federal government—but in addition, the federal government has also agreed to our request to include for special priority in these programs social assistance recipients, francophones, the unemployed and older workers.

De plus, le gouvernement fédéral a aussi accepté d'inclure les bénéficiaires de l'aide sociale, les francophones, les chômeurs et les travailleurs et travailleuses âgés dans ces programmes.

The federal government has also agreed to lift its cap, which has been in place for some years, on funding for apprenticeship training and to provide more timely income support for apprentices.

Improved access to federal and provincial training programs will be a priority for both levels of government. The federal government has agreed, for example, to allow unemployed workers to receive unemployment insurance benefits while they participate in language, literacy, basic education and skills training programs.

The Canada-Ontario labour force development agreement also reaffirms the importance of the province's college system in the delivery of training programs. Minimum base funding for colleges will be $104.8 million in 1991-92 and 1992-93, although funding, because of the transfer the federal government wishes to make to private sector training, will fall to $75.5 million in 1993-94.

To address this reduction in third-year transfer payments, the agreement establishes, right from the outset, new mechanisms to guarantee colleges fair access to new federal training funds. For example, the federal government has agreed to give Ontario's colleges advance notice of federally funded training initiatives. Also, the federal government has agreed to inform third parties of the vital role our colleges play in the training programs of this province.

Colleges will also be among the key players in the local planning process, identifying and addressing local training needs. They will be consulted on the mandate of the new local training and adjustment boards, which will be designated and funded by both governments, and will be invited to have representatives on these boards that will make important decisions about local training allocations.

These new boards will play a key role in the training strategy of this government as a part of our overall economic renewal package, and I will be announcing further training initiatives that will follow this one in the coming weeks.

RESPONSES

Mr Conway: On the first announcement, all I can say is that I am pleased we are making some progress. It could not be clearer that this government's Hydro policy as outlined in Bill 118 is increasingly a shambles.

I want to say with all due respect how much I appreciate the support I have received in my campaign with respect to Marc Eliesen, who launched a money and power grab in Bill 118 that has begun to really concern and offend not just me and members of the opposition, but, happily, a growing number of my good friends in the government, because they know what they can defend and what they cannot defend out in Ontario. I repeat that this kind of money grab and power grab Mr Eliesen wrote for himself with the original Bill 118 has been stopped to some extent, and I want to congratulate all members who had some role in that rollback.

It is interesting because in this Hydro policy, as in the policy regarding the retail store hours issue or so many other areas, this government does not know what it is doing. On Monday the Premier himself stood up in this House and told me it would be inappropriate for him to prejudge the Ontario Energy Board review, that it would be inappropriate for the Premier to pass judgement on the salary question. He said that in this place but three days ago. I want to say that I am pleased to see that the Premier, in response to growing parliamentary and public pressure, has changed his mind. But let it not be lost that the Clampetts have moved from Beverly Hills to the Treasury bench at Queen's Park. This gang does not know what it is doing.

I want to say that we have seen now, in the last two or three weeks, the Hydro policy amended in two substantive ways. We saw a few weeks ago, happily, the Minister of Energy, the letter carrier from Kitchener, come forward to amend substantially the directive power which was altogether too sweeping, too broad and too intrusive. That directive power was a core of this policy, a policy that was to have been built on openness and accountability. Well, they have backed down, and rightly, on the directive power.

Today they come to the House and they rightly and properly back down on their role to set the chairman's salary. They are now accepting a responsibility that is rightly and properly theirs, so they want another amendment. I think they should start anew. I think they should recognize that the Premier's pal, who wrote this bill more in his own interest than in the public interest, sold them a bill of goods that they cannot defend in the broad public domain. I submit to my friends opposite that the time is now to withdraw Bill 118 and to start afresh.

Finally, I just want to ask one more question of my friends on the Treasury bench. They said a few days ago that Mr Eliesen would receive only a deputy's salary until the bill was passed or the OEB review was completed. I want to know, since they have now set a salary for him that in the end will be a doubling of his current salary—not bad in this age of restraint when in one fell swoop you can go from $125,000 to $260,000—is Mr Marc Eliesen going to be paid a deputy's salary, as they said he was, until this bill is passed or the OEB review is completed?

SKILLS TRAINING

Mr Daigeler: In the response to the statement by the Minister of Skills Development, I think one observation is in order. It is becoming clearer every day what the NDP stands for. As students said last week, it stands for "Never Deliver Promises."

Here is what the Treasurer said last May 15 in this House in response to a question by the member for Renfrew North, "We are working within government to put together a very serious proposal and effort on the whole question of training in the province." What we have seen today is old money of the province reannounced. All we have seen today is new money from the federal government. The minister this morning at the press conference acknowledged himself that the figure he is so proud of, $700 million, is already presently in the estimates and that there is no new action, no new money, no new initiatives to get this economy going.

SALARY OF ONTARIO HYDRO CHAIRMAN

Mr Jordan: I too congratulate the Minister of Energy for taking the first step in bringing the salary of the chairman of Ontario Hydro under control, not only under control to some degree in a monetary sense but under control of the cabinet where it should be, rather than under the board that reports to the chairman.

The headline in the paper was, "Hydro Boss Pay Hike Cut," so really this is not a statement to the House; it is just a repeat of what has already been reported in the papers this morning. We cannot, as responsible opposition members, try to react to members of this government if we are going to have to react to press releases. We ask the minister to please make his statements in the House and then let the press pick them up from here. It will give us a better chance to assist him.

When the minister was referring to a monster out of control—or his government—I say to the minister, he is acting like a monster out of control because this afternoon he has revealed to this Legislature the salary of the president and chief operating officer. I do not think it was his intention to give us the salary of the president and chief executive officer of that corporation. I say the minister should not only withdraw Bill 118; he should resign.

SKILLS TRAINING

Mrs Cunningham: It is probably a rare occasion when a member of the Conservative Party has the opportunity to stand in the House and witness clapping by the members of the government for some legislation or program that was presented jointly today by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, Bernard Valcourt, for the federal government, along with the Minister of Skills Development for the provincial government. It was a great pleasure to see the progress that I think can be made when two levels of government work together.

I will also take this opportunity to advise members of the NDP government that they were the great critics, as they remember, of Bill C-21, the federal legislation on unemployment insurance. Today I think we have an opportunity to see the federal government put forth some $383 million in new dollars for this year alone for training programs for people who are unemployed and people who are crying out for training programs.

I think that in government and in public policy we have to give credit where credit is due. I would like to thank, on behalf of our party, the Minister of Skills Development for doing just that today, for taking the high road and working together in this country and this province to train our people so that the young people and people who are unemployed can be retrained and this country can be competitive once again.

The colleges that lost some $3.6 million from the treasurer's clawback recently will now see that money reinstated. It will give them hope and encouragement that the roles they are going to be asked to play in this brand-new agreement, which I cannot say enough about—it gives us an opportunity once again to see our colleges work with business, industry and labour, which is so necessary in providing the training programs.

At the risk of being overcongratulatory, I will also say that we will be watching very carefully how this program is implemented. We cannot tolerate programs being delivered in our colleges, our universities and our school systems that are perceived as reasonable, appropriate training programs but that are simply not appropriate in these times.

We will be relying on the next announcement from the minister with regard to the training board and we will be looking very carefully at that training board not being overly big and cumbersome, but getting from the front-line workers, the businesses, the industry, the people who rely on us to follow their demands for training—we will be relying on that board to make certain that it gives the kind of direction and the kind of dollars that the federal government has now presented to this province in the right way, so that training can take place where necessary and so that we are training our young people and unemployed workers in the skills this province needs to be competitive.

Mr Harnick: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: In the statement of the Minister of Energy, he has indicated that the new salary for Mr Eliesen is 80% of the salary of the president who runs Ontario Hydro at this time.

I believe that, by making that disclosure, the Minister of Energy has perhaps breached the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. I would like to read the section and ask you to consider it and rule as to whether he has breached the freedom of information act, which may by necessity mean that he has to resign.

The freedom of information act, subsection 21(3), states:

"A disclosure of personal information is presumed to constitute an unjustified invasion of personal privacy where the personal information... (f) describes an individual's finances, income, assets, liabilities, net worth, bank balances, financial history or activities or creditworthiness."

It would seem that, according to the freedom of information act, the information that the minister delivered to this Legislature today is contrary to this act, and I would ask you to rule on my point of order.

Hon Mr Ferguson: On the same point of order, Mr Speaker: If the members opposite did their homework, they would know that Mr Al Holt, president of Ontario

Hydro, has agreed that the disclosure of his salary is in fact in the public interest.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. If I could have the attention of the members, please. Since it is not the responsibility of the Speaker to determine the veracity of statements made in the House, I will address the point raised by the member for Willowdale. Indeed, it is not a point of order that you raised, but you do have the opportunity to approach the Information and Privacy Commissioner, if you wish to do so, on this or any other related matter.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HOSPITAL FINANCING

Mr Conway: I have a question to the Treasurer. It was in December 1990 that a Minister of Health in his government assured the hospitals of Ontario that the Bob Rae government would "support hospitals in their efforts to work out good relations with the nurses of Ontario." That comment was offered, quite understandably, at the time of the new nursing agreement in the province.

Today the Toronto Hospital announced significant layoffs and service reductions to the people of Toronto and of Ontario. The Toronto Hospital Corp cited, as the two principal reasons for these service reductions and the layoff of some 140 nurses, the Ontario Nurses' Association settlement and the provincial pay equity program.

Having regard to the fact that significant service cuts and layoffs are now being undertaken not just in Toronto but in communities right across the province, in Orillia, Windsor and Ottawa, what does the Treasurer, on behalf of the government of Ontario, intend to do to give effect to the commitments made by a former Minister of Health that the hospitals will be supported as they try to cope with both the ONA settlement and pay equity?

Hon Mr Laughren: I want to assure the member for Renfrew North that our commitment to the hospital sector in this province is strong indeed, and I do not think that the member for Renfrew North is suggesting that pay equity should not apply to the hospital sector. I do not think he was saying that.

I do not think the member for Renfrew North was saying that the hospital nurses were not worthy of an increase. I do not think he was suggesting that the hospital sector should have received more than a 9.5% increase in its transfer payment this year, which was higher than any other sector. So I am not sure what the member for Renfrew North is getting at, but I am sure I will find out in his supplementary.

Mr Conway: I thought Les Frost had parted from this world, but that answer makes me think he is alive and well and living in Nickel Belt.

I want to say to my friend the Treasurer, I only think what I know, and what I know today is that the Toronto Hospital Corp has announced significant service reductions and has announced the layoff of some 250 staff, over 50% of which layoffs are nurses. They cited as the two reasons for that significant reduction in service and staff layoffs trying to cope with the nurses' settlement and trying to implement pay equity.

In December 1990, the Treasurer's colleague the Minister of Housing, the then Minister of Health, assured the hospitals of Ontario that the Bob Rae government would support them, particularly as they tried to deal with the nurses' settlement.

What specific measures will the Treasurer undertake or be undertaking to deal with the people, the patients and the workforce in Ontario hospitals who are this day being jeopardized because institutions which he promised to help in these two particulars cannot cope and are having to proceed in the way that I have indicated?

Hon Mr Laughren: I think it is an unfair characterization which the member for Renfrew North puts. It seems to me that when we announced a 9.5% increase in payments to the hospitals this year, we were indicating that we had a commitment to the hospital sector in this province, and that was true then and it is true now.

Having said that, I am concerned about any reduction in services that might result from any reduction in staffing in any hospitals across the province. In Toronto there are other hospitals and they are working together to make sure that the resulting increase in requirements for the other hospitals will be worked out among them. But I worry in particular about smaller communities where there are not a number of hospitals that can accommodate any kind of downsizing for whatever particular reason.

Finally, the Minister of Health is sitting down with this particular hospital and working out an arrangement by which service to the public will be maintained.

Mr Conway: I have said before that I have a great deal of respect for my friend the Treasurer and I do not doubt his sincerity in wanting to do something, but I repeat, on December 13 last year the then Minister of Health in the Premier's government made a very particular promise. The hospitals across Ontario expect that this promise is going to be kept, particularly as it relates to their efforts to deal with the nurses' settlement.

The Orillia Soldiers' Memorial Hospital has reduced services and started a process of laying people off. The Salvation Army Grace Hospital in Windsor is closing down services. The Metropolitan General Hospital in Windsor is doing the same. There have been layoffs at the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario. As of this day some 50% of all Ontario hospitals are in a deficit position.

To coin a phrase, what does the Treasurer intend to do specifically in the next few weeks and months to keep the promise made by the member for Ottawa Centre 12 months ago?

Hon Mr Laughren: I think we should also put things in perspective. I understand that at this time of year it is not unusual for hospitals to be showing a deficit.

I gather the Toronto Hospital's deficit is in the $7 million to $10 million range on a budget of, I think, about $500 million. It is a very large budget and the deficit as a percentage of that budget, I think, is manageable but, regardless, the Minister of Health will be sitting down with that particular hospital to try to work out a satisfactory arrangement.

Finally, I understand that in places such as Windsor, when there are problems with hospital funding, the hospitals then are required to sit down together and work out an arrangement whereby services are provided in a better and more cost-efficient way, which seems to me is absolutely necessary. As I said in my statement a couple of weeks ago when we reallocated $600 million, if we are going to save medicare in this province and elsewhere, we have to control its costs.

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr Conway: I have a second question to the Treasurer and it concerns the state of the Ontario economy.

Just this day McDonnell Douglas announced layoffs, some of which are immediate and others of which will take place in the very near future, a total layoff, I believe, of some 1,450 jobs. The latest statistics on new home sales suggest a sharp decline of some 31% year over year. The latest retail sales numbers show a sharp decline in the month of August, the latest data that we have. The auto makers are complaining and reporting some of the worst sales environment they have ever known.

Is the Treasurer confident that the Ontario economy is responding to the medicine he prescribed on April 29? If he is not, what kind of additional measures does he intend to take to deal with what a lot of people continue to believe is a recession that is continuing almost unabated?

Hon Mr Laughren: We think that the economy is reacting as we thought it would, not just to the actions in the Ontario budget—I would not be so foolhardy as to predict that, by itself, that has caused the recession to end and we are now climbing out of it—but everyone has been predicting, including we in the Ministry of Treasury and Economics, as we did in the budget, that the recovery from this recession was going to be long and arduous and we have not changed our views in that regard. We think we are coming out of the recession; there are some good signs. But I can tell the member for Renfrew North that it is not going to be easy and we will be continuing to struggle with our expenditures as the recession ends and the slow recovery begins.

Mr Conway: The Treasurer, as I think all Treasurers are wont to do, looks for the positive signs, and I do not fault him for that. I am just again looking at what I can see before me. Retail sales continue to be sluggish. New home construction is not very optimistic; indicators are quite to the contrary. The auto sector is sluggish on a continental basis. It seems to me that those are three very significant indicators that the economy continues to struggle in recession.

In his second-quarter statement today I observed, among many things, that corporate tax revenues are off by some $70 million relative to the budget plan. That too would suggest that the wealth-creating component of the Ontario economy continues to struggle in a real and measurable way.

Can the Treasurer elaborate on what exactly are the positive signs that he sees that would contradict the three or four data that I suggested speak to what is really going n in the key wealth-creating, wealth-generating sectors of the Ontario economy?

Hon Mr Laughren: There is no question that the economy is not recovering as robustly as we would like to see it recover. At the same time, it is not fair to characterize the economy as being different than we thought it was going to be. We forecast this kind of slow recovery in 1991.

There are some good signs on the horizon. On the housing starts, I am not sure the member for Renfrew North is correct. Inflation has dropped, which is allowing, we hope anyway, more investment in the province. The corporate income taxes to which the member refers are indeed down. I remind him that last year they were down over $1 billion from the previous year. We predicted that this year, because of the slow recovery, we would not have the kind of gain in corporate tax revenues that we would like to see and that we think we will have in the next few years. There is no question that the recovery is slow.

Mr Conway: As we have seen in recent days, the newly dynamic party, of which my friend the member for Nickel Belt is the Treasurer, has shown itself to be as flexible and as supine as any political party in the history of Ontario. They have been prepared to reverse themselves on retail store hours. They have been prepared to reverse themselves on the Hydro policy. "Flexibility" is a new buzzword, obviously, at the cabinet table.

Having regard to the state of the wealth-creating part of the Ontario economy, which part of the economy is nearly apoplectic about the labour agenda of the Bob Rae-Bob White government, and having regard to our collective desire for a full and speedy recovery, would the Treasurer of the Bob Rae-Bob White government give an undertaking, if not to this House, at least to the wealth-creating part of the economy on whose back this recovery depends, that it is now prepared to do with the labour policy what it has done with the Hydro policy and the Sunday shopping policy, and that is draw back; apply some good judgement, some wisdom; at the very least put it on ice so that these people who are terrified about what the government's labour policy is going to do to the recovery will be able to catch a breath, create the jobs, create the revenue that will make this budget plan hopefully come in on target at a $10-billion deficit, if we are all lucky?

Hon Mr Laughren: I appreciate the fact that the member for Renfrew North will feel lucky if we come in on target.

I want to assure the member for Renfrew North that before labour legislation is even introduced into this House there will be a discussion paper on our proposals and that discussion paper will be widely distributed. We look forward to hearing from people who are concerned about the unknown, I believe, as much as they will be about the specifics, or more than they will be about the specifics in the proposed labour legislation. We hope to have that distributed in the province in the not-too-distant future.

Finally, I am becoming a little worried about my friend the member for Renfrew North. So many of his comments seem to hearken to the past. It is bad enough that Leslie Frost was a Tory, but now his utterances on the labour movement and his views about progressive labour legislation are driving me to think that perhaps he should move over a seat and join the Tory party.

GARBAGE DISPOSAL

Mr Villeneuve: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. For the past five years residents of the town of Caledonia in Brant-Haldimand have been asking unsuccessfully for co-operation from her office in Hamilton. Valuable farm land in that area is being used as dump sites for industrial waste. In one case charges have been laid, but many more sites are in operation without certificates of approval. I am afraid our worst fears have come true. Farm land is now being saved for future use as garbage dump sites.

Will the minister agree to investigate immediately and direct her Hamilton office to put an end to this very unworthy use of our farm land?

Hon Mrs Grier: Perhaps in his supplementary the member can expand on whether he is talking about sites that have licences that are being contravened or illegal dumping on land that is not licensed to be a waste disposal site. In either case, I am more than happy to investigate. But I point out to the member that if a site is licensed to accept municipal solid waste, then it is illegal to accept industrial waste, and if in fact it is being dumped on farm land that is not approved as a waste disposal site, it is illegal, period. Perhaps he could give me more details, but I am more than happy to look into it.

Mr Villeneuve: I have just sent over with a page some information, a photograph and a copy of a letter from the ministry officials. This is the photograph of one of the illegal dumps. It is clearly a pile of garbage sitting on what seems to be valuable farm land.

Let me quote from a senior environmental officer in the ministry regarding this type of site, and this is the letter she now has: "It can be concluded that the owners are considered to be operating a normal farming operation."

From that photograph, that is not a normal farming operation. The minister should pass it over to my good friend the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I think he will agree it is not a normal farming operation. This is good agricultural land. Does the minister agree with her staff that this is indeed farm land and should not be a garbage dump site?

Hon Mrs Grier: Looking at the photograph that the member has sent to me, it looks to me like fill has been dumped in a wetland, so I know my colleague the Minister of Natural Resources will indeed be interested. As I said in response to the first question, I will certainly undertake to investigate and give an answer to the member.

Mr Villeneuve: I have further photographs and documentation that will prove that indeed it may be wetland but it certainly is valuable agricultural land. We do not know how much dangerous and toxic material is being dumped in that area, but the government is quite obviously allowing good farm land to be used as landfill sites. The ministry obviously believes that our farmers are growing garbage. If indeed that is a farm, it is garbage that is growing there.

The residents in Brant-Haldimand are beginning to feel like the official dump site of Ontario. First it was Hagersville, and now the minister has documentation that I believe shows it is continuing. Will the minister please quit dumping on the residents of Brant-Haldimand and on some of our good land and look after her ministry's responsibility in this area? Can she promise this House that she will do that today?

Hon Mrs Grier: I can certainly promise the member that the use of class 1 agricultural farm land for a waste disposal site is not appropriate and that in seeking waste disposal sites, that is not a course I will choose to follow if alternatives are available. What he has given me is a photograph of some fill in a pond. I do not know the circumstances. I do not know the location. I do not know the background to the correspondence the member has passed to me. As I said before, I will look into it.

SKILLS TRAINING

Mrs Cunningham: My question is for the Minister of Skills Development. I would like once again to congratulate the minister for his negotiation of a Canada-Ontario labour force development agreement with the Honourable Bernard Valcourt, the federal Minister of Employment and Immigration.

At the press conference this morning, the minister indicated that this is a landmark agreement, and we agree. The federal government will spend $846.1 million in 1991-92. Members of this House should know that this is an 83% increase over last year. Those are federal dollars for training. We are happy to know he agrees that is a good idea.

When combined with the $751 million, there will be $1.6 billion spent on training in Ontario. Everybody is excited about that, including the business community, the education community and the training institutions. Now that we have these resources, we need to ensure that the dollars are spent effectively.

The minister stated that he will be creating an Ontario Training and Adjustment Board to restructure training delivery. When will he release his consultation paper, which I assume was his first step? When will the training and adjustment agency be in place so that these dollars can be spent?

Hon Mr Allen: I thank the member for her generous response to the initiative. I also know of her continuing deep concern about training problems in Ontario. I want to say to her that it is my intention at some point midmonth in November to release the Ontario Training and Adjustment Board consultation document, which will be followed by roughly three months of very careful consultation so that we are sure we have precisely the kind of structure that this province needs.

Coincident with that, in terms of the agreement I signed today, there will also be a consultation around the structure of local boards in which all communities and all participants in communities concerned about training will be asked to give us their views as to how best those boards might be structured in order to deliver training in all the local communities across Ontario so that the dollars from the province and the federal government will be used for the maximum benefit of this province.

Mrs Cunningham: One of the main criticisms about the delivery of training programs in Ontario is the amount of bureaucratic red tape and program overlap. We need to be more efficient in the delivery of our training so that the money is actually spent on individuals so they can participate in our workforce. I was pleased with your response just now and I was also pleased to see that the federal-provincial agreement released today will reduce the amount of overlap between federal and provincial training programs. That is great.

We need the same streamlining at the provincial level and not more bureaucracy. If we create this Ontario Training and Adjustment Board, as we both understand it, will we then be eliminating the need for the Ministry of Skills Development?

Hon Mr Allen: It is too soon to talk of the actual restructuring that will take place in government as we go through the evolution of the delivery of responsibilities, the form the new board will take and the form the local delivery mechanisms will take. With respect to that undertaking, we are putting in place some very innovative, new human resource initiatives in order to make certain there is not displacement of personnel, that skills are maintained and that people will remain in place throughout this whole major undertaking.

If that is the point of the member's question, we paid a great deal of attention to that. We have some very innovative and highly creative mechanisms that have not been used in this province to date for dealing with that.

Mrs Cunningham: I look forward to seeing that in the very near future. I was also encouraged to see that the agreement reaffirms the importance of colleges in the delivery of training programs. Now we need to ensure that their programs are more relevant to the needs of the community, one of the great criticisms.

Three weeks ago I met representatives of the London Industrial Training Advisory Board and General Motors and they were concerned that our education systems—and I put an “s” there—are not producing the number of technically trained workers that Ontario industries require. They want strong linkages established between educators and industry. Technology is rapidly changing and industry has its state-of-the-art equipment while many colleges struggle with antiquated relics. That fact alone demonstrates the need for business and colleges to work together.

I ask the minister what changes he will be introducing to ensure that when a specific business advises that it needs 30 highly skilled mechanics, for example, our college system will be required, and I underline “required,” to work directly with that business, industry or labour group to make certain that we train those specific individuals today.

Hon Mr Allen: One of the first things that will be undertaken by the new Ontario Training and Adjustment Board, for example, will be the establishment of a major unit that will deal with best practice in training, which of course will be available to all trainers, including the college system in terms of the research that is undertaken into best practice in all fields of training.

Second, the colleges will have their own more dynamic and better-resourced interface between themselves and new sectoral training agreements for the provision of training capacity industry by industry. That certainly will be a further enhancement of the kind of co-operative structures that presently are in place whereby businesses and industry advise the colleges about the need for local training programs and how they might be sponsored.

I would also observe that all through this structure there is a new emphasis upon not just bipartitism but the co-operation of labour, employers and community entry and re-entry groups that are concerned about those who are not in the employment market today, so that by the combined efforts of all those working with the college system on the new local training boards, for example, there will be a better mix of initiatives, ideas, enthusiasm and research in order to heighten everybody's capacity in the whole training field.

ELEVATOR INSPECTIONS

Mr Ruprecht: I have a question for the minister whose name now appears on most of our elevating devices in the province. I am looking at a report by her own employees, the Ontario elevator inspectors, and I read with utter amazement what they said, that when you ride in an uninspected elevator you are placing yourself at risk; in other words, you are in danger. I am shocked to read what the minister's chief engineer in charge of elevators said at the inquest where two people were crushed to death by elevators, "We do what we feel is the bare minimum to do."

When I step into an elevator I see displayed the minister's licence and her signature, and I am led to believe that I am safe. Is the minister not misleading the public by making people think they are safe when in fact they are at risk?

Hon Ms Churley: Safety is the primary concern of the Elevating Devices Act and it is a primary concern of mine, not just because my name is up there in big letters. I regret writing it so legibly at this point, however.

First of all, I want to correct a misconception that I think has recently come out of the member's statement and an earlier statement in the press. I want to assure people that elevators cannot crash. There are so many safety devices built into the elevators that I want to assure people they should feel safe in riding them. Serviceability is another issue—I come from Toronto city council, originally—that I believe we have to do some work on. It is quite true that the ratio of elevator inspectors has gone down in terms of elevators. In fact, as the member's press release pointed out this morning, in 1989, when the Liberals were in power, most of the serviceability problems started to happen.

I am working on that with a comprehensive, multifaceted approach, dealing with inspection of elevators so that the oldest ones are inspected first so there is therefore less of a chance that elevators will have to be shut down for maintenance reasons.

Mr Ruprecht: I want the minister and the House to know that her boss said just over a year ago, "Why are we"—that is the government—"sitting on our rear ends when the problem is so big and so scary out there?" She has been sitting there for over one year now and what she has accomplished up to now simply is not good enough.

I want to provide her with some facts that will open her eyes. In 1978, as she said, there were 70 non-fatal elevator accidents; in the last three years there were six that were fatal, and in 1989 the non-fatal accidents grew to 1,000. In the city of Toronto alone, in 1989 and 1990, 1,300 accidents were reported where our fire department was called in to rescue 2,288 people. They were all affected by elevator accidents. That is putting it nicely, since some people were seriously hurt.

The minister cannot continue to keep placing people at risk, as she says. The problem is getting progressively worse. When will she agree to a key request by most of the municipalities that a standard elevator maintenance contract between the owner of a building and a bona fide company be established to get rid of this problem and place people in safe situations?

Hon Ms Churley: The member is in fact not correct. The act already requires that owners have regular maintenance inspections done by a contractor registered with my ministry. I am aware that there have been problems and that we need to make sure it works, but that is already in place, I am happy to say.

Mr Ruprecht: It is not in place.

Hon Ms Churley: It certainly is in place and I will be happy to show the member where after question period today. I have already explained to the member that I am certainly very concerned about safety, although I think maintenance is often the problem, and I am concerned about elevators having to be shut down for maintenance purposes. Because there is no way we can inspect every elevator every year, I think this comprehensive approach to inspections is very important so that we can keep our eye on the oldest elevators and the elevators with the biggest problems, and make sure we target our inspections carefully to avoid breakdowns and the maintenance problems that are already there.

To finish, in order to deal with this problem we are already in the process—this did not happen under the Liberal government when the problem really grew—of training new inspectors at this time because there is a shortage in this province.

Mr Ruprecht: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I want the minister to have a letter from the Ministry of Housing saying there is no provision in legislation. The minister does not know what she is talking about and I think she should get up and either resign or do something about keeping people safe.

The Speaker: It is not a point of privilege.

LAND REGISTRATION

Mr Tilson: I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. For the past several weeks, I have been asking the minister questions on the proposed new Polaris land registry system being conveyed to private hands. We have been trying to find out particulars of this contract the government has entered into, which was negotiated by the Liberal government and finally signed by this government, and the minister has indicated that she is not going to produce it. We have been trying to find out how much this agreement is going to cost the taxpayers of this province and she will not provide specifics.

All this is very mysterious and I therefore have a further question today on this subject; it remains the ownership. Who owns this company, Real/Data Ontario? Last fall it was reported in the Financial Post that there are 30 owners, but the president of Real/Data could not disclose the list at the government's request. It is difficult to know who these people are. In this same article a government alliance spokesperson, Bonnie Foster, did reveal four of the partners of Real/Data, but for some unknown reason she was unable to reveal the remaining 26. She did promise to disclose the remaining 26 after the details of the partnership agreement were finalized. The difficulty is that this government will not produce the contracts.

The Speaker: We need a question.

Mr Tilson: The details have been finalized for some time now and I would like to know who the other 26 owners of Real/Data are.

Hon Ms Churley: Once again, the member's statement before his question is in fact not correct. First of all, this deal was not made in secret and as I have already stated I am happy to make a copy of the agreement between RDO and the province available to the member through the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act of my ministry. I am happy to release that to him at any time.

In terms of the partnership, which is an equal 50-50 partnership between RDO and the province, there is a 10-year agreement with equal investment of $5 million each to begin with at the government's and RDO's signing, and another $24 million each at the call of the board. All the profits and dividends will be shared equally.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Before the supplementary, I remind the member for Etobicoke West that his quite valued contributions should best be made from his own seat.

Mr Tilson: It is fine for her to tell us these details and produce the agreement, but the question is, who are these people? Information is now available that has been told to us that this land registry system being proposed, the Polaris land registry system, may have more errors with respect to the computerized system than there will be with the current system and that indeed the Polaris system may not even work.

Why is the minister implementing a new land registry system when she does not even know what it will cost; that will perhaps result in the closing of more registry offices; that will be owned and operated by unknown people, many of whom we believe are not even Canadians; that will result from a contract she has signed with unknown people, a contract that will cost the taxpayer unknown millions of dollars; a system that she does not appear to be aware of, the details of the partnership—at least she will not tell us those details—with this unknown group of people, and a system that may not even work? Why is she implementing such a system?

Hon Ms Churley: I think the member got most of his facts from a TV program that I have already pointed out was inaccurate.

This partnership is a good deal for the province. This government has done extensive internal and external reviews. It is going to implement state-of-the-art technology which is going to be the leading edge of this technology in the world. It is going to provide up to 2,000 new technology jobs in this area. It is not going to close down any land registry offices. In fact, it is going to provide them more quickly with more up-to-date information. I can assure the member that this has been well examined, and it is a good deal for the province, saving the province money and providing lots of jobs. This is what the Tories want to see more of: partnership between private industry and the government. This, I can assure the member, is a very good deal.

SKILLS TRAINING

Mr Sutherland: I had the pleasure this morning of attending a session where a document was released called Canada at the Crossroads: The Reality of a New Competitive Environment. One of the comments in there was about skills development. It said, "The level of advanced skills in Canada, critical to sustaining and upgrading sources of competitive advantage for Canadian industry, is inadequate."

My question is for the Minister of Skills Development on the announcement made earlier about the new Canada-Ontario labour force development agreement. I am quite sure many people in Ontario, particularly in my riding, will welcome that announcement as part of this government's strategy for economic renewal over the long term. One of the campuses of Fanshawe College is in my riding, so I would like to ask the minister on behalf of my constituents if he could give us some indication what type of impact this will have on Fanshawe College as a whole.

Hon Mr Allen: I am very happy to respond on the ways in which this will impact on a locality such as the London region and on Fanshawe College in particular. There are two ways in which dollars will flow out of this agreement into local communities. One is through the community industrial training committees that exist in many of our local communities and the other is through the college system.

First, there will be 50% more dollars available to the CITCs to respond to local businesses and groups that make proposals to the CITCs for training programs of one kind or another. It will be possible for those groups and for the local training boards which will in future succeed them to respond to those requests much more generously and effectively.

Second, there is the question of Fanshawe College which, as part and parcel of the college system, will share the $104 million which will be available to that system for training purposes and which it will be able to bid upon. As I explained this morning to questions of this kind, a number of details in the agreement give some special place to the colleges in the ways in which they can access that money.

Mr Sutherland: In the training that has gone on in this province, there has been a very long tradition that a great deal of that, particularly technical training, has been provided by the college system. I wonder whether the minister could comment on what guarantees there are that the colleges, as public institutions and with a mandate to provide training, will still be playing the most significant role in the area of training within this province.

Hon Mr Allen: I do not think there is any question but that the college system will remain the major deliverer of training programs in this province. In point of fact, they have been existing in a competitive environment for some time, because the federal government has been increasingly diverting its dollars towards private sector contracting for training. The interesting thing that has been happening, and which I think most people do not know, is that the college system in Ontario has been bidding on those projects and has been winning 90% of the contracts. So the colleges have the necessary expertise, both in specific training programs and in the generic, backup skills training programs, to match together for effective training in Ontario. They will continue to do that, and they will do well.

RED HILL CREEK EXPRESSWAY

Mr Mancini: My question is for the Minister of Transportation. Yesterday during the estimates of the Ministry of Transportation, I used my limited time to question the minister on the Red Hill Creek Expressway, which was cancelled by the NDP government, leaving the region of Hamilton-Wentworth out in the cold. The government promised at the time that a review would be undertaken and that terms of reference for this review would move forward.

We were shocked to learn yesterday that fully 10 months had gone by and, as staff from the ministry informed the committee, the terms of reference had not been approved by the government. We were told it would take another eight weeks to work out the terms of reference. This morning the minister met with regional representatives to in fact sign such terms of reference. They were shamed and embarrassed into signing the terms of reference.

We were surprised to learn that the study will include a review of alternative routes through the Red Hill Creek area itself. Will the minister now confirm that a route through the Red Hill Creek area is back on the table, and will he then explain why the government wasted a year and millions of dollars and cost thousands of jobs in delaying construction and scrapping the Red Hill Creek Expressway project?

Hon Mr Pouliot: Indeed we reached an agreement this morning. I would like to get the critic's attention because I will try in a word or two to meticulously explain to him—if he is receptive, with respect—what has taken place.

The north-south agreement will look at alternatives to the Red Hill Creek Expressway, and the provincial share will remain 70%. What the committee, which is the Hamilton-Wentworth region and the government of Ontario, that is, the Ministry of Transportation, have committed to is the following, to seek an alternative within the next six months. If an alternative is not found, the region of Hamilton-Wentworth has the possibility of coming back with the original proposal. What we are committing ourselves to do—let me focus here—is to look for alternatives in the north-south.

Incidentally, in terms of the commitments for east-west, the 50-50 share is still on the table. It was a good partnership. The reason for the delay is that the region opted for the possibility of seeking legal ramifications, to see what it means in the legal sense. That is why it took a long, long time. I know the critic of the opposition will wish to share with me in commending all parties involved.

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Pouliot: We now can look to the future with a great deal of confidence and with a reasonable and comfortable timetable.

Mr Mancini: I want to remind the Legislature and the minister that his predecessor rose in his seat and said the Red Hill Creek Expressway was cancelled because it was a moral decision. Where is this government's morality today? That is what I want to know. Where is its morality today?

What we have witnessed today is the most cynical of politics. I submit that the reason the Red Hill Creek Expressway is back on the table is because, as was printed today in one of the local journals, "Red Hill is somewhat of a red flag for Hinkley," an NDP candidate for mayor in Hamilton.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Does the member have a supplementary?

Mr Mancini: Tens of millions of dollars in business investment are at stake. Thousands of construction jobs and new jobs in new businesses are at stake. Will the minister stop playing games with the future of the Hamilton-Wentworth region, and will he allow the Red Hill Creek Expressway to go ahead as planned?

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. We will just wait.

Hon Mr Pouliot: The supplementary indeed has been put and I am sure the opposition will have the decency to let me answer. The commitment is ongoing. What we are talking about here is an alternative to the first proposal. We are hopeful that the facility can go forward and can be approved within a period of six months.

It is not complex. One need not be a mathematical genius emanating from Windsor or Harvard to understand the simplicity. If the member looks for positive results, hard work, dedication, commitment to seeking an alternative, he will find it in the agreement. However, if he does not choose to read it, then with best wishes—we start on the premise that the cup is half full, never half empty. This is a positive organization responding to positive alternatives. All systems are go. We are looking forward to it.

LABOUR LEGISLATION

Mr Carr: My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology. Over the past little while, as part of my critic's position, I have been consulting with business. One of the big concerns that has come up is in regard to the Labour Relations Act amendments. I would like to quote a couple of replies I have received, one from a major manufacturer with 250 employees in my riding.

"Gary, as you know, we are hanging on by our teeth. Our US shareholder has seen the proposed legislation and is appalled. All this is just one more 'nail in the coffin.'" There are 250 employees with that company.

Another small employer in my riding says, "As an owner of a small business in Oakville struggling to survive in this recession, if the labour reform law is passed, I will be getting rid of my eight employees." I would like to send this over to the minister to take a look, if one of the pages would be so kind.

Due to the reaction of business, which has been negative, and due to the fact that the minister represents industry at the cabinet table, I was wondering if he could enlighten this House on how he feels about some of the proposals under the labour reform amendments.

Hon Mr Philip: I addressed an almost identical question at the Toronto board of trade at lunch hour. I can say that if the honourable member—

Mrs Caplan: "You don't like our principle, we got other principles. You don't like our morals, we got other morals."

The Speaker: Order, the member for Oriole.

Hon Mr Philip: If the honourable member for Oriole would allow me to speak over her squeaking, I would be happy to do so.

The Speaker: It would be appreciated. The minister has the floor.

Mrs Caplan: I didn't say a word.

Hon Mr Philip: The member for Oriole says she did not say a word. She does not say a word; she squeaks, squeaks, squeaks over the voices of the rest of us.

Mrs Caplan: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I am very concerned that the former Minister of Transportation is very red faced today because of the acrobatics of the new Minister of Transportation over the Red Hill Creek Expressway—the new morality, the new policy, the new principle, which is an embarrassment to this Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology. In his attempt to discredit me personally, I am offended.

The Speaker: It is not a point of privilege, but it would be very helpful if the Speaker could hear both the question and the response. So if all other members in the House could come to order, I would ask the minister to move on quickly with only his response to the question asked.

Hon Mr Philip: To the honourable member who asked the question and who, I know, is interested in the response, the Ministry of Labour has produced, in co-operation with the rest of the cabinet, a discussion paper that will go out and have full input from both business and industry and communities.

We are confident that there are some very substantive issues contained in that paper that the business community will want to provide input on. Indeed, the business community, through me, through the Ministry of the Environment, through the Minister of Culture and Communications and other ministers, has had considerable input already into some of its concerns. Those will be reflected in the paper.

There will be a full and open discussion of that paper, followed by legislation that will go to committee. The people in the business community will have a full opportunity to propose amendments, changes and improvements when that happens. I can tell the member, as I assured the Toronto board of trade today, that we are open to any constructive suggestions and I can tell him that the board and other members of the business community are preparing some very positive ideas that we hope will be useful to us.

Mr Carr: I have copies of a couple of those positive ideas from the More Jobs Coalition, which put together a package, and the All Business Coalition. The fact of the matter is that since this cabinet document came out, the business community is spending a great deal of time and countless thousands of dollars producing some information as a result.

One of the problems is the uncertainty around these proposals that have come out. They have taken a look at them, taken the worst possible case, and, as the minister will see from some of the comments there, the people who are looking at the proposals are extremely concerned, extremely scared. As a result of all the efforts that are being put in, the countless hours and the thousands and thousands of dollars being spent on this campaign, could the minister today enlighten the business community a little bit further about what direction he would like to see and how this will affect his plans for the future for industry and trade? Could he get rid of some of the uncertainty and give us some details on what he would like to see happen with regard to this piece of proposed legislation?

Hon Mr Philip: As I outlined to the Toronto board of trade today and to other business groups, we are developing a number of proposals that, unlike those of our federal colleagues, will develop—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Would the minister take his seat for a moment, please. It would be very much appreciated if all members, in particular the member for Oriole and the member for York Centre, could resist the temptation to be overexuberant. Your active participation in this assembly is always welcome, but at this very moment, I am attempting to hear the response from the minister. I am having difficulty hearing it.

Mr Sorbara: Where did he have lunch? I hope it was with the board of trade.

The Speaker: It was not with me, nor am I interested in where he had lunch.

Hon Mr Philip: The honourable member wants to know who I had lunch with. I have had lunch with a lot more people around this province as a cabinet minister than he ever had lunch with or ever consulted with. The members of the business community know that.

The Speaker: Would the minister respond to the question.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. I asked the House to come to order. Before we start discussing menus, perhaps the minister would help things by addressing only the question placed, which I do not believe had anything to do with where he went for lunch.

Hon Mr Philip: I think I was commenting on the number of people I was consulting with, not how many people I had lunch with. To the honourable member for Oakville South, we are consulting with the business community. We have worked out the needs for the basic models to develop a co-operative model between business, labour, industry, the community and government. Indeed he will find that companies such as the one that is investing some $200 million to expand some very high-tech technology in his riding are the kinds of companies that have developed a very successful formula of bringing about co-operation and partnership between business, labour and government. We are working with companies like that to create jobs in Ontario.

TIMBER INDUSTRY

Mr Waters: My question today is to my dear friend and colleague the Minister of Natural Resources. It has become almost a habit for me to ask this dear minister a question. He is very important to my riding.

As many members of the House are acutely aware, the Ontario forest industry is in very serious difficulty. The problem that developed at Spruce Falls and Kapuskasing is not isolated. A number of medium and large sawmills are in trouble.

Members will also know that direct forest industry employment is critical to northerners because across the north some 32,000 people rely on this industry for their employment. Many smaller northern communities rely solely on the forest industry for their livelihoods. Could the minister please tell me what he is doing to ensure that these issues are addressed?

Mr Stockwell: It isn't a letter.

Hon Mr Wildman: I guess the member was referring to a letter he has written to me. I recognize his concern. I hope all members of the House recognize that we are facing a very difficult state in the Ontario forestry industry. Both the lumber mills and the pulp and paper mills are facing serious difficulty and are under difficult financial pressure.

The Premier has directed me to lead a team effort to deal with this crisis, and I would like to let the member know that a number of my cabinet colleagues and I will be meeting with leaders of industry and labour next Monday, October 28, here in Toronto. It is my hope that this meeting will foster a co-ordinated, co-operative approach to enable us to start to move forward to deal with these difficult times.

Mr Waters: I would like to thank the minister profusely for his answer. I am certain that the people who rely on the timber industry are greatly appreciative of his answer.

There is no question that the high value of the Canadian dollar and high interest rates and the recession have weighed heavily on the industry's fortunes. I ask the minister for his insight in terms of the future of the industry and how we will come out of this recession.

Hon Mr Wildman: The member has mentioned two of the difficult problems facing the industry, the high value of the Canadian dollar and the high level of interest rates.

Mr Conway: And the countervail.

Hon Mr Wildman: The member for Renfrew North refers to another serious difficulty that is also facing us, the American reaction to the withdrawal of the memorandum of understanding which imposed an export tax on softwood lumber.

Those are causes of concern, but there is an overall structural problem. The industry in Ontario is a high-cost producer, first, and also we have seen a virtual collapse this year in new investment in the industry. The planned investment in Ontario mills is only $150 million over the next five years, compared with $1.5 billion planned over the next five years in each of Alberta, British Columbia and Quebec. Investment is critical if the industry is to compete in the marketplace and to improve productivity and competitiveness.

I want to say, though, that I know very many members in southern Ontario do not recognize the importance of the forestry industry in this province, but all of us recognize that there are no quick fixes to this problem. I hope the tripartite meeting we are having next week will be the first step in a process which will enable us all to co-operate in looking at new ways to improve investment in the industry and to improve the competitiveness of the Ontario lumber and forest industry.

Mr McClelland: On a point of order—

The Speaker: Just wait a minute. That was indeed a very important question. It was also quite lengthy for both the question and the supplementary, and I will allow one question with one response.

BORDER COMMUNITIES ASSISTANCE FUND

Mrs Y. O'Neill: I agree with the Speaker's comments about the length of the questions and answers. My question is for the Minister of Revenue. Over the past week, two separate ministers of this government have mentioned the existence of a community assistance fund of $5 million which has been set up to help Ontario's border communities implement their own initiatives to counter the cross-border shopping crisis.

The minister certainly must realize that $5 million is almost an inadequate sum in the face of more than 14,000 jobs which have been lost, by this very government's own estimates, and this has been a direct result of cross-border shopping. It is even less impressive given the insistence of the Treasurer that he will categorically not—

The Speaker: And the question?

Mrs Y. O'Neill: I am giving facts and figures. I am not lecturing. The Treasurer has categorically refused to reconsider imposing further gasoline tax increases on January 1, 1992. The comments and answers given by these two members of the NDP cabinet—

The Speaker: Would the member conclude her question, please.

Interjections.

The Speaker: I ask the government benches to remain quiet so that I can hear the question. I ask the member to quickly place her question.

Mrs Y. O'Neill: The community assistance fund has not been described to this House with any clarity, direction, criteria or allocation. Has any community in this province received an allocation from the community access fund which we are talking about? Would the minister please present, in a clear fashion, the process of application these communities must follow if they are going to access this $5-million fund which is so often mentioned without any detail?

Hon Ms Wark-Martyn: I would love to answer this question, although it is under the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Technology. I will forward it on to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology.

Hon Mr Philip: I answered that question a few days ago in response to another member's question, but I would be happy to repeat it.

The member had a two-part question. One was, are there applications in? Yes, there are a number of applications from different communities and they are being processed and considered at the moment.

The process is for the local community group, which I outlined in my answer to the previous question, to form a committee to come forward with a series of proposals. Each of those proposals will certainly be considered for funding.

The Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

Mr McClelland: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The Minister of the Environment will be introducing legislation this afternoon. We have been around this bend so many times it really bothers me to have to stand on this point, but of all people, the Minister of the Environment, somebody who regards the traditions of this place well and who, I am sure, has—this must be very difficult for her. I presume it is some directive from the Premier's office. She will be introducing legislation that is vitally important to people in the greater Toronto area. I cannot believe that the legislation is being introduced—

The Speaker: What is out of order?

Mr McClelland: This rightly calls for a statement and it is contrary to every tradition that there was not a statement made by the minister that this legislation would be introduced later.

The Speaker: There is nothing out of order.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr Ruprecht: Pursuant to standing order 33(a)— Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Mr Ruprecht: I will have to shout across the way because no one—

The Speaker: No. Would the member for Parkdale raise his point of order.

Mr Ruprecht: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker, and I thank the House leader.

Pursuant to standing order 33(a), Mr Speaker, I wish to advise you of my dissatisfaction with the response—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Would the member for Parkdale take his seat. The member for Oriole is asked to come to order so that one of her own colleagues can raise a point of order with the Speaker.

Mr Ruprecht: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I appreciate your assistance in quieting this House.

The Speaker: Would you proceed with your point of order.

Mr Ruprecht: This is the fourth time, Mr Speaker. I am trying. Pursuant to standing order 33(a), I wish to advise you of my dissatisfaction with the response of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations to my question on elevator accidents. The reasons for my dissatisfaction are the minister's misunderstanding of the legislation and misinterpretation of the Elevating Devices Act. I expect she would be here tonight at 6 o'clock to answer the questions properly.

The Speaker: The member will no doubt file the necessary document with the table.

REMARKS BY MINISTER

Hon Mr Philip: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: If the member for Oriole found the remarks I made about the noise and interjections she was making to be offensive, I therefore withdraw those remarks to her and apologize if she found those remarks to be offensive. I hope she would also understand that her interrupting of me so that I could not answer the member for Oakville South was also offensive to me.

Mr Ruprecht: Since the minister is in such a generous mood, I recommend that if the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations gives me a different answer, I will withdraw my recommendation as well.

MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Mr Cooke moved that, notwithstanding any standing order or previous order of the House, Mr Grandmaitre and Mr Daigeler, and Mrs McLeod and Mr Sorbara exchange places respectively in order of precedence for private members' public business and that the requirement for notice be waived with respect to ballot item 44.

Motion agreed to.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON ONTARIO IN CONFEDERATION

Mr Cooke moved that the order of the House of Thursday, December 20, 1990, appointing the select committee on Ontario in Confederation, as amended on Thursday, June 27, 1991, be further amended by striking out "November 25, 1991" and substituting "February 5, 1992" therefor.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

WASTE MANAGEMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR LA GESTION DES DÉCHETS

Mrs Grier moved first reading of Bill 143, An Act respecting the Management of Waste in the Greater Toronto Area and to amend the Environmental Protection Act.

M^{me} Grier propose la première lecture du projet de loi 143, Loi concernant la gestion des déchets dans la région du grand Toronto et modifiant la Loi sur la protection de l'environnement.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Hon Mrs Grier: This legislation implements the government's plan that was announced last November to solve and manage the waste crisis in the greater Toronto area and to accelerate and broaden 3Rs programs province-wide. It will give legislative powers to the Interim Waste Authority to continue its search for and environmental assessment work in support of three long-term landfill sites within the GTA.

It also deals with the waste disposal gap within the GTA by giving additional legislative authority through the recently issued minister's orders to extend the life of Peel region's Britannia Road landfill site and Metro Toronto's Keele Valley landfill site. The legislation will also amend the Environmental Protection Act so that the government has regulatory authority to reach its waste diversion targets of at least 25% reduction in municipal waste going to disposal in 1992 and at least 50% reduction by the year 2000.

MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE AND FOOD STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT DES LOIS RELEVANT DU MINISTÈRE DE L'AGRICULTURE ET DE L'ALIMENTATION

Mr Buchanan moved first reading of Bill 144, An Act to amend certain Acts administered by the Ministry of Agriculture and Food.

M. Buchanan propose la première lecture du projet de loi 144, Loi modifiant certaines lois dont l'application relève du ministère de l'Agriculture et de l'Alimentation.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Mrs Caplan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: It is a tradition in this House for the critic to receive a copy of the minister's bill when it is being tabled. In light of the fact that there was no statement that the minister would be tabling this bill, I as critic for the greater Toronto area, for which this bill has great significance, would appreciate the courtesy of receiving a copy of this bill before the minister proceeds. The government House leader and the ministers wonder why we in opposition occasionally get a little frustrated. They have had over a year—

The Speaker: Would the member take her seat, please. It is not in the standing orders to distribute copies of a bill before it is introduced. I believe it is a courtesy to distribute background information, but certainly not the bill itself.

Hon Mr Buchanan: I wish to introduce this omnibus bill which amends the Beef Cattle Marketing Act and the Milk Act.

The purpose in amending the Beef Cattle Marketing Act is to remove the upper limit on the checkoff licence fee and provide enabling legislation for the proposed national beef checkoff system. The act was enacted in 1968 and has been amended from time to time to increase the upper limit on the checkoff licence fee. The checkoff system provides a low percentage of the sale price of each head of cattle directly to the Ontario Cattlemen's Association for promotion of the beef industry. After consultation with producers, the OCA has requested that the upper limit be removed and that provision be made for co-operation in a national beef checkoff system.

The second part of the bill is to amend the Milk Act to increase the upper limit on the producer levy for the Ontario Dairy Herd Improvement Corp from three cents a hectolitre to six cents a hectolitre, to be implemented over a three-year period. The Ontario Dairy Herd Improvement Corp is a producer organization that provides information on herd management and health and is used as a marketing tool for breeding stock. It was government-funded until 1981 and is now funded by milk producers, the federal and provincial governments and the Ontario Milk Marketing Board. Because of increasing operating costs and an anticipated decrease in government funding, the ODHIC and the Ontario Milk Marketing Board have requested that the upper limit on the levy be increased.

The amendments introduced today will enable Ontario's beef and dairy industries to maintain their competitiveness and high standards. I urge all members of the House to support this bill.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr Laughren moved resolution 28:

That the Treasurer of Ontario be authorized to pay the salaries of the civil servants and other necessary payments pending the voting of supply for the period commencing November 1, 1991, and ending December 31, 1991, such payments to be charged to the proper appropriation following the voting of supply.

Mr Bradley: I welcome the opportunity to speak on this particular issue because there is so much flexibility. The ability to speak on virtually anything on interim supply is extremely attractive to me.

As we change Speakers, I want to compliment the Speaker on his wise decision today, his flexibility, his reading of the situation in permitting the final question that was allowed.

It is very interesting to talk about interim supply because it is one of the tools an opposition has in a democratic system and one that cannot be influenced, even by OPP investigations. It is one of the tools that can be used by the opposition to call the government to account, because the government needs money to function, to pay the cabinet ministers $90,000 a year, to pay all the parliamentary assistants their additional amount of money, many of whom were recipients of increases in pay by virtue of their election to the House. We know we will need considerable sums of money for those purposes. I will not dwell on that at any length. It is always attractive for the opposition to be able to mention that at the very least.

I do want to talk about some of the problems confronting this province, and this government as well. I have noted some interesting writings that have come to my attention about this government. Some of the columnists who are writing about the government are not people who are now attacking it from the right—we expect the government is going to be attacked from the right—but are people who are attacking from the left. The reason for this is that these are people who very much believed in the New Democratic Party, in the platform on which it ran, and in what it stood for in opposition and what socialists traditionally stand for. They see some erosion of that point of view now that the government has assumed office. They see that what you see is not what you get.

The NDP used to portray itself as a party that was different from the others, as one that was not slick and obsessed with making itself look good, but rather one that would do what was right for the people of Ontario, one that would keep all of its promises and one that was on a higher ethical and moral level than all other political parties. If there is anyone left in Ontario who believes that, those people are naïve or members of the government at the present time, who have a vested interest in saying that.

What I notice, for instance, is the orchestration of this House by a government adviser by the name of John Piper.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: "Not the Treasurer," he says. I am inclined to believe that the Treasurer is not a person who will be manipulated like some puppet, as perhaps some others might allow themselves to be, because he has been here too long—most people on this side of the House might agree with that—some 20 years.

Mr Conway: I saw the pamphlet.

Mr Bradley: I have the pamphlet in my desk. I am going to look for that right now. I will find it some time during my speech, I am sure. I keep these things and I will hold it up for members of the government to see who were unable to make it. Here is a photograph of an individual with a very wide tie and a striped shirt 20 years ago. It does not seem to fit, but he did not care in those days, because he was an individual interested, as he is today, in fighting on behalf of his constituents.

Hon Mr Laughren: I was tall then too.

Mr Bradley: He was taller at that time and I can understand why. This is a photograph that was taken 20 years ago in Sudbury.

When I, with many others, had the chance to attend his dinner, I heard many accolades about him. That is why I do not believe he feels easy with John Piper and the orchestration of this House.

Many people watch now as the government attempts to manipulate the news media, and that is impossible to do. Every government probably tries to influence the news media in some way or other and finds out it cannot. But one of the things I recognized, sitting on the government side when I was there, was that the opportunity for the opposition to criticize arises when ministers make statements in the House. On many occasions now—it is done deliberately; I am sure of that—ministers make their announcements outside the House. The Minister of Agriculture and Food, for instance, when he was making an announcement of totally inadequate funding for farmers in this province, made the announcement in that bastion of food-growing areas, that agricultural heartland, Mississauga.

The reason they do this is that their advisers tell them: "You don't have the tough Queen's Park press gallery there, the people who are familiar with the issues and who have some understanding of the past and the present. You go somewhere outside of Toronto, where the people are not familiar with the issues, and make the announcement there. The questions are not as tough. You might even get a puff piece out of the announcement as opposed to some difficult questions." That does happen on many occasions.

A situation arose in the House yesterday. It was raised by the member for Renfrew North, the deputy leader of the Ontario Liberal Party, who pointed out that just after question period an agent for the Attorney General was handing out a press release of an announcement that should obviously have been made in this House. That was most disappointing. I was told by the government House leader that I was supposed to pick up the phone and tell him every time this happened and register a complaint. If I did that, I would be on the phone continuously. It would be like a courtroom where a lawyer asks a very leading question, such as one that would incriminate the person answering it, and then someone raises an objection. The objection is sustained and the judge says, "Strike it from the record." Nevertheless, people have heard it and are influenced by that particular intervention.

We see numerous examples of these press conferences outside the House. The Minister of Culture and Communications made an announcement about Bernard Ostry outside the House, downstairs somewhere in this building, and we had to find out about it later on. There would not be much point asking about it in question period because VO now does not show question period at 12 o'clock. Since certain members of the House have complained about when they show it, they have now moved it to 12:30. I can understand why it would be moved to 12:30, with the number of questions that were directed by the opposition to the government about the spending habits of the chairman of TVO, who continues on in that position and continues, as far as I know, to have his credit card available for use in this province.

Regardless of the competence of this individual, questions were directed at his spending habits. Now people, if they want to see question period—I think it used to be at 12 o'clock, or at least 11:30, on TVO—have to stay up to 12:30 to see the government being brought to account. If you are on the government side, you think that is a great deal; you think that is wonderful.

People from TVO say: "Don't you understand? There's cable television which goes all day." What we have to understand is that not everyone can afford cable television and all those channels, but people with a television aerial in this area can pick up the TVO transmission. I think it is most disappointing that they continue to move it later and later into the evening. Soon it will become an early morning program, if it keeps getting moved. Of course that is in the interest of the government, so it is not going to complain about it.

What I am concerned about is watching a party which was rough around the edges at one time but which most people considered to be an honest group, a well-meaning group, if not as reasonable and responsible about what its role and responsibility would be in government. At least you knew what you got. It has changed.

We began to see the change last summer when they put the Premier, who used to wear brown clothing and informal clothing, in brand-new suits, the grey suits and the dark suits and the nice ties, the way you see Jack Layton now on television when they have a debate. You see Jack Layton all dressed up nicely now. I liked the old-fashioned NDPers who came in here with the patches on their elbows and the brown corduroy coats. When Stephen Lewis was here, he used to dress that way and would make some compelling arguments.

It is a changed bunch. As I look over there, there are a lot of new suits. First of all, a year and a bit later, the government collectively is about 1,000 pounds heavier than it was a year ago. Actually, if you take a picture of my cabinet—and this is generic, not just for the NDP—and then take one five years later, if it had the same people in it—and that is difficult for this government—you would find there are 2,000 pounds more sitting around that table. I can remember another cabinet where that was true.

The member for Hamilton West is here. He is a person I have always admired for his integrity and principles. He must shudder some days when he has to be part of announcements that are made or policies that are enunciated.

Hon Mr Allen: I had a good announcement today.

Mr Bradley: Yes. He says he had a good announcement today. One in several months is nice to see, and I am sure he is delighted about that.

Bud Germa from Sudbury used to be a fellow I saw as a real New Democrat. I would hate to tell members what he called the other people in his caucus; they were intellectual somethings. In this House, Mr Speaker, you would probably draw to my attention the fact that it is not appropriate to use that terminology. But Bud Germa was the kind of person I thought represented the New Democratic Party well.

Another individual, who passed away very recently, perhaps even today—I thought it would have been appropriate actually to have paid tribute to him. His name was Bob Carlin. The reason I remember the name Bob Carlin is that my father told me he voted for him when we lived in Sudbury. Bob Carlin used to be a CCF member for Sudbury. It lists him here in his biography as Robert H. Carlin. I do not think he would be very happy being known as Robert H. Carlin. He was with the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers and later the United Steelworkers of America.

The interesting thing about Bob Carlin is that he went too far to the left and the CCF kicked him out. He was part of the mine-mill union which, it was alleged, had communist leanings in those days. He had been elected as a CCF member of the Legislature. He had worked in mines. He had been a person who had gone through the tough times. He was one of those people who suffered quite a bit for being a union organizer and for being part of a union, back when it was tough to be a union leader, back when if you tried to organize big industries like that, there were goon squads that went out from companies to go after those who wanted to fight for the rights of workers.

Bob Carlin, who did pass away, I think today or yesterday, was a person who deserves a lot of credit. He reminds me of the old CCF and the old NDP, people who were prepared to fight for what they believed in.

Today I look over there and we have all kinds of new suits and fancy clothes—not everybody—as they have become a new-image government. Not the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore; she has always had those. But I look at some others over there and I see the brand-new suits. They know who they are on the other side of the Legislature.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: It is true. The member has just come in, so she probably did not realize the context in which I said it.

This is a change from the old days. This is a change from the hard-nosed, left-wing, tough NDP I knew in opposition and that I admired. I did not agree with them all the time, but I admired the fact that they had principles and stood up for those principles. They reminded me of the Labour government in Britain, which a lot of people disliked, but a lot of those people had principles they were prepared to stand up for.

Now we see the NDP sliding away from those. The business community is happy and the opposition is happy to see some of the changes that have been made. The member for York Centre said yesterday words to the effect that the people of Ontario sigh a collective sigh of relief when this government changes its mind under pressure from the opposition and outside groups, and I agree with that.

I look at Bob Carlin and I want to pay tribute to him. As I say, he got too left for the CCF at one time. He was actually booted out of the CCF and it ran a candidate against him. It says here:

"By 1948 the influence of the Communist party within the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers had become a matter of concern to both the CCL and the CCF. When Carlin opted to 'go along' with the communist-oriented international officers of his union, the CCF denied him nomination for the 1948 provincial election, ran an official candidate against him and he was defeated. In 1949 the CCL expelled"—that would be the Canadian Congress of Labour then—"the IUMMSW."

The person who was turfed as an NDP candidate again was a person who was prepared to take it on the chin in the early days of organizing in Ontario. I see some parallels today as the party moves away from its original positions. In fact, I was reading a column on September 14 by Thomas Walkom of the Toronto Star. Thomas Walkom would not be a person who would be attacking the NDP from the right. Anybody who reads his columns knows he is a person whom I would characterize as being from the progressive left; quite progressive left as a matter of fact. He talks a bit about what is happening to this government:

"And confusion abounds. What is the Rae government about? Has it sold out? Did it ever have anything to sell in the first place?... Rae, after all, is the man who during the 1990 election campaign"—and he is talking here about the abandonment of government car insurance—"faced the television cameras and advised voters to apply this credibility test to politicians: 'What are people's records? What have they said in the past? Whose interests are they defending? Is this something they've said before, or is this just something they're saying now?'"

Tom Walkom continues: "That's what he said then. But what he has done—particularly his insurance decision—has shaken some of the stoutest NDP supporters." One of them is a very good friend of mine, Mel Swart from Wellingthorpe, who by the way will be celebrating his 53rd wedding anniversary next week, so the New Democrats will want to make sure they send him a card.

Tom Walkom says about him: "Former New Democrat MPP Mel Swart, the driving force behind the party's auto insurance plan for many years, called Rae's decision 'heartbreaking' and 'a very serious mistake.' Even in the government itself, long-time party members were left shaking their heads in disbelief."

I am not saying this as a person who has any inside in the party, but Thomas Walkom, who interviews many people and has a chance to chat with many members of the New Democratic Party in his role as a journalist, has determined this from his interviews.

He goes on to say, talking about the NDP again and the fact that it has jettisoned some of its original policies:

"In large part that's because the NDP has become enmeshed in its own contradictions. On the one hand, it wanted to become electorally relevant. It hired consultants and pollsters, tried to figure out strategies that might win seats. The pollsters continually told the party: Don't talk about the economy; you can only lose support if you do that; talk instead about justice and fairness."

He goes on to say: "Perhaps, underneath, the party's MPPs never really wanted to win power. Opposition is, after all, comfortable." Those are some of the observations he makes. That is often true, by the way, of people in opposition.

There is no question in my mind as I look at the faces of cabinet ministers these days that it is a difficult job. I know what it is like and I know it is a tough job. I can tell when they come in looking tired that they have had a tough day on the job. If they have not, that means they are not doing their job. I know that all the looks of tiredness from time to time are because they are working long hours. I do not begrudge them the fact that they are paid $90,000 a year, that they have the limo and the credit card and all those things, because I know they have a tough job to do.

Mr Walkom goes on, and I am concerned about this, Mr Speaker, as I know you probably are, about the Agenda for People. This is how he refers to it. He says, "The party's so-called Agenda for People was a sham—a document prepared in a hurry and released in the midst of the 1990 election campaign on a lazy Sunday afternoon, in the hope that no one would pay attention." When he talks about it in terms of the promises, he says, "They were not meant to be taken seriously." He goes on to say, "Besides, as a senior aide acknowledged this week, the party's positions in opposition were too often opportunistic, geared to winning headlines. They were not well considered."

Hon Mrs Grier: What a different opposition you are being.

Mr Bradley: I would simply point out that the point I am making this afternoon is how the NDP was supposed to be different. What the people have discovered is that it is simply another political party in the process of the province of Ontario.

This, I know, is annoying the Minister of the Environment, the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, whose family, both she and her husband, is what I would consider to be good, hard-nosed New Democrats who have always been supportive of NDP principles in this province. I have admired the contribution they have made in the past and the views they have expressed in the past. Which means the Minister of the Environment must just be shuddering some days when she has to defend some of the policies the government brings forward. I really believe that is the case.

This is what is happening in Ontario when we talk about some of the things the NDP had promised. Mr Walkom in his column on September 14 mentions this. He says: "But other long-time promises remain. Senior figures say the government will push through anti-scab legislation in the face of business opposition, while scrapping some of the other controversial proposed changes to the Labour Relations Act." They say they are going to scrap pension reform; they say they are going to go ahead with limited welfare reforms, and so on and so forth.

There was a list of things the NDP promised and delivered, which was rather interesting. I will not go into the exact detail of it, but it talks about auto insurance and the promise that was made. We all know that was abandoned at Honey Harbour. We know how many members within the NDP were annoyed with that, because that was central to the NDP campaign. It talked about a minimum tax of 15% on corporate profits and no provincial income tax for families below the poverty line, an inheritance tax on estates valued at more than $1 million, a speculation tax on property and other principal residences.

What we have, of course, is an NDP tax commission. It will look into these things. I must admit that the people on the tax commission are pretty left-wing in many cases. Neil Brooks could not be considered to be anything other than very left-wing, and some of the other people on that commission are quite left-wing, so I am sure that some of the recommendations will be rather interesting. This government, I suspect, will not be implementing them. The minimum wage, pay equity, child care, poverty, rents, working to keep Ontario businesses alive, employment equity, the environment, housing—it lists a number of the promises that were made here, and the promises have been cast aside or postponed in terms of their implementation.

I used to sit with a member who, again, I remember was a rough-and-tumble New Democrat in those days. His name was Ed Ziemba. He and I both served at the same time as critics for the Ministry of Correctional Services. If he could have foreseen what is happening today in terms of the policy being implemented by this government as compared to what he used to stand for—he was not a milquetoast social democrat; he was a hard-nosed, strongly committed New Democrat—I would think, although others may have different views, he would not be entirely happy with what is happening to his New Democratic Party today.

Hon Ms Ziemba: He is happy, believe me. Stick to our own policies.

Mr Bradley: The member should have some humour over there and not be so humourless. She is going to perpetuate a stereotype of socialists as being totally humourless.

Hon Ms Ziemba: I smile.

Mr Bradley: That is why she has to smile. Some of the people who have been around here a while smile at some of this stuff. I think I know the person I served with well. I am sure the member opposite knows him even better than I do, but I well remember the cases he used to fight in here and what he used to stand up for in opposition. I cannot believe he is entirely satisfied with what we are seeing. I am speaking of the former member for High Park-Swansea, I believe it was, Ed Ziemba. I wonder how he would feel about this, but I will not go further into that.

600

Hon Ms Ziemba: Happier than David Peterson.

Mr Bradley: Here she is again, interjecting about David Peterson and so on. That is fine. She had many years to do that and to make those comments.

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. There will be ample time afterwards to ask questions of the member for St Catharines.

Mr Bradley: To continue on in some of the observations that are made, this is a Thomas Walkom column entitled "Bush's Puppet Hankers For Bigger Stage." I am not going to get into the federal part of this, because this is a provincial House, but he makes an interesting observation near the end, if our Prime Minister were to depart for other pastures.

He says: "But if he does go"—he is referring to Brian Mulroney—"we will, in a way, miss him. We will have no one on which to focus our hatred. And Bob Rae, for one, will have no one left to blame. Ontario's Premier will have to justify his milquetoast, do-nothing Ontario regime on its own merits. He will no longer be able to deflect criticism by blaming Brian Mulroney." That is a rather interesting observation on the part of Mr Walkom.

There was somebody else who made an observation, another person who I have found to be an interesting observer of everything in this country, a well-known person respected by people of all political backgrounds, Robert Fulford. It is from the Financial Times of Canada, October 21, 1991. He makes some observations along the lines that I made in the House today, in a much more articulate fashion. One would expect that from Robert Fulford. He seems to say these things in a rather sad way, as opposed to perhaps an angry way—perhaps I have misinterpreted his words—more in sadness, I think, than in anger. He says the following:

"A CEO of my acquaintance, after hearing Rae at a breakfast meeting for business leaders in September, reported: 'If you close your eyes, he sounds just like Michael Wilson.' Perhaps he feels he has to. Given his party's anti-business history, he must now appear to be even more enthusiastic about business principles than his Liberal predecessor was. At his present rate of change, three more years of turning on the spit of public opinion will transform Bob Rae into Margaret Thatcher.

"His cabinet ministers, on the whole, move less swiftly. Many of them have carefully trained themselves, over the years, to despise business and the free market. Now, in office, they have been developing a new approach, which can be roughly paraphrased: 'We are not as antibusiness as you thought we were—or, in fact, as we thought we were.' This leaves business people unimpressed and makes party members uneasy."

Mr Fulford goes on to say: "The Toronto Star recently quoted a melancholy chap who runs the Hamilton Centre riding association: 'A lot of people who work for the party feel a certain kind of moral integrity—maybe even superiority.... I think now there is a profound sense of "Geez, we're just like the other guys."'" He's the sort of person who knew for certain that government auto insurance would be introduced soon after the NDP won the election. It won't be, of course, because—well, the New Democrats discovered that it would cost a lot of people their jobs and drastically increase the deficit. Before the election of 1990 these facts were known to everyone else in Canada but by vicious conspiracy were kept from the New Democrats."

He talks a bit about socialism. "Socialism also implies more creative ideas about health care, welfare, and education—yet there are no signs of any such ideas around. In fact, this government seems even less enthusiastic about helping the universities (a major problem in Ontario) than the Liberals were. In most of these fields, its major concern seems to be the placing of NDP members on the boards of universities, hospitals, museums, etc. Whether these appointees care anything about the institutions in question is of little interest to the government, an approach it learned from the federal Tories.

"The Ontario experience seems to demonstrate that even if political principles are nurtured over decades they can be worn away with astonishing ease. In this case, NDP principles haven't been able to withstand even one year of bad economic times and media hostility. Perhaps that's because the principles were never articulated or understood in the first place; perhaps they weren't principles at all, just vague feelings of goodwill on the one hand and hostility on the other.

"Recently, Edmund Dell wrote A Hard Pounding, a book about the British Labour government of the mid-1970s, which he served in the Treasury under Denis Healey. One sentence leapt to my eye from the page: 'There is no comparable example of such intellectual and political incoherence in a party coming into office.' That produced a shock of recognition. Incoherence is what troubles the Ontario NDP. It is often, and rightly, attacked for its bungling, but we expect incompetence in people who have never seen the inside of a cabinet room before; experience and the usual weeding out will fix that. Incoherence, the lack of shared purpose and direction, is far more serious. Parties die of it."

Robert Fulford is not some right-wing ideologue or Neanderthal. He is a person who probably would be quite sympathetic to the views expressed by the NDP in the past—some of those views at the very least—and he is expressing disappointment, as has on occasion Mr Walkom, the columnist for the Toronto Star, at the NDP having strayed from its original purposes.

In addition to John Piper, who seems to be orchestrating things on the other side of the House and making this a slick government, a politically smart government, we had an interesting addition to the cabinet office, one of my favourite people when he was in the news media. He could ferret out stories about government waste, incompetence and so on. I am referring, of course, to the award-winning journalist from CBC Radio, Gerry McAuliffe.

Mr Conway: He has not gone over too?

Mr Bradley: Gerry McAuliffe was an individual to whom it did not matter which government was in power—Tory government, Liberal government, NDP government. When he wanted to, he could dig up an awful lot about the government and bring it to public attention. I think in that sense he did a fine service for the people of Ontario.

The NDP has hired Gerry McAuliffe. No doubt it is paying him more than the CBC and it serves a couple of purposes. No one can blame Mr McAuliffe, of course, for taking an appointment of this kind. He probably has his personal reasons, perhaps his relationship with the CBC or whatever. I do not know. I am not going to get into that.

Mr Conway: Forty thousand?

Mr Bradley: Forty thousand would not touch that kind of office.

Just as when it does not make statements in the House and avoids criticism, the NDP has succeeded in taking away one of the harshest critics of government, and I say that in a generic sense. It has put him in the cabinet office to advise on—what would we say it is?

Mr Conway: Critical issues management.

Mr Bradley: "Critical issues management" I think was the terminology.

Mr Conway: That is what the press release said.

Mr Bradley: That is what it said. I am disappointed that we do not have Gerry McAuliffe around to ferret out those stories about this government. It, of course, will have the advantage of his advising it on how to avoid these things. That is something interesting to observe. One would not have anticipated that the NDP would go out of its way to have to hire people to do those things.

We also have some other good tactics that the government uses to satisfy itself. One is that, after question period, it will have selected cabinet ministers who will go to the press gallery lounge and just chat with the folks from the news media, chat them up and make them feel as though they have some special access to cabinet ministers. That is smart politics and no one should deny a government that opportunity. But again, it goes contrary to the image I always had, perhaps wrongly, of the NDP of not being that kind of manipulative, slick government. Instead, well, what you see is not what you get these days unfortunately. From a political observer's point of view, that is kind of sad. I guess from an opposition member's point of view it is great because you can criticize it and say, "See, they're just like the rest."

There must be a lot of people like Mr Fulford and some true New Democrats across this province—he quotes someone from the Hamilton Centre organization. That is his quote, not mine. He has his source, I do not.

The member for Welland-Thorold is another critic. I have always enjoyed the observations of the member for Welland-Thorold about things affecting this Legislature. I remember the fight he put up on behalf of government automobile insurance in Ontario and against the fact that the previous government was going to deny an unfettered opportunity to sue for people involved in accidents. I think it was 17 hours he spoke in this House. He read out various messages. He did everything he could to prevent the government from having its way on automobile insurance. Naturally, he would be a person who would leave the retreat at Honey Harbour with some degree of bitterness or perhaps resignation to the fact that was happening. I am going to get back to his comments in a moment. In fact, I want to look at a couple of other things that have happened.

We raised in this House the issue of the intervention of the Ontario Provincial Police with members of the opposition and with the news media. We will get to the bottom of is eventually; somebody will fess up to this. We appreciate the Ontario Provincial Police protection in here, however what we do not appreciate is how this government attempts to use the Ontario Provincial Police. That is my observation.

Hon Mr Cooke: You are totally wrong.

Mr Bradley: The government House leader disagrees, the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore shakes her head and kisses at the speaker, but I happen to know—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr Bradley: I know exactly what is going on with what the government is doing.

The Deputy Speaker: Will the member for St Catharines address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr Bradley: I will certainly do that.

The Deputy Speaker: It will prevent any heckling at way.

Mr Bradley: That is true. I wish I could believe that, Mr Speaker.

We have a fine police force in Ontario, even though we do not have the Golden Helmets of the OPP any more, which were such a great tradition. They died in Perth. Their last appearance was in Perth, unless they have been brought out for the royal visit. They may well have been brought out for the royal visit. That was something. We had the OPP Pipes and Drums. We had the grape festival parade in St Catharines. I was looking, as were so many people, for the Pipes and Drums and the Golden Helmets.

We know those are the ceremonial duties of the OPP, but we also expect that they are going to be preoccupied with fighting crime. They have had an excellent reputation over the years for fighting crime in this province. Instead, the government has them sidetracked and, as a result, we have the member for Halton Centre being interviewed in her constituency office about some leaked government documents. We have a Toronto Star columnist being interviewed as the result of a leaked document from the Ministry of Natural Resources. We have a spin document coming out of Treasury that has nothing to do with the budget. It is simply a spin document being put out, a public relations document, and we have the OPP used to investigate that.

This I consider to be—it is a subjective evaluation—intimidation: intimidation for members of the opposition, intimidation for members of the news media and intimidation, certainly, for the public servants who feel that on all conscience they must pass these documents on to the opposition as they used to do to Stephen Lewis with great regularity. I think there are many people in the NDP caucus who feel uneasy about this. I do not expect them to rise and say that, but I would suggest that when there is a meeting of their caucus taking place, this issue is raised and there are a lot of people who are very uneasy about it.

Also there is the use of Alpha, this new company which, heaven knows, must have NDP connections. It orchestrated presentations to the standing committee on finance and economic affairs when it had budget hearings across the province. All of a sudden, all these former NDP candidates and others who are sympathetic to the government showed up at these hearings to speak favourably of this budget that nobody else in the province seemed to speak favourably of.

Now we see the select committee on Ontario in Confederation. It must be Alpha again involved in orchestrating or bringing forward the people who are going to make presentations there. It will be interesting to see who is involved with Alpha because I know the NDP would not simply pick its friends to do these things. It is different from other parties.

I sit on the standing committee on government agencies. The member for Etobicoke-West is here and he would know what that committee is like. What we are concerned about in that committee is not so much—let's put it this way: the committee does not have its power because the committee cannot veto—that there is not equal party representation on the committee, which would make it multi-partisan, and not so much that members of the committee cannot suggest their own appointments or hear from others who want to comment on it, so it is a very weak committee, but what is annoying to those of us in the opposition is that it is portrayed as something else. What is probably even more galling are the people who actually believe it is different. You read some pieces somewhere that say, "Bob Rae has made a major change." In fact, he has not.

The present government makes the past government pale in terms of the New Democrats it is putting on every agency, board and commission. That is a right, but if anyone thought things were going to be different with this government, as the Premier suggested they would be during the campaign and in opposition, they certainly are disappointed that we are getting party hacks and other supporters in many cases filling positions the government may appoint people to. That is discouraging. But of course the public relations will continue and it will be portrayed as something substantially different.

Today I was quite interested in the Red Hill Creek Expressway and that announcement. What we are seeing now is the government, in my view, attempting to influence the results of municipal elections. I say "in my view," because the government House leader is probably going to disagree with me vigorously.

I remember the piety as the former Minister of Transportation, the member for Etobicoke-Rexdale, rose in the House—or was it outside the House? I cannot remember—to announce that the Red Hill Creek Expressway was finished, done, no more, that they would not take this road through the valley because it would destroy the valley. Now we hear that route is back on the table, that it has not fallen off the table, but we do not want to announce that because we want to make an announcement that is going to help Brian Hinkley, not get him into trouble.

We have it on one day, off another day. We heard it was a moral decision, an environmental decision and now we find out there is some uncertainty about it. There we have a situation where the government is not coming entirely clean, or is about to change its position. If they made a decision that they said was environmental, that they said was a moral decision and stuck by it, there may be some people in this House who would disagree with it, but at least people would say: "That's their position. That's what they stand for. That's what they're going to do." Now we hear it is back on the table.

Let me draw a parallel for those who are in government and know what is going on. I remember the old debate over the Rouge Valley and whether there was going to be a road through the Rouge. I watched the Ministry of Transportation. It was told by cabinet, "Find an alternative route to the one you had chosen." As the presentation was made—I was present—lo and behold, what appeared back on the map but the original route, not only some of the other options but the original route the people from MTO wanted. I said at the time: "This was clearly not the instruction. It was clearly to be alternative routes to this and what is this doing on the paper?" Eventually, of course, it was shoved aside. They recognized that the government meant business, that we would not accept that particular route and we looked carefully at all other routes.

I hear that with the Red Hill Creek Expressway anything goes, anything is possible, and we will not really find out what is going on until after the November 12 municipal election, because we want to make sure we do not adversely impact on Brian Hinkley's campaign in Hamilton. That is what we are going to see. I look for a nod from the members of the Conservative Party when I say to you, Mr Speaker, did not the Minister of Transportation indicate that everything was still on the table, that every route was still possible? He did, and that is going to disappoint some people.

Sunday shopping is another favourite issue. This government was going to close down everything on Sunday and we would have virtually nothing open. We would still have some factories working and other people who had to work on that day, but this government was going to close things down because it cared about the retail workers, it cared about family life and it cared about a common pause day. Now this government has changed its mind. It will put forward various excuses. I know the excuses. I know what the reason is.

Mr Perruzza: It is called listening to people.

Mr Bradley: It is exactly. I am glad the member intervened. It is called reading the polls. They got a poll that said, "The majority of people want this to happen," so they had to make a choice between polls or principles, and they chose polls. Again, perhaps there are people in this House and in the province who would say it is a wise decision and would breathe a collective sigh of relief, but there are many people who would say: "What about the NDP promise? What about those principles? You know I voted for those principles and now I find they are being abandoned. Now I find that there are going to be exceptions, that the bill is so full of contradictions and exemptions that if you use them the right way, we would have a hodgepodge of openings around Ontario." People will recognize that as a retreat.

Then we had the dispute over the salary of Marc Eliesen, the new head of Ontario Hydro. We have seen a retreat on this after much questioning in the House and public embarrassment. That is understandable, and as I say people may breathe a sigh of relief over that. Once again we have seen the jaw come out or people getting caught and then having to retrace their steps. Does this sound familiar? Sure. It is what has been experienced by many governments in this world over the years.

To those who thought the NDP was ethically and morally better than other parties, it is not. It is a partisan organization that would like to keep itself in power in Ontario and will do what it has to do to achieve that power. I hope at the same time they can implement some of the things they believe in because I know some of the members over there believe strongly in many of the things they campaigned on in the past.

I saw an interesting television program. My new favourite television program is Haeck from Queen's Park. This is a cable television show from my friend the member for St Catharines-Brock. It is a very interesting show. She has some good guests. I saw the member for Niagara Falls on and she was marvellous in answering the questions and very informative. She has others on and they have been very helpful in educating me on what the NDP stands for. Last week she had the member for Welland-Thorold on and this was most interesting because—

Mr Stockwell: What did he say?

Mr Bradley: The member for Etobicoke West is probably wondering what he had to say about this government. The member for Welland-Thorold is a person who does not care about ruffling feathers on the other side. He is not one who will kiss the ring of the Premier on any occasion simply to endear himself to the Premier. He is one who says what he thinks, and this is what he said in answer to one of the questions from the interviewer, who did an excellent job as well:

"Ontario is far, far more than the intersection of Yonge and Bloor. But you have some people, and quite frankly they're dominating the government process right now, as they have in previous regimes, who really think that once you are finished with Harry Rosen's clothing store and"—some other places in Toronto—"and the Park Plaza, why that's all of Ontario." I think he said Creeds—"Harry Rosen's clothing store, Creeds and the Park Plaza, why that's all of Ontario."

Hon Mr Cooke: It is closed.

Mr Bradley: The government House leader says it is closed and we know why it is closed. The economy is so weak in Ontario now that it probably fled to the US at the sight of this government.

He goes on to say: "I'm fearful of this—values that are being rejected by some of those downtown Torontoites. I say no more."

The point he is making, quite obviously, is he believes, as he once said, that there is an exclusive group of people in the Premier's office who make all of the decisions and—

Hon Mr Cooke: Herschell.

Mr Bradley: Exactly. They go from regime to regime, except there are different faces. You need a program to see who they are, but all these places are going to be filled. He seems to believe this group is responsible for decisions.

I would not call anybody these names at all, but I know that members of the House would want to know what the member for Welland-Thorold thinks of some of the decisions that have been made.

He says: "People are telling me...they are fed up with government that doesn't pay attention to the needs of small-town folk, be it in western Ontario or people up in northern Ontario. They are sick and tired of Toronto values, of downtown high-rise values being imposed upon them."

Then he says: "I am telling you, when people are told that some pinhead made a decision about eliminating the path to the Queen for police officers, they're saying: 'Now where did that come from? Who made that decision? What kind of nitwit could possibly think that somehow people in this province were demanding that the Queen be abolished from the oath for police officers?' And they are right. When we saw the horror show of the elimination of the Ontario scholarship bursary"—he goes on to talk about that—"happening but weeks before those same students were going to be receiving it, again the timing of that was dumb."

"The problem is you got people up there in Toronto who won't take the time to get out of their limousines and talk to real people in their factories, in their shops, in their fields."

"Let me be more precise," says the member for Welland-Thorold on the Haeck from Queen's Park show. "The sad reality is that there are some people at Queen's Park who better get out of their limousines and talk to real people. The sad reality is that we are like so many other governments, guided by too many $1,000-per-day consultants, and I don't need Gerry Caplan to tell me what it means to be a New Democrat. I can go to talk to factory workers at their plant gates. I can talk to shopkeepers in their shops. I can talk to farmers in their fields, senior citizens in their homes, students in their schools and get a far better feel for what people need in this province than I can ever get from the $1,000-per-day consultants."

"I say we better start talking about it and making decisions about it because people are fed up and aren't going to take it any more and I don't blame them."

He is talking about some of these decisions that are made, the member for Welland-Thorold: outspoken as always, a strong New Democrat. When he goes across the province, I am told, even today he is one of the most popular speakers. Virtually every association likes to have him speak. He gets a larger round of applause than the premier in many places and this is what he says about the government. If he says that, I think one would consider my observations about this government as being somewhat moderate by the same standard.

Let me talk about a few other things that we need. There was initially, I guess, some attempt to have a left-wing government. I recall when at York University there was an organized session for civil servants and people who work in ministers' offices where the Bennites from the city of London—some people would call them the left-wing loonies; I would not say that naturally, but some people would say that—were brought over to educate civil servants and some of the political people in the government as to how they should operate a government. This was organized up at York University and certainly John Crispo was not invited to that particular affair. There may have been others, but he was not.

I look at another problem that is certainly on the minds of many people in Ontario. That is the problem of crime in our province. The statistics are worrisome. Police officers are worried. Every day we seem to pick up the newspaper and see killings taking place. We see armed robberies. We see gangs of kids going through the CNE on a rampage or going through the Eaton Centre or some market or into stores. We see people being surrounded. What is the term for that, when they surround the people?

Mr Ruprecht: Swarming.

Mr Bradley: "Swarming" is the term used when they surround these people. Some violent beatings take place. Finally some people, other than those who have been talking about crime for a number of years, have discovered there is a problem with crime. There are two approaches to it and there are two tactics one must use. One must look at the source and the cause of crime and one must look at how you deal with the immediate problem.

I reject entirely those who wish to give me the history of the person committing the crime, as though that somehow is an apology. We worry about the perpetrator of the crime and say, "If you only understood how this person was raised or the environment in which the person was brought up, you would understand why the person committed the crime." I say, tell that to the person who is the victim of that crime. Tell that to the people who have been mugged, the people who have been assaulted, the people who have been killed. Tell them about that.

That is one approach, where people simply dismiss it that way. The other extreme is when people say: "All you need is to triple the size of the police force and make all the laws very tough, similar to some countries that are very drastic in their laws. That will solve the problem." Quite obviously, it is only a combination that is going to solve the problem.

First, we need strict enforcement, good enforcement, support for our police forces in this province, not constantly nagging at them, not constantly going after them, but supporting them when they are carrying out their responsibilities to enforce the laws in this province. Second, we have to deal with the social problems that breed crime in the first place. It is a combination. We cannot simply forget one and pursue the other.

I hope this government addresses itself to this issue. I notice it has become an issue in the Toronto campaign. I am not going to get into the campaign, but I notice that all of the candidates seem to be talking about it as one of the issues. The two candidates for mayor are talking about it. Both people have indicated a concern about safety and are concerned about crime. We all have to address it as well as we can.

We have to deal with the Young Offenders Act. The Young Offenders Act was probably brought in with good intentions. There was a feeling that a lot of kids were going into prisons. Again I make reference to a former member of this House. Ed Ziemba and I went to many prisons in this province, both as Correctional Services critics, to observe what was happening. One of the things we came to a conclusion about was that many of the people who were in those prisons were too young to be in those prisons and were deprived of the appropriate education which would allow them to function well in society.

Some of the recommendations that came out of that committee and its movement during estimates through the prisons were helpful in making at least some changes in the prison system to ensure that once those people got out they were going to be capable of functioning in society. But there is a concern that the Young Offenders Act has turned out not to be the panacea that a lot of people thought it would be, that while it has addressed one problem, it has created another.

You have a number of young people in our society, as small as that number might be compared to all the kids we have in our society, who are just thumbing their noses at it, who are laughing at the police, who are laughing at society because they know they can get away with doing whatever they are going to do. You can even have adults who are malicious using young people to carry out their crimes because they know those young people would have a lesser sentence, and that is most unfortunate.

I think we have to have a careful look at it. I do not think we throw it all out and say, "We have to put all those kids back into prison."

Mr Winninger: Throw them in jail.

Mr Bradley: The member for London South intervenes. One of the problems we are confronted with now is a lot of people who are sick and tired of seeing this happen, of seeing these people thumb their noses at law in this province. That is a great concern. The member can smile if he wishes. I accept his intervention. I do not deny that opportunity. I know he may feel there is an overemphasis on this from the other side of the House. But I am very concerned about the Young Offenders Act. I am not one who attacks it willy-nilly. I think there have to be changes to it to be sure that young people cannot be used by adults to commit crimes and that indeed young people cannot simply thumb their noses at the law and make a mockery out of the law.

There is another thing, and I will not dwell at length on this but I am going to touch on it because I know in the constitutional negotiations going on at present there is talk of entrenchment of a lot of things in the Constitution. I am going to tell those members—their Treasurer knows better than anybody right now, and probably their Chairman of Management Board, and probably those who sit in cabinet week after week—they will see as time goes on the major effect the Charter of Rights can have on government policy. They can be forced into a lot of policies that are extremely expensive and may not be a priority for their government because an unelected court has dictated this.

I may disagree from time to time with what an NDP or a Conservative or a Liberal government does, but I prefer the option of throwing that government out and replacing it with a government that is pleasing to me in terms of its policy initiatives and programs as opposed to having to deal with a court that cannot be thrown out. That is the great problem.

People have had that opportunity. When people disagreed with a Conservative government, they replaced it. When they disagreed with a Liberal government, they replaced it. If they happen to disagree with the present government, they will replace it. I prefer to see that option available rather than judges making these decisions.

Speak to the Treasurer. Speak to the Chairman of Management Board. They know the implications of these court decisions which arise out of the Charter of Rights. The Minister of the Environment is going to be confronted by people who will use the Charter of Rights to try to avoid problems with the environment. I have seen those cases arising.

You have to be extremely careful about entrenching things. If you have a policy and want to implement it and you are elected, you have the right to do so. You have the right to do so when you have the mandate of the people of this province.

If this government wishes to become deeply involved in a number of areas that are costly, it has the right to do so, but better it does it as a democratically elected government than have the court impose it. I am telling members, that can happen.

Hon Mr Allen: That is why you support the "notwithstanding" clause.

Mr Bradley: That is a good intervention. The member for Hamilton West says that is why I support the "notwithstanding" clause. In my own personal view, the "notwithstanding" clause should be used in only the most extreme cases.

I look at courts—and remember, these people are not elected. Many of them in years gone by were not always the most qualified people, in my view. I hope I do not face one, having said that. I think governments today, at the federal and provincial levels, are making a better effort to appoint people who are going to be good judges, who are going to be good people to sit on the bench, who are not simply people affiliated with a political party. That is going to be very helpful, but I worry about people who are now sitting in various posts making policy decisions as a result of sitting on a court.

But I think the member for Hamilton West, in his intervention, wisely reminds members of the House by asking me the question about the "notwithstanding" clause, because I certainly disagree with the one way it has been used. I have seen it used once now, and I believe it was to cut off legitimate rights of people in the province. That is why I think it is extremely dangerous to do that. However I simply make the observation that they as a government will have taken away from them the right to make a lot of decisions by a court which will be imposing its will and its priorities on the government.

I should also mention, in St Catharines, because we are in the New Enterprise Store—oh, I have not mentioned the computerized axial tomography scanner for the Niagara region, and people would be disappointed if I did not. The Minister of Health has a difficult job and I know she is sympathetic. I watch her in the House as I ask her to look about this. She is sympathetic and wants to make sure the criteria used for the approval of CAT scanners are appropriate. I know it is not easy for her to simply make an instant decision, and it is not a good way of doing things, but I must say that people in the Niagara region are waiting some five and six months now for elective use of a CAT scanner.

I do not want to pretend that emergency use is not available. That would be conveying a wrong impression to members of this House. Emergency use is there, but there are a lot of elective uses that are still important medically that take five and six months for the CAT scanner, so I hope the minister gives her approval. As you know from our own area of the province, Mr Speaker, the local community pays for the CAT scanner, the diagnostic machine, through fund-raising and the hospital must operate it out of budget, and part of that budget is of course supplied by the province.

I want to look at the police commissions around the province. One of the most important appointments the government will make is to the police commission. I think there is a gentleman by the name of Andrew MacKenzie who works in the Solicitor General's office who has something to say about this. I am not saying he makes the final decisions, but certainly he is involved with this. I will say this through the minister: I hope he looks carefully to observe that the people who are appointed to the commissions are not people who are constantly antipolice. I do not think that will be the case. I hope it will not be the case. There is nothing more discouraging for members of a police force.

I recognize we must have civilian control. I know the NDP will be implementing its promise of years gone by of putting the majority of people from the local municipality on the police commission and not the government representatives; I know it will be doing that. I am confident because it has said this in years gone by. But I think it is important to place on those commissions people who understand the difficulties that police officers in this province face in carrying out the responsibilities.

Policemen and policewomen themselves are the first to want to cast away those who break the law within their own ranks. They do not want corrupt people in their ranks; they hate it because it reflects upon the whole police force. But they are equally concerned if they see a number of people appointed to police commissions who are simply out to get the police, to disagree with the police, who have long-time grudge against the police.

I hope there is a good balance appointed to the police commissions across Ontario. I am not going to get into naming individuals and get into a fight over those things. I simply put forward that need for balance in all appointments, but certainly on police commissions.

Another thing I want to talk about is the New Enterprise Store in St Catharines. There is a new idea. The Minister of Education will be interested in this and I am sure he will read Hansard. The Minister of Colleges and Universities is here and is very interested in these things.

The New Enterprise Store is strongly supported by Brock University. They have an entrepreneurial centre at Brock University which is getting some education progressing in the field of entrepreneurship. One of the offshoots of this is that a fellow by the name of Gene Luchzkiw in St Catharines, who used to teach at Governor Simcoe Secondary School and now is up at Brock University, is working very hard to establish within the education system this entrepreneurial spirit. It is something that has been missing for a number of years.

Just starting with the previous government, and I hope this government continues it, they have now set up a New Enterprise Store in the northern part of St Catharines where a lot of skills can be learned about how to operate a business. These people are unlikely to be the people who are running General Motors, although I cannot guarantee it. In other words, we are not looking at the president of General Motors. Maybe some day we are. We are talking about a lot of the small business people in this province who start up a little store or a little business and can keep it going. I think that is what this government should encourage as much as possible.

I could probably go on at some length, but I want to give some of my colleagues a chance to speak. I know the member for Etobicoke West is eager to come forward.

Mr Stockwell: No. I am enjoying this.

Mr Bradley: He is enjoying some of these, so I found some more.

I want to go to the automotive industry because it is so important to the city of St Catharines, part of which I represent in the Legislative Assembly and have had the privilege of representing for over 14 years. I listened to a resolution put forward by the member for Kitchener-Wilmot this morning and had a brief intervention. I am not panning his resolution. As a member of this Legislature he is entitled to put forward whatever he wishes.

I did caution him that when one promotes one mode of transportation over another, there are people who will not be amused by that. If they were watching today, I suspect a lot of people who are interested in motorcycles and in the production of motorcycles would say, "That's great stuff." I know what the member meant. He did not mean that people should not buy cars or should not buy bicycles. I want to be fair to him.

In some minds, the interpretation that comes forward from such a resolution may be that the cars produced in St Catharines, or at least the parts produced for those automobiles in St Catharines, may be fewer in number than might be the case if the government were not specifically promoting one mode of transportation or another. I know people in the automotive industry and the Canadian Auto Workers, Local 199 and Local 676, Hayes-Dana and General Motors in St Catharines would like to see cars continue to be produced. They would like to see them, no doubt, and would approve of this, being environmentally better cars which consume less gasoline and have better emissions.

Mr Stockwell: How long are you going to be?

Mr Bradley: I suspect I will be finished by 5 o'clock today.

What we had was in fact a tax on auto workers earlier this year. I do not know who gave the Treasurer the ideas, but they certainly were not cleared with some of the members opposite who have been with CAW before, because these taxes amounted to a tax on auto workers. The tax is being implemented in the middle of the deepest recession since the Depression. At a time when our automobile industry is facing and continues to face unprecedented competition from offshore, this is being implemented. There was a retreat on that.

I am sorry; I promised the Treasurer that if he retreated I would not say he retreated on this, but I think I can get away with it because he did not entirely do what I wanted him to do. I suggested to him that he withdraw the tax and that he encourage people to purchase new vehicles. The reason for that is the major problems with air emissions and what I call mileage that cars get, in other words, the miles to the gallon or litres to whatever it is now. In fact, he could improve the air and the fuel efficiency if he had everyone in the province buying a new car. At the same time he would certainly spur an economy that needed spurring.

Instead we had a punitive tax on automobiles that was somewhat modified when the opposition put considerable pressure on the government, exposed the problem, and when the representatives within the Canadian Auto Workers justifiably made representations to this government and said, "Look, you must understand what the implications are of this."

There was another bit of a retreat that took place, or a change of course, and it was predictable. Just as this morning, when I saw the government members almost en masse get up to defeat a motion by the member for Oakville South with regard to sunset legislation and so on, I heard the same thing last year when members of the opposition recommended that the Management Board of Cabinet carefully analyse and look at each of the programs to determine which were still needed in 1991, which were not, what could be postponed and what could be altered, to bring down the deficit in this province. It was not to wipe out the programs—we need a lot of those programs—but to carefully assess them.

The same Treasurer who stood in this House during his budget and said, "We're here to fight the recession, not deficits," of course had to stand up several months later, in the fall of this year, and announce cutbacks in various ministries. That is reality. I see that even my old ministry, the Ministry of the Environment, took a hit in terms of the constraints. But a year ago we were told: "You're being dinosaurlike. You're using the old way." The Treasurer talked about my being in favour of supply-side economics, for instance, and being Ronald Reagan-like. That was not the posture I was looking for on that issue.

Looking at the automobile industry, then, I hope we will continue to have policies in this province that will encourage investors to keep their investment in Canada, that will have General Motors booming for a number of years in St Catharines, and TRW and Hayes-Dana Inc all keeping people employed, my neighbours in my neighbourhood, the plurality if not the majority of whom work in the automobile industry.

I also want to comment briefly on the royal visit, because I see the royal visit is on at the present time. I can't tell, because there are a lot of people who are close to the royals today. What I found interesting, and this observation was made by others in this House, was that the government that was so eager—as the member for Welland-Thorold said, it was a bad decision—to remove the oath to the Queen for police officers and some other traditions that are related to Britain and our heritage with Britain, is quick to cosy up to the royal couple when the cameras are flashing. One columnist, the award-winning—or if not award-winning at least well-known—dean of the gallery said in his column that it would take a crowbar to separate the Premier from the royal couple when this visit was on.

Mr Sola: It would take a blowtorch.

Mr Bradley: Someone else suggested it would take a blowtorch to do so, and I suggest to the Treasurer, who would know this talk, Sudbury talk, that it would take a diamond drill to separate them. This is an interesting observation. I just find it ironic that when the royals finally show up, everybody wants to get close to them. I hope our Premier does welcome them and I look forward to having our Premier do so, as our Lieutenant Governor did and as the Governor General of Canada did earlier, but I just find it so ironic that we will be very close to the monarchy at this time.

One of the last things I want to deal with is—

The Deputy Speaker: Excuse me. I hate to have to interrupt you, but I have to make this announcement before 5 o'clock. Pursuant to standing order 33(a), the member for Parkdale has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations concerning elevator accidents. This matter will be debated today at 6 pm.

Mr Bradley: I will be relatively brief in concluding my remarks. I want to get into the field of education. I have been a teacher with the Lincoln County Board of Education in years gone by, and a member of the executive of the Ontario Public School Teachers' Federation at one time. I well remember when the federations were not involved in partisan politics.

I always encouraged teachers within the teaching profession to become involved with three or four different parties. I encouraged their involvement in the political process. I always thought it was unwise, however, for a federation to align itself with any particular political party. The first time I can recall this actually happening was in the by-election in which the present Premier ran.

I remember a good friend of mine, Malcolm Buchanan, who appeared before the committee—by the way, Malcolm must be just shaking at some of the retreats this government is involved in, because he is pretty left-wing. I saw Malcolm at a ballgame the other day and he said something about, “You’re not wearing a red tie,” or something. I just wanted to get back to him on that and say, “If I were wearing a red tie and members of the present government were, how would you know the difference between the two governments?” In Malcolm’s eyes our government could have been quite right-wing, and I am sure the present government is not what he would call left-wing.

Anyway, I remember asking Mr Buchanan several questions about this. The Tory government was in power at the time. I said to the federation representatives who were making representations on another issue that I thought at that time it would be unwise for them to align themselves with any political party. In fact, they were doing that by supporting the Premier in the York South by-election. This was the first I could remember—it may have happened before that—actually supporting a political party. Bette Stenson was the Minister of Education at the time. I said: “You’re going to close the door to the government that’s in power. They’re always going to believe you have a particular agenda if you do that. You’re also going to alienate yourself from the other opposition party.” So I think it could have been wise for them to have stayed away from that.

We had an election campaign and few observers would have any observation other than to say that they heavily favoured the New Democratic Party. One of the reasons may have been because the New Democratic Party said it was going to pay 60% of the cost of education across Ontario.

Mr Bradley: The agenda for power is in the hands of the member for Etobicoke West—sorry, the Agenda for people.

They said they would pay 60% of the cost of education. Many of my friends in the teaching profession were very disappointed to see that not only are they not paying 60% of the costs this year, but in fact the percentage the province pays dropped for yet another year.

There are many students in Ontario in post-secondary education who thought tuition fees were going to be abolished. Instead, fiscal reality has dictated that this government would raise those tuition fees. There are many within the university community who thought there would be millions upon millions of new dollars infused into post-secondary education, and they in fact have been disappointed that this government has not carried out that policy.

Hon Mr Allen: Twice as many capital dollars as last year.

Mr Bradley: The minister is understandably—I will not say touchy, but understandably concerned when he hears this. When I look at what was expected as compared to what the government has delivered, I am sure the member for Hamilton West would like to see even more delivered, because he is very committed to his particular portfolio. But this government has not delivered and has done exactly the opposite on tuition to what many people expected would happen.

It is not with anger that I address the assembly today. It is in fact with a sense of disappointment and dismay that I see a government breaking its promises, a government which has got us into a terrible economic mess, a government which is discouraging investment—not deliberately, but through its policies discouraging new investment in Ontario and stampeding others who have money to invest out of this province, as we see plant closedowns.

One thing I wanted to mention was Temagami, because I remember well—I was at Trent University, where some of the people were very strongly opposed to any intrusion into a very pristine area of this province, a beautiful area of the province called Temagami. I understand that they are actually still cutting wood in Temagami, despite the Premier being arrested there for the purpose of getting himself on television. While I saw the member for Victoria-Haliburton being arrested and subsequently convicted for something he believed in, I see that they are still cutting lumber in Temagami.

Today I saw in the paper that there was another change which would potentially allow for development to take place in the area. I am not being particularly critical of that, but I am trying to remember all the people who were so critical of the previous government when it wrestled with a very difficult problem.

The member for Muskoka-Georgian Bay today rose in the House and asked a very ironic question of the Minister of Natural Resources. He was pleading the case of sawmills in the province. It was only months ago that I remember New Democrats and others who support the New Democratic Party talking as though we would not see another tree fall in Ontario. Yet the trees are falling, the cutting is taking place, and there are people who might just be watching this program today who would take note of that.

As for those who sat in in the offices of Liberal ministers to protest, I hope those same people today who were so vociferous in their criticism of previous Conservative and Liberal governments will stick to their principles and, when they feel this government is doing the wrong thing, will not simply apologize for the NDP, will not simply put their NDP card first and their principles second, but will call the government to account in a very public way.

I have had the opportunity to do that to a certain extent this afternoon and I appreciate that opportunity. I know other members of the House will want to join in this debate on the supply motion and I yield the floor now to the next speaker.

Mr Stockwell: I think the very brief outline the member for St Catharines offered as a critique of the government so far in this session, this term, was fair. One thing you must say about the member for St Catharines in his criticism is that it is a fair, fair comment he makes. He is not nearly as outrageous as some in this House—not to name them—but I wish he had gotten a little further involved in some of the promises this government made, maybe as far back as, say, August 1990.

I will compliment the member for St Catharines and I will just comment briefly on a couple of items I would like to point out. I have with me today the official press release for the announcement of the Agenda for People from the then leader of the official opposition. There are interesting words in here that I think should be added to Hansard so the members across the floor can remember exactly what they were saying a year and a half ago or so at this time.

Some of the statements include, "I started this campaign by saying our party would not be representing an endless catalogue of promises to the people of Ontario." He went on further to suggest in his press release, "We don't use election campaigns to discover problems, promise solutions and then ignore them afterwards." He said, "Many will be borne by the interests that can afford to pay more than their fair share" and he talked about "affordable programs."

I think the next one is a very important one that really cuts to the heart of the issue with this government. They announced on this date, August 19, 1990, during the heat of the campaign—the now Premier stood up during his press conference and said, "The Liberals make promises and they break promises." That was very hard hitting stuff.

I think it was important that those things should be said by this government. Now we can read them back to them. The member for St Catharines outlined a few broken promises. I have the Agenda for People, which is basically an entire broken promise. I would have hoped that he would have gotten a little further into this and I am somewhat disappointed he did not.

Mr Bradley: I appreciate the comments of the member for Etobicoke West. I will not take further time in the House because I have had a great opportunity to speak to various of the issues. I hope that I have been helpful in counselling the government in some. In others no doubt they will ignore what I have had to say, sometimes wisely probably and sometimes unwisely. I appreciate the supportive comments from the member for Etobicoke West and I look forward to his intervention, which I am sure will be more colourful and bombastic than mine and perhaps even more effective than mine will be.

Mr Villeneuve: I too am pleased to participate in this debate on interim supply. I will not be quite as lengthy and full of advice as my colleague the member for St Catharines was, but I do want to suggest some very important things to this government, particularly in the area that affects agriculture, an industry that is in deep trouble and that we sometimes take for granted, and also some of the problems that have been occurring in the part of the province that I very proudly represent.

Certainly the agricultural crisis right now must be touched on. I visited the area of Leamington in Essex county. I was in Lucknow on an evening when over 1,000 very distraught and concerned farmers got together to try and send a message to both the federal and provincial governments.

In the Agenda for People, it was suggested $100 million would be there in additional assistance and help to agriculture. This was a long time before we wound up with the very depressed prices that we have in grains and oilseeds, the very depressed prices that we have for the red meat industry. A lot of people figure that the red meat industry, because of low grain prices, is rolling merrily along making dollars, but it is not.

These areas are of great concern, because we have here the backbone of the province. The rural parts of this province effectively provide the stimulus and provide much of the employment, and not with a great deal of fanfare. However, it is and very much will remain the backbone of Ontario.

We are finding that small communities in the 1,000 to 5,000 population range dependent on agriculture are very concerned and distressed right now because there is no money being spent other than for absolutely essential items such as groceries. Whenever we have a situation where one farmer in this province provides enough food for over 100 of the residents of this province yet the spouse of this farmer has to take an off-farm job to be able to buy groceries, we have a situation that is purely and simply not tolerable.

The farmers are basically asking the provincial and federal governments to help in a stopgap measure. The government of Ontario has not seen fit to join in the net income stabilization account, a program that was enriched by the federal government in order to promote its use so that it would bring dollars to the agricultural community one year sooner than originally intended. It is one of the safety net programs that was set in place. It is not perfect by any means. However, it is a vehicle that can deliver some cash. The reason the Minister of Agriculture and Food in this province told us was that the program was announced too close to the Treasurer's budget and therefore they were not able to accommodate the $8 million or so that was required to bring the NISA program to fruition in Ontario this year, in 1991.

Farm-fed grains is another very touchy subject. We had the Ontario Cattlemen's Association meet I believe all caucuses this week. People who grow their own grain at a loss to feed their livestock are being punished, and that must be recognized. It is something that is not at all fair and must be recognized by the provincial government.

The labour legislation that has been leaked through the media to the public is of great concern, as it appears to be now designated to apply to agriculture. As members know, agriculture has been exempt from labour legislation to this point. However, a number of different scenarios are being suggested. They are coming at agriculture at the worst time of all, when the economics have never been worse since the Great Depression of the Dirty Thirties, yet this government intends to have labour legislation oriented to apply basically to agriculture in general and to farm labour in particular, and it is a situation that is of great concern particularly the timing of it right now.

The environmental laws are also making people wonder. The Minister of the Environment today, pursuant to a question from me regarding a problem that has now existed the town of Caledonia and the surrounding area for some time to seven years—it has not been addressed. Indeed, officials from the ministry are saying that garbage and the types of what I have in photographs here are a natural and normal thing to occur on farms. I am sorry, it is not. It must be addressed and it must be looked at now.

Production of ethanol would provide a new market for grains and for those items grown on farms that presently are being sold at much less than the cost of production, have alone getting into the profit situation. Ethanol is a win-win-win situation. On numerous occasions I have expounded on the benefits of an ethanol industry in Ontario. It is ironic that in the United States, which this government often points its finger at, saying it is not environmentally conscious, there are two million bushels of grain corn being transformed into ethanol on a daily basis, to create a new market for grain—I readily admit that—but also to reduce the emissions of carbon dioxide and carbon monoxide by between 30% and 40% in all vehicles, particularly in those urban areas where we have the greenhouse effect, where we have pollution, particularly on warm days. That could benefit us. We can use up to 10% ethanol in fuel, and it is a known reducer of both carbon dioxide and carbon monoxide.

Ethanol plants must be set up across the province. Certainly eastern Ontario is a natural. I could go on for an hour to tell members why, but I want to make sure the ministries involved—the Ministry of Energy, the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, the Ministry of the Environment and the Ministry of Municipal Affairs—are fully aware that eastern Ontario must be the home of at least one ethanol production plant, if not more.

Supply management has been of great concern to us all in this Legislature. Under the GATT rules, we have been very concerned about what is happening to article XI, which allows supply management. It allows a price-setting mechanism by producers. It allows import controls at the borders. It allows the meeting of the required commodity domestically and no more. What has happened here is that, all of a sudden, Germany and France have recently come on side and it looks like supply management and article XI will indeed be saved, according to what we see now in the most recent news from the Uruguay round of GATT negotiations.

However, one concern that I have brought to this Legislature on at least occasion is that within this government—the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, to be precise—the Ontario broiler chicken marketing board, which has supply management powers, has been ordered to roll back by 12 cents a kilo the price that broiler chicken producers will be receiving. This was done by the Farm Products Appeal Tribunal. It now appears that if this tribunal does have the power to roll back a cost-of-production formula that has been gospel up until this point, maybe we are having supply management actually undermined at 801 Bay Street. It is something this government keeps on telling us it is there to protect and to make sure it stays in place. But by their very actions, they are doing the opposite. That concerns me very much.

Cross-border shopping is something that must be addressed. We are dealing with different bills that increase the cost of gasoline, cigarettes and alcohol. Those very items have been identified as the main attraction for our Ontario residents to go and purchase goods in the United States. There has been no solution, not even an attempt at a solution. All they have done is make the problem worse. We have dealt with Bills 83 and 84, which increased personal income tax and increased the tax on tobacco, and we will be dealing shortly with legislation that will increase the cost of fuel and alcohol—exactly the wrong direction to reduce cross-border shopping. This government must be told that it is not listening; it is not even going in the right direction. Not adding these taxes would have at least not exacerbated the problem.

The St Lawrence Parks Commission is an organization I am very proud of in the riding I represent. It does stretch into other ridings adjacent to mine along the St Lawrence River. We are still working on the Grenville Park problem. I have contacted the Minister of Tourism and Recreation on a number of occasions and he has advised me that they will be able to make a deal with the Cooper family, which has operated Grenville Park very successfully this year—as a matter of fact, at 100% occupancy—and has effectively got the park fully booked for next year. But they have not been able to come to an understanding that will give the Cooper family a long-term deal so it can go ahead and install the electrical services that campers require on a beautiful site along the St Lawrence River at Johnstown in the southwest corner of the riding I represent. I say to the government, please get going. Get on with the job because this is where we have attracted not only local people but people from out of province and out of country to use the facility and to spend some money in an area that is very economically depressed.

On Sunday I was pleased to assist at graduation exercises. Our volunteer firefighters had taken several days off in their life and schedule, their work, to attend fire prevention graduation exercises. They will go out into their communities and advise local residents how to prevent fires. They have gone through many upgrading exercises whereby they recognize toxic fires and all the rest of it. This is to prevent those situations that could cause damage to property, injury and even death. I commend them and I say to the Solicitor General, who is here with us this afternoon, if he wants to see volunteer fire departments that work well, he should come to Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry. He is always welcome. I put them forward as examples of people we sometimes take for granted, but indeed they provide an excellent service to our community.

Law and order is becoming the number one issue in this province. Law and order is something we took for granted until several years ago. We are now finding a very rapidly escalating number of murders in this city and elsewhere. If we had taken a poll a year ago, law and order would have been down the line. The environment and a number of other items would have been up there. If we ran a poll right now as to the concerns of the average Ontarian in the province, law and order would likely wind up being the number one concern—people's safety and the safety of their family. This government must not forget that. It is most important that it be addressed now, not as a confrontational issue but together, working with our many police detachments throughout the province.

Finally, I cannot let the opportunity go by without talking about the closure of the registry offices, the most frustrating subject I have ever had to face in almost eight years as an elected member of this Legislature. This government has set out section 123, which says that a political party can take a subject and bring it to a committee, be heard and the government will listen. It is an absolute fallacy. It does not happen. We have even had a solicitor for the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations tell us it is a farce, and this solicitor is acting in a client-solicitor relationship for the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

If you want a frustrating situation, registry offices in the riding that I represent, registry offices that have been there for almost 200 years have been made to disappear at the stroke of a pen by a minister who may not even know where Alexandria, Morrisburg and Prescott are. It is very frustrating. I want to put it on the record. I hope this government is listening. I attended the annual meeting of the United Empire Loyalists in my riding on Sunday. Handwritten documents are now being removed from those registry offices. In my other life as a real estate appraiser, I have seen them, penmanship the likes of which you could not duplicate or ever replace. These documents are disappearing. No one knows where they are going. Our history, our signposts of history are being destroyed by the government for no apparent reason.

Mr Conway: I want to say a couple of things about the member who has just spoken, who is probably better situated than most of us to speak about the stresses and strains in rural Ontario today, since there are not too many places that are quite as rural as Moose Creek in Stormont.

I want to concur in his last observation that few things we have done in recent memory have attracted the attention of small-town, rural, eastern Ontario quite like the announcement made some months ago by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations around the closure of what are essentially a dozen small-town rural registry offices. I simply want to say that my friend is right. Genealogical societies, among others, have expressed to me their concern about the real disadvantages that are going to be faced by the societies and their membership as they try to go about accessing public information that has been very readily available to them in communities like l'Orignal, Morrisburg, Alexandria, Almonte, Prescott and other such smaller locales around southeastern Ontario.

Certainly the farm community, the rural part at least of eastern Ontario, which is the part of the province I know best, is experiencing a great deal of pain at the present time. I must say there are few things that have irritated those communities quite like the way in which these closures have been announced and proceeded with. Earlier today in the standing committee on general government we were finalizing the report of that committee on this particular initiative, and I am simply here to say that the member for S-D-G & East Grenville is correct when he observes that there is ongoing irritation around the way in which rural Ontario has been expected to pay such a disproportionate share of this governmental cost-cutting initiative.

Mr Bradley: A two-minute intervention is a short period of time, but I was pleased to see the member drawing to the attention of the House many of the problems confronting the rural part of Ontario.

On Monday evening, the North Niagara Federation of Agriculture will be having its annual meeting at which Eugene Whelan, who is a very strong supporter of farming people in this province and this country, will be the guest speaker. Members may know that there are many difficulties facing farmers in the Niagara region. They have been begging, cajoling and asking that they have the opportunity to sever part of their properties in the Niagara Peninsula in order to keep their businesses viable. Those of us who have been involved in planning in the Niagara region know that is the first step towards the disappearance of farm land. So we implore the government of Ontario not to change its land use policies in such a way as to permit the paving over of farm land in the Niagara Peninsula.

Equally important as part of this equation is the fact that there must be the necessary support, either through appropriate prices or—probably politically realistic—through government intervention, to assist these farmers who are under unprecedented pressure from offshore, the free trade agreement and the international agreements.

Farming in general is a tough business. I hope this government and the Minister of Agriculture and Food will assist these people appropriately so they will not be selling their property off, so those of us who believe in the preservation of agricultural land can do so in good conscience because we will know we are saving not only the farm land itself but the farmers. They will be looking for this support from this government and from the federal government. Certainly those in the Niagara Peninsula who believe in farm land preservation and the farming industry will be supportive of their efforts.

Mr Villeneuve: I want to thank my two colleagues my good friend the member for Renfrew North and the former Minister of the Environment, the member for Simcoe-Catharines, for their observations.

While the member for Renfrew North sat in cabinet, a new registry office went into his area and the Almonte area, a new registry office that was not intended to be closed down the following year. A quick switch occurred there, and it wound up that Perth was going to be closed down and Almonte was going to be kept open; some gerrymandering the likes of which we have never seen before and this is even before the report from the standing committee on general government was even put together.

It makes you wonder why we are asking our people to come down and make presentations. They do it in good faith. I could never excuse the now Minister of Energy for the way he treated these people when they came to that committee. He told them: "It's nice you came, but we're not listening. We're the government and we can overpower committee any time." They were actually rougher words than that, and he has been asked by a number of other people to apologize. I do not know whether he has.

As far as farm land preservation is concerned, today we have discussed what is happening to land in Haldimand-Wellington, where there is garbage; there is definitely garbage, and I have photographs here to prove it. The former Minister of the Environment, the member for St Catharines, has said, "Don't allow them to sell." It is interesting that the government of Ontario is now looking at some of the assets it can liquidate to reduce its deficit, yet it would not allow a farm family with some land that is marginal to sell a little of it to try to keep the banker happy. It does not make sense.

Mr Christopherson: I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate and discussion on the interim supply bill, and probably more important, some of the overall macro issues that are affecting our province.

I paid particular attention to the previous speaker who talked about the agricultural segment in the province. Representing a downtown, metropolitan area such as Hamilton and the centre, those issues are not necessarily the ones I deal with on a day-to-day basis. Yet clearly the issues of agriculture are as important to this government as any others we face.

I find it interesting that in those comments there were suggestions that we were not doing nearly enough—which is really far from the course in any kind of debate on anything any government does: the opposition says it is not enough; standard fare—and suggestions that somehow this important sector of our economy is being left high and dry.

One of the difficulties in politics is that there are very few real tests one can apply. There are polls, there are elections, but the thing that really matters is the general election. I think what is significant for us here in this house at this time is that, at a point where we are hearing from the opposition that the NDP government in Ontario is not doing badly when it comes to the issue of agriculture, in one of the key agricultural provinces of this great nation it is indeed the NDP that swept to an overwhelming majority. Although I do not live there, I am proud to say my father is from Saskatchewan, and I have to believe that certainly there would have been a great number of farmers who voted in putting the overwhelming majority of New Democrats in that august House in Saskatchewan.

I think of the election just before that in British Columbia where, while agriculture itself is not necessarily the primary industry, certainly the environment, natural resources, growth, the seasons are all things that are very important to that province. Again the same result: a general election, the test that matters, and what happened on that election day? An overwhelming majority of New Democrats sit in that Legislature also.

I suggest to the previous speaker and others in this house today that on some of the tests that matter, for farmers and for others, when we look at what is happening in our sister provinces across the country, I do not believe a reasonable argument can be made that we are failing so badly when we see the kind of majority governments that are happening as elections are coming up across this country.

It needs to be pointed out that the leader of the third party, the leader of the Progressive Conservatives, was indeed out across the nation trying to put forward the very arguments that the previous speaker was about the experience in Ontario. In spite of that opinion, we still showed that Canadians clearly are prepared to support the principles, goals and aspirations of a New Democratic government.

I suggest that the experience in Ontario, surely to the contrary of being a problem, played a positive role in the results of those two elections as people recognized not only that we can talk about issues from the point of advocacy but that indeed we can govern well and do it during the worst economic times we have seen in 50 years.

I would also like to pose the suggestion that there are a lot of people in Ontario who, while not as pleased with this government on some issues as we might otherwise hope—I suggest that is not unusual for any government in power—are looking at the kind of recession we are in and the kind of attack the social fabric, the social net of this province is under from the federal government. There are an awful lot of people who quite frankly are pleased that it is New Democrats who are making these tough decisions, because they know the alternative choices the two parties across the way could and would make in these kinds of circumstances and who indeed would pay the price for those decisions.

I look at my own riding, my own community, and I look at the situation of hospitals, of the major transfer payments, an area that is important to the urban centres of our great province. At St Joseph's Hospital and Chedoke-McMaster Hospitals in our community we are faced with some very serious capital funding issues. Yet we are still working, even within this tight fiscal situation, to try and deliver the funds necessary to meet the needs and not do it in a short-term, crass political fashion but rather in a fashion that creates an investment in the community and also plays into the long-term plans of this province that we have for meeting the health needs of the citizens of Ontario. We do that in partnership with those folks. I for one think there are an awful lot of people in Hamilton who are pleased that they see New Democrats sitting here in these circumstances making those kinds of decisions on hospital funding and not other parties.

I can point to the board of education, to the benefits of the anti-recession fund and to money to the municipal councils as other examples of how this government has dealt very differently with the recession than would other parties in the same circumstances. Again, I point to what has happened out west to show that the kind of message the opposition would like to believe it is sending out to the people and to the nation is not being received that way at all.

I would like to touch on two things quickly because I know there are opposition members who wish to speak and I want to give them the opportunity to do so. One of the things I want to mention is partnerships. The Red Hill Creek Expressway was mentioned, a very topical subject today. Not being the ones to answer the questions, it is not always easy for the local members, as the Speaker and others can appreciate, to put one's own point of view. But with the Red Hill Creek Expressway what did not come out today was the fact that it was the regional chairman of Hamilton-Wentworth, Reg Whynott, who stood beside the Minister of Transportation and wholeheartedly endorsed the process we have and said they were pleased to be working with us in partnership.

I do not suggest for a minute that that means they are backing away from their opposition to our decision and I am not suggesting for a minute that they suddenly think we did the right thing and their position was wrong. But I am suggesting they have recognized our legitimate right to govern on this issue and to make decisions and to set the priorities that we need to. They have also recognized their need to represent the citizens of Hamilton-Wentworth. So they have concluded, as have we, that the best thing to do is to try to work together to find a solution, to find an alternative that goes as far as possible in meeting our goals and needs and also those of the local representatives.

I found it difficult to listen to a member—let's just say from quite a distance away—earlier suggesting that it was being done for crass political reasons, when indeed it was someone who was known to support a party other than this one who stood beside the minister and said he endorsed this; that indeed it was working with the local mayor and regional chairman and regional council that had us bring this here at this point in time, and that in fact it was at the request of the regional council that this meeting was held as soon as possible and hopefully the result of the meeting would be the agreement to the terms of reference.

Those sorts of things do not come out in question period, but I think they need to be said and clarified. Those are the kinds of partnerships, not rhetorical statements, not suggestions that other people have to back away from their positions, but an honest, sincere effort to work together co-operatively to try and find solutions to problems we share in common in a lot of these matters as the senior level of government to municipalities.

I will close in talking about partnerships by also suggesting that our commitment to work with the business community is as strong now as it was in the beginning. It means as much to us as it did in the beginning, and I think it means as much to the citizens of Ontario. But I think it also needs to be said that while our ministers are doing everything they can to make that relationship work, it does not help the situation when we see things such as the employee payroll tax increase that the federal government suggested to pay for its employee wage protection plan and we hear not a peep, nary a peep, from the business community.

Yet we did not fund it that way and all we heard was a barrage of threats that we had better not because of all the dire circumstances. A fair and reasonable person would suggest that is not necessarily applying the same rules to everyone in terms of trying to achieve any kind of a partnership.

I would also point out, last, about our deficit, about which there was such a hue and cry, that when the federal government suggested—we are still seeing more and more of this coming out—that its estimates were so far off that its deficit may be increased beyond what it projected—$10 billion—which is greater than our entire deficit, how much did we hear from the business community, from the opposition, about how terrible that was? No. "That was okay that is the way government does business." But we put the cards on the table and said: "Here's the real situation. Here are the real numbers for the next few years," and all we heard was that we had totally lost control of the agenda.

I suggest to members that the good citizens and intelligent voters of Saskatchewan and British Columbia have not been fooled by this kind of nonsense and neither will Ontarians, as they continue to support and watch this government finish out its term and achieve the goals and solutions that we have set forward as best we possibly can under the circumstances we have. I think they will appreciate the fact that it is a New Democratic point of view that is making those decisions and not the alternatives across the House. I thank members for the opportunity to address this House.

Mr Conway: I have heard a lot here in the last few weeks, but that early part of the previous speaker's commentary that, "There may be some people in Ontario who don't like what Uncle Elmer's doing on behalf of the government for the farm community, but we bloody well understand that they appreciate that in Estevan and Lillooet, is a leap of faith if ever I heard one.

I thought I heard you say, Mr Speaker, that there was a domestic debate around what the government was and was not doing in terms of Ontario agricultural policy. To hear my very creative friend the member for Hamilton Centre suggest, "There may be naysayers in Glengarry who don't understand all the good works that the Ontario provincial government is doing with respect to agricultural policy, but you should know that in Turtle Creek and in Fort Smith they really appreciate this," I think is a very interesting connection.

I watched, as I think probably some other members did, the returns the other night from both Vancouver and Saskatchewan. I congratulate the two governments. I think they did quite well. I was particularly struck by the fact that the British Columbia New Democratic Party, losing 2% of the popular vote, managed none the less to substantially increase its share of the seats. I think they have full value for their victory. I have been listening to Mike Harcourt and Roy Romanow over the last few months, actually about the last year. To hear Mike Harcourt on the economy is literally to hear Frank Miller.

If members watched the debate two weeks ago when the CBC reporter put very directly to Mr Harcourt what his intentions were around traditional NDP labour policy, you could not extract an answer from him on that subject for love nor money. To hear Roy Romanow on the virtues of a balanced budget and the values of prudence in public finance is to make one think one was listening to Bob Nixon. I suggest the western Co-operative Commonwealth Federation tradition is not exactly the one we are seeing here, which is giving us $35-billion worth of additional deficit in four years.

Mr Carr: I want to carry on along those lines. It was interesting; I was reading in Maclean's some of the quotes on the election victory night and the great picture of Mike and some of the other members. On page 15 it says, "Throughout the 28-day campaign, he successfully fended off attempts by Johnston and the Socreds to tie the legacy of David Barrett's free-spending NDP government to Harcourt."

The socialists in this province under the Premier were like David Barrett's, who basically spent so badly they were thrown out of office. "Harcourt stressed that the banks were goals to be put in place when affordable, not policies to be instituted right away, and early in the campaign, Harcourt declared that an NDP would practise"—"practise what?"—"fiscal restraint." Let me repeat that, Mr Speaker. He declared that the NDP government would practise fiscal restraint, a pledge he repeated after the victory when he said, "We have to live within our means."

I only wish the NDP in Ontario had listened to some of the fine statements made by the socialists out in British Columbia, because when statements like that are made, and if they can truly come through with them, all parties should applaud. Unfortunately what we have here in Ontario is not the Mike Harcourt socialists; we have the David Barrett's, who lasted three years and were tossed out.

I was interested to watch Mike Harcourt on Canada Now. He said four times during the interview with the press the following morning "balanced budget." Four times he said it. I would not go quite as far as saying it was Frank Miller, but I hope these people who are championing some of the western NDP are going to take a hard look at themselves and see that maybe they are being a little bit more practical than the government when it has given this province $10 billion and has saddled the next generation with a deficit we will never come out of.

Mr Johnson: The member for Hamilton Centre has made some very positive and interesting comments. I listened intently to what he had to say. When we compare the governments, or at least the situations, that we have in British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Ontario, there are some very slight or minor similarities, but we all know, as has so often been stated, that the economy of Canada in essence is driven by the engine of Ontario.

I think the similarities end there, because we know that in Saskatchewan, where Roy Romanow is taking over as Premier—he is Premier-elect—he has found a situation even worse than the situation the Premier of Ontario found when becoming Premier. In British Columbia, I would like to think they have not been devastated nearly as much by this recession as we have here in Ontario.

I think all these differences have to be taken into account when you observe the different realities these provinces have to live under. Realistically you can compare, but certainly you have to take into account these very important differences. We in Ontario have lost many more manufacturing and industrial jobs than they have in the other provinces and that is something we have to take into consideration.

Mr Stockwell: It is not very often I disagree with my friend the member for Hamilton Centre, because I think he brings points to the debate that I suppose I disagree with, but I certainly have a belief in his right to express them. I think it is a quantum leap for this member to take any credit for any of the victories out west for the NDP cousins. They distanced themselves from this party as though it was a bad smell, with all due respect. They wanted nothing to do with its deficit financing, its $35-billion debt in four years or five years.

If anyone could understand that, if any party in this House could understand why, it is certainly ours. They had as much popularity out west as athlete's foot, and the same thing applies to us and the federal government. As quickly as we can distance ourselves from them, their western cousins were distancing themselves from them. Balanced budgets, no deficits: They sounded an awful lot like the Conservatives in Ontario. To suggest for a moment that they should take some credit for this victory is really insulting.

There could be some working together, some collusion; maybe they will ship some workers out there. I am not suggesting that is not good or healthy, and maybe it is appropriate. It really pushes the sense of reason in this House to the furthest limit when this government, which is not even popular in this province, stands up and begins to take credit for socialist victories in British Columbia and Saskatchewan. Please, no more fairy tales.

Mr Christopherson: I would like to just pick up on the last comments of the member for Etobicoke West, which will tie in to the comments of the member for Renfrew North who talked about the fact that I mentioned that those victories out west may have had something to do with the fact that the scare tactics seen by the opposition members did not work.

I wrote down the phrase "pushes the reasoning of the House." It was the phrase used by my friend the member for Etobicoke West and I suggest that there is not a person watching who would not believe and understand that most assuredly, if we had lost those elections, both those members and others would have been screaming that it was because of this government and because of what happened in Ontario. They would have made that connection much stronger than I ever dreamed of doing.

I would also like to thank my colleague the member for Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings for his kind observations. They are much appreciated.

I would also like to quickly comment on the member for Oakville South, who talked about parties running for office now saying they will run a government within their means and who talked about a balanced budget. I hearken back again to the fact that it was the third party who ran on a single issue platform of no tax increases and talked about fiscal responsibility. When they talk about "within means," I suggest that what it means is that working people, families in poverty, education systems, municipalities, the environment, all the issues that matter to people, would have paid the price under the slashing and cutting and burning of a Tory government. That is why they did not form the government and we did.

Mr Callahan: On a Thursday night at 10 minutes to 6, I want the people who are watching this program not to think the channel has suddenly flicked into remote or reverse.

I come from municipal politics. I listened to the member for Etobicoke West and I listened to my colleague from Hamilton, and I think back to the days when I was on municipal council, where parties did not mean anything, or at least they did not in Brampton when I was there. You had an opportunity to get up and speak and try to help the people in your community.

The first time I saw this chamber in 1985 excited me because I thought, "Here is the ultimate of politics, the ultimate opportunity to help people." Having sat here from 1985 and listened to the debates in this House, I have come about that close to quitting, and that may sound naïve but—

Mr Perruzza: We will push you a little the next time around.

Mr Callahan: The member for Yorkview has spoken again at nine minutes to 6. I will not respond to that because it is a political comment.

Mr Christopherson: It's Downsview. You're in dreamland again.

Mr Callahan: Maybe. I just came back from New England in the United States. I think the people in the US, after the controversy that took place there, are looking for government, looking for their representatives to put forward their positions and to accomplish things for them.

I am sure any person who has sat on city council has felt good when he went home at night, because he had accomplished something. We sit around here and gabble gab—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): Order, please. Interjections are out of order, particularly when the member is not in his seat.

Mr Callahan: We sit around here and we play political games. The reality is, people watching this know there is a three-party system in Ontario. The New Democrats, who formed the government, obviously have their own philosophy. The Liberals have theirs, and the Conservatives have theirs. I venture to say that if one was to travel through the caucus of the NDP or through the Liberal caucus or the Conservative caucus, one would find people who are not necessarily married to that philosophy. They go the wide gamut.

I applaud the government. Perhaps it is because of the accident—and I do not say this in a pejorative way—of having formed the government in the last election that it brought people forward who were not necessarily tagged with a totally socialist attitude. They are people who think, who care, who talk in their caucus, who debate the issues. That is reflected by the fact that there are many issues that have been brought forward in this House that appear to be very "cannot change it, no changes, non-negotiable," and yet members have negotiated. I applaud them for that. I think that is good. Perhaps that has breathed a breath of fresh air into this Legislature.

I happen to have the privilege of chairing the standing committee on public accounts, which is traditionally a non-partisan committee. The people who sit on that committee are people who treat it in that fashion, non-partisan. In treating it in a non-partisan fashion we are trying to accomplish things for the people we represent in our ridings who cannot come to this august chamber, for whatever reason, and express their views. It is a real treat.

I think the people who sit on that committee are marvellous people. We are trying to address the question of alcohol and drug addiction in this province, and perhaps in Canada, perhaps the world. In a sense what we are doing is looking at an issue that affects probably eight out of 10 Canadians directly or indirectly—their children, their husbands, their wives, their fathers-in-law, mothers-in-law. We have an opportunity through that committee to accomplish something that we will be allowed by the House leaders to debate in this House. I challenge those House leaders to allow us one full day of debate on that particular issue, to be able to bring to the fore for the people of this province how important that issue is.

I practised criminal law for 30 years and I can tell members that 70% to 80% of the crimes that are committed in this province or this country or this world are drug or alcohol-related. We have heard people talk about the problem of justice, the problem of being safe in their communities. There is no question that is a very strong commodity in our world today. Look at the United States. Just read Bonfire of the Vanities. In the South Bronx the judges and the lawyers and the prosecutors come in in the morning when it is daylight. They order in for lunch because they are concerned about being killed on the street if they go out to lunch. At 4:30 the clerk of the court, like a wagon master, says, "Yo ho." They all go out, 100 or whatever, to their cars and get them before dark and bring them back to the courthouse so they can all go right out to their cars and drive home.

Is that what this province or this country is looking forward to? We are getting there. You look at pockets in the city of Toronto that are drug-infested, where people are being killed and harassed in their apartments. Should we not be concerned that we are going to be a mirror image? We collect megabucks—I wish the Treasurer was here. He is a good friend and I do not criticize him on a Thursday afternoon for not being here. Why is there no money? We collect megadollars in tax for alcohol, booze of all types, cigarettes and so on. Where is that money going? Why is it not being allocated towards helping these people who have drug or alcohol problems?

We heard this morning from a representative of Portage Ontario. It is the only program in place for young people, the jewel of our society, our next generation, our leaders, the people who are going to carry on after many of us are retired and dead. They have room for 42 young offenders in the totality of the province, which has to be 10 million now. There is nothing else—nothing.

When we talked to the person who runs this program I am very curious to find out whether or not the question of alcohol and drug abuse was linked with the question of having a learning-disabled kid. I have to tell members—I hope to bore them and I hope to continue this—that he told the percentage of kids who had learning disabilities was staggering, kids who had wound up having a bad feeling about themselves.

I am going to tell members, just to wrap up, and I intend to adjourn the debate because I would like to speak on this at great length, so members should get ready for

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member does not have to adjourn the debate. He will automatically have the floor upon resumption.

Mr Callahan: To give some continuity to it, one of the reasons I got into this place was because of the Halliwell report, which absolutely destroyed, in my view—

Hon Mr Cooke: It was a fluke.

Mr Callahan: If the government House leader says it is a fluke—

The Acting Speaker: Order. We have considerable business to conduct beyond 6 of the clock. We are already beyond 6 of the clock. I would appreciate it if the member for Brampton South—

Mr Callahan: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. Everybody have a nice weekend.

VISITOR

The Acting Speaker: I would like all members at this time to welcome back a former member of this assembly sitting in the west gallery this afternoon, a former member for Wentworth East, Ms Shirley Collins.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon Mr Cooke: Pursuant to standing order 53, I would like to indicate the business of the House for the coming week:

On Monday, October 28, we will conclude discussion on the motion for interim supply, followed by second reading consideration of Bill 85, the Fuel Tax Amendment Act.

On Tuesday, October 29, and Wednesday, October 30, we will continue with debate on Bill 85, followed by Bill 86, the Gasoline Tax Amendment Act, and Bill 130, the Retail Sales Tax Amendment Act.

On Thursday, October 30 in the morning, we will deal with private members' business: ballot item 41 standing in the name of the member for Parkdale and ballot item 42 standing in the name of the member for Wellington. In the afternoon we will begin second reading debate of Bill 126, the Electronic Registration Act, and Bill 131, the Fire Mar-als Amendment Act.

ELEVATOR INSPECTIONS

The Acting Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 53(a), the member for Parkdale has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations concerning elevator accidents. This matter will now be debated. The honourable member for Parkdale has five minutes. The honourable minister will have five minutes in reply.

Mr Ruprecht: The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations is responsible for the safe operation of all elevators and she tells us today: "The act already requires that owners have regular maintenance inspections done by a contractor registered with my ministry. I am aware that there have been problems and that we need to make sure that it works, but that is already in place, I am happy to say."

If this legislation is so good, why is it that her own chief engineer in charge of elevators said, at the inquest where two people were crushed to death, "We do what we feel is the bare minimum to do"? If she is so happy that legislation is in place, why did the policy manager in the Ministry of Housing write to me just three weeks ago that (1) the Elevating Devices Act has no requirement that elevators be restored to service, and (2) "There is no provision in the legislation to require an owner to make the necessary repairs, and there appears to be no mechanism to provide the elevating devices branch with the ability to make the necessary repairs or charge the cost back to the owner"?

The city of Toronto's director of inspections also disagrees with the minister responsible for elevators. He writes to me:

"Dear Mr Ruprecht:

"I urge that the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations speed up the process of adopting the proposed B44 standards and maintenance contract and consider making it mandatory."

Even the mayor of the city of Toronto thinks this minister is out to lunch, and he writes to me:

"The current Elevating Devices Act, along with amendments under consideration by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, does not contain requirements that an elevator be maintained in service. The option of removing an elevator from service if it is in an unsafe condition in lieu of repairing it will continue to be an option available to the owner of a residential rental building.

"Your bill"—that is Bill 139, which I am proposing—"would require landlords of residential rental properties containing elevators to enter into an agreement for regular maintenance of the elevator. Further, the bill would also require that all elevators intended for the tenants in the building be kept in service, except for such reasonable time as may be required for maintenance, repair or replacement.

"I support this private member's bill and I recommend it be passed into law as soon as possible."

Clearly, if all the people I have quoted are wrong and unable to understand the existing elevator law, will the minister accept responsibility today for the 2,288 battered people caught in elevator accidents and rescued by our fire department in the city of Toronto alone? Will she, today, take responsibility for the thousands of seniors and disabled people who have to use an elevator and cannot because the elevator is shut down at times for days at a time, or will she finally wake up and create an elevator law that will ensure safe and efficient operation of elevators?

I have proposed such a law, Bill 139, and only hope and trust that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations will understand the traumatic experiences people go through when caught in an accident, and finally stand up and act and create a bill that all of us can live with and that all of us across Ontario, not only in Toronto, will be able to feel safe with.

Hon Ms Churley: First of all, I want to thank the member for his interest in this important issue. I certainly think elevator safety is of importance to all of us.

I just want to clarify what I said this afternoon, which there seems to be some confusion about. Under section 22 of the Elevating Devices Act, which I have here, every owner of an elevator must ensure that the device is maintained and inspected by a contractor registered with the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. It is right in here, as I said earlier today, and the member disputed it.

The question of what a licence means I think is quite legitimate, and that may be what the member is getting at. Just as an automobile licence is not a safety certificate, an elevator licence is not either. It is a way of keeping track of owners when buildings change hands.

Mr Ruprecht: That's why there's chaos here.

Hon Ms Churley: I showed the courtesy of listening to the member. Now he should listen to me.

In the case of prosecution, it provides information as to who is responsible for the device. I want to stress that the responsibility for detailed, ongoing inspection and maintenance of elevators rests with the owner and the contractor, not the government inspectors. The legislation is very clear on that.

Mr Ruprecht: It's so clear that thousands are stuck.

Hon Ms Churley: The question of serviceability is a much more difficult one. There are approximately 22,000 elevators in this province. Is the member suggesting that if an owner decides not to repair an unsafe elevator, the province should step in and maintain apartment building elevators?

Mr Ruprecht: That's what we're proposing exactly.

Hon Ms Churley: Landlords may remove elevators from service for non-safety reasons, such as selective use for building maintenance, or they may claim an inability to finance repair work. That is what is going on right now.

There are also disputes over payment for service, which sometimes result in the contractor refusing to perform work pending resolution, and that means the elevator is shut down while the two parties work it out.

It is also interesting to note that municipalities have tried to enforce bylaws requiring owners to maintain serviceability that have proven largely ineffective and unenforceable. I think we both agree on that.

But the province has no desire to get into the elevator maintenance business, nor do I think it should. We have to work out the problems that exist with the municipalities and the contractors, because we agree there is a problem when elevators are not operating. I know senior citizens and disabled tenants have particularly been harmed by this problem. However, public safety is my primary concern.

The member made several references to numbers and I would like to bring him up to date at this time. In 1990 in Ontario there were less than 75 elevating device failures, resulting in less than 10 serious injuries. I agree, though, any injuries are to be taken seriously and we would like to eliminate all of those.

According to Elevator World, which is a trade magazine, the elevating devices branch of my ministry—this is from April 1991—is “recognized worldwide as a premium regulatory operation.” Having said that, I also agree we can do better and I am working to make sure we do.

The article went on to say that, if anything, there are fewer elevator and escalator incidents and accidents in Ontario per inhabitant than in jurisdictions with a like population. Ontario does have one of the best records of all the provinces in terms of protecting public safety.

As I mentioned earlier today, I am taking a comprehensive approach to elevator safety. Instead of performing inspections at meaningless intervals, we perform high-quality, targeted inspections on the basis of need. We consider the age, quality and maintenance of the equipment as well as the manufacturer's recommendations.

The people of Ontario should know that we inspect every new elevator before it is licensed to operate. We also inspect elevators that have undergone major alterations before they are allowed to return to service. Again public safety is our first priority. Since 1990 my ministry has been actively following a 10-point safety plan, which the Liberals did not do, that includes the ongoing development and revision of elevator safety and codes. We are working on this ambitious plan, and I hope I get the assistance of my colleague across the floor in making it work.

The Acting Speaker: There being no further business to be debated, this House is deemed to be adjourned and will stand adjourned until Monday, October 28, at 1:30 of the clock.

The House adjourned at 1812.

Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Table des matières

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi qu'à celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1, page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

The House met at 1330.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

WASTE MANAGEMENT LEGISLATION

Mr McClelland: Last Thursday in this Legislature the Minister of the Environment introduced the Waste Management Act, 1991. I want to indicate right at the outset that the minister is using the last government's waste reduction targets.

I want to say to the minister, and I am sure she will add this on the record, when I as critic and my colleagues challenge this legislation, as we will, she should not think at a moment that she can dismiss the criticism by charging that we are not supporting waste reduction initiatives.

The minister has attempted to hide her retreat and, I think with some reservation, the hypocrisy of the Premier in relying on their solemn commitment not to expand Keele Valley or Britannia without a full environmental assessment or environmental hearing of any kind.

Dealing with that very contentious issue in the same legislation as waste reduction initiatives is unacceptable to my party and to most members of this House. The people of this province expected better of this minister and they deserve better. I ask her to at least have the courage to deal with her waste reduction initiatives in separate legislation from that which she is putting forward and the use of her emergency powers to expand those facilities.

She can sugar-coat this bitter pill for the people in and around Keele Valley and Britannia however she wants with her waste reduction philosophy, but it will not work. The people of the province will see through that and they will not accept it. She may think it is clever, but it is criticism and political manoeuvring, legislative manoeuvring at its worst. I expected better of that minister.

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Mr J. Wilson: My statement is to the Minister of Health and it concerns a flagrant abuse of our medical system. About 200 slick, professional con men are scamming the Ontario medical system out of hundreds of thousands of dollars annually, and in the process they are giving new meaning to the term "drug trade."

Potentially dangerous painkilling prescription drugs such as Dilaudid, known as drugstore heroin, are being sold on the street at a value of $120 a tablet. An entire infrastructure of drug pushers has formed to capitalize on a health system that is in disarray and incapable of checking who is getting what drugs and in what quantity.

I strongly urge the minister to investigate these startling occurrences. The Ontario Medical Association feels that a central computer system could hold the key to wiping out this illicit trade that has been flourishing for the best several years.

The Ontario Ministry of Health will spend some $17 billion this year on health care. Scarce resources should not in any way go towards subsidizing this prescription drug trade. I am calling on the Minister of Health today to begin the process of assisting the Ontario Medical Association to implement a central computer system that thwarts criminals from acquiring endless supplies of powerful prescription drugs.

All members must consider the message that is being sent out to drug dealers and pushers of illegal drugs when you consider that we do not have in place a system that can effectively police the sale of prescription drugs.

VICTORIA-HALIBURTON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ACTION COMMITTEE

Mr Drainville: I want to draw the attention of the members of this House to the important work that has begun on economic renewal in Victoria-Haliburton. Last week I was joined by over 50 community leaders to create a non-partisan, results-oriented group we call the Victoria-Haliburton Economic Development Action Committee.

Made up of business, community, labour, agriculture, cultural and education leaders, as well as politicians and civil servants from all levels of government, we have committed ourselves to finding ways to boost economic renewal in our community.

At the meeting on Thursday, October 24, we itemized the many barriers we face to achieving economic renewal. These included government policies and red tape, insufficient financing, a lack of proper marketing and inadequate education to meet the needs of the four key economic sectors in Victoria-Haliburton: tourism, agriculture, manufacturing and general services.

As a group, we began to identify possible solutions that could end the recession. Solutions included putting time limits on approval processes, developing a marketing strategy for tourism, assisting farmers in creating stronger land controls and working with various groups to develop an environmentally friendly forest industry for small and medium land holders.

All these suggestions were well received. It must be said that we intend to work on these things in the next number of months as a group. It has given me a great opportunity to talk about the good things that are happening on the economic development side.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

Ms Poole: Today I have a present for the government House leader. It is a map of the Legislative Assembly. Over the past weeks there has been a little problem. The Attorney General, the Solicitor General and the ministers of Housing, Consumer and Commercial Relations, Tourism, Health, Energy, Colleges and Universities and Community and Social Services all forgot where they were. Instead of making ministerial statements in this area in red, here inside the chamber where they say things like that, they made them outside, here in the area marked in green, which is where the scrum usually occurs.

This is a problem that really cannot continue much longer. I know it is a technical problem and the ministers do not know exactly where the chamber is. Even the government House leader sometimes does not seem too sure about it. Just for the record, ministers make statements and answer questions in this area in red. When they go outside, they actually answer questions from the reporters in the green area. It is not a difficult task, but it is one that is fairly straightforward and pretty important.

I would simply like to leave this map with the government House leader. He can show the ministers where the chamber is so they can come in here and say exactly what it is they want to do. Then we will all know, and the people of Ontario will know exactly what this secret government of Ontario is doing.

VOLUNTEERS

Mr Jordan: Today I rise to salute the outstanding men and women in my riding of Lanark-Renfrew who have allowed their names to stand for public office in the November 12 municipal elections. Whether they are running for mayor, reeve, deputy reeve, councillor, school trustee, hydro or water commissioner, they deserve our heartfelt congratulations. It matters not if candidates are successful on election day. What counts is that these people have cared enough about the future of their communities and this province to get involved.

Volunteers are the backbone of this province and contribute a great deal to our system. For the candidates who do not get elected, there are many projects in the riding worthy of their attention and involvement. One such project, the formation of the James Naismith Foundation, reached a milestone on Saturday when a plaque dedicated to the founder of basketball was unveiled at Naismith Public School in Almonte. It is expected there will be many more milestones as volunteers like Geoff Mace and his support group strive to honour Ramsay township native Dr James Naismith at a proposed permanent site near Almonte.

Congratulations to the many volunteers in Lanark-Renfrew and across this province, and good luck to municipal candidates on November 12.

REVISED STATUTES OF ONTARIO, 1990

LOIS REFONDUES DE L'ONTARIO DE 1990

M. Bisson : Je tiens à féliciter le Procureur général de la province, qui a annoncé aujourd'hui la publication des Lois refondues de l'Ontario de 1990.

La révision des Lois refondues de l'Ontario est le prolongement de la tradition de notre province de publier ses Lois refondues et codifiées à tous les dix ans. Les Lois refondues de l'Ontario de 1990 représentent la onzième révision et codification des lois depuis la Confédération.

Cette publication marque un tournant important dans l'histoire canadienne du droit. En effet, pour la première fois, les Lois refondues sont publiées en anglais et en français. De plus, toutes les connotations à caractère sexiste ont été éliminées, les expressions de droit périmées ont été éliminées et cette publication a été imprimée sur du papier recyclé.

La traduction de ces documents démontre l'engagement continu de notre gouvernement de répondre aux besoins des citoyens et citoyennes de la francophonie de l'Ontario. L'utilisation d'une langue non sexiste dans les Lois est une preuve que le gouvernement et le système judiciaire sont attachés à l'égalité des femmes dans notre société.

I wish to congratulate the revision commissioners and members of the office of legislative counsel on their dedication and expertise in producing this precedent-setting work—Donald Revell, chief legislative counsel, Sidna Tucker, Cornelia Schuh, Michael Wood, Edward Wells, Jean Brunet and Christopher Wernham—as well as many other people who have helped to produce this excellent work.

Mr Phillips: I rise today on a matter of significant importance to all the members of the House and, I think, to the people of Ontario. Twice in the past four months NDP government ministers have ordered the OPP anti-racketeering squad to conduct official investigations as to how opposition members came into possession of relatively minor government documents.

What we are dealing with here is one of the most basic and fundamental issues in our society. It is a basic tenet of freedom from fear, freedom to live in a society and conduct one's business without fear of harassment from high authority. If the government of this province feels it can use the OPP to investigate the release of relatively minor documents such as the ones in question, then there has to be great fear expressed as to where such actions eventually lead us. Where does it end? How far will this government go? Are the members of this House going to be followed? Are their phones going to be tapped? Who knows? It may sound farfetched, but the threat is very real.

Civilian control of our police force has been a fundamental tenet of this country since our inception. What are we asking the police to think of a government that uses the police force to silence opposition?

In closing, I would like to say that it is an embarrassment to the government that I have to stand in the House to raise this issue. It is time for the Premier to stand in the House and say: "No more. This harassment of the opposition will not continue. It's over."

SKILLS TRAINING

Mr Carr: Ontario's future prosperity is hinged on its ability to competitively confront the economic and social challenges of tomorrow. The key to competitiveness is undoubtedly the education and training of our workforce. Highly skilled employees actively meeting the demands of a more globalized economy will ensure the standard of living now enjoyed in this province for future generations and will open the doors to gainful employment opportunities on tomorrow's cutting edge.

Last Thursday, Harvard University economist Michael Porter released his report on Canada's competitiveness. H

nts to the current inadequacy of many citizens' basic skills and the inferior vocational apprenticeship training programs for specialized skills available to citizens as examples of where our competitiveness is already floundering.

The recent report by the Commission of Inquiry on Canadian University Education also urges us to take a hard look at our future competitiveness. The dropout rate of Canadian high schools and the low literacy and numeracy skills of our workforce begs the question, "Are we ready to face tomorrow's world?"

The federal and Ontario governments announced last week their joint plan to commit to job training. While this may be viewed as a step in the right direction, as Porter indicated, the battle to regain Canada's competitiveness must be fought over decades. Neither the province nor the federal government should be allowed to make the mistake of thinking that one right move will secure Canada's competitive future. This is a battle of decades and it must be fought severely.

WATER QUALITY

Mr Farnan: On Monday, October 21, the member for Markham made a member's statement with regard to a spring located on the west side of Highway 24 between Cambridge and the North Dumfries township cutoff for Glen Morris. He suggested, "This government is playing games with residents in that area."

The only one playing games is the member for Markham. In the past, water readings at this location have found intermittent elevated coliform bacterial levels. This is not caused by pavement or granular material, but rather is associated with human and animal waste. Further, during Ministry of Transportation construction, the health unit took samples and found the water unsafe for human consumption. At the request of the Waterloo Regional Health Unit, MOT took responsible action:

1. The public was notified of the situation.
2. The public was advised of the responsible action taken by MOT to sign the location as unsafe and to remove the raised outlet.
3. The public was informed of the proposal to remove access to the spring, and an opportunity was provided for public comment.
4. Currently, MOT is meeting with mandated government agencies to develop an appropriate strategy to bring the spring back to the public.
5. The public will have the opportunity for further input.

In the eyes of the member for Markham, this may amount to playing games. However, I venture to suggest that in the eyes of any fairminded individual, these actions and the process of public consultation in this matter represent a responsible approach to government.

NEWSPAPER REPORT

Mr Kormos: I rise on a matter of privilege, Mr Speaker. Recently, in Friday's Toronto Star, there was coverage of a local cable television interview that I did with the member for St Catharines-Brock. The reportage of that television interview is in itself good and fine. However, there is one paragraph in which the author of that article describes me as labelling ministers pejoratively and that paragraph is entirely false and untrue. The thousands of people who saw that program in Niagara region acknowledge that. The Welland Tribune, which similarly wrote about the program, recognizes that. For some reason, the Toronto Star did not.

While I am not beyond being critical of some of our government's decisions—I have learned during two years of opposition while sitting with the best of them—and while I am not beyond being critical of certain elements in our bureaucracy, I will tell members I have nothing but respect for this province's cabinet. I as much as anybody know how difficult it is to be and to remain in the cabinet.

The reporter may well have had his own reasons for stirring the pot, but his inaccuracies are not helpful. I am quite capable of ruffling feathers on my own.

I want to tell you, Mr Speaker, as part of the matter I rise on, that I remain a faithful and proud New Democrat. I am eager to see this new government succeed and set an example for governments across Canada. I value the privilege that I have to be outspoken, to be candid and to be forthright in my commentary about things concerning this government and other matters in the province.

The Deputy Speaker: I have listened attentively to your statement and it is not a point of privilege.

ORAL QUESTIONS

GASOLINE PRICES

Mr Elston: I look over across the way and see that quite a number of people are away. I noted that there were again no statements by the government about the business of the government. I cannot believe there is not something they should be doing here, but let me start by addressing a question to my favourite storyteller, the member for Nickel Belt, who is also the gentleman who looks after the Premier's business when he is away with the royal couple these days.

I had the opportunity of travelling to several communities last week to talk to the individual women and men who are in business, who have lived in the communities all their lives and have never found a time when retailing and business, in border communities in particular but even in those communities a little more remote from the border, have been as bad.

One thing that is quite clear is that increasing taxes have caused considerable problems. In fact, studies from the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Technology have suggested that out-shopping—or cross-border shopping, as it has been known to many of us—has cost us in the neighbourhood of $1.2 billion in retail sales.

A full 80% of the people who go across the borders of this province to shop will buy gasoline. As a result, gasoline prices are critical to salvaging some of those lost retail dollars. Will the Treasurer tell us today that he acknowledges the difficulties increased gasoline taxes create and that a reduction in gasoline tax would have a positive effect on keeping shoppers at home in Ontario?

Hon Mr Laughren: I am very much aware, as is the entire government, of the whole problem of cross-border shopping. That is why there was a committee set up with the federal government, the provincial government and the border communities to see what could be done about it.

We recognize that there is no question that taxes of different kinds, whether on cigarettes, gasoline or whatever, are a factor in cross-border shopping. To deny that would be to deny the obvious. At the same time, I do not believe and never have believed that the central problem in cross-border shopping is the level of gasoline taxes.

I have said in this House before that when we were looking at the whole question of gasoline taxes, we looked at the level of taxes here and in the United States. We could have completely eroded our gasoline tax base and still the product would have been priced higher here than across the border, so the cost of removing the taxes from gasoline would be enormous in terms of our ability to deliver the services the member opposite is continuing to demand that we do.

Mr Elston: There comes a time in this business when you have to understand that increasing the taxes day after day will only drive away our retail sales and erode the very tax base that the gentleman from Nickel Belt is trying to maintain. It is my view that the current fuel tax bill that is part of this Treasurer's budget should be removed in its entirety to try to salvage the tax dollars that are escaping us now as people are driven across the border to shop not only for gasoline but for other things. Will the Treasurer commit in front of this House to withdrawing the fuel tax bill?

Hon Mr Laughren: I do not think the leader of the official opposition really believes that if we remove the 1.7-cent-per-litre tax and the 1.7 cents coming up in January, it will resolve the cross-border shopping problem. Furthermore, I wish the leader opposite would get his message straight over there, because he and his colleagues one day are on their feet asking us to reduce our revenues and the next day are on their feet asking us to increase the level of services those taxes pay for in the province.

Mr Elston: The people of Ontario know this government has done nothing. These people are a do-nothing government. They are unwilling to take a step that will assist people in dealing with the loss of jobs and with the loss of tax revenue. I ask this gentleman to take a look at what happened in Denmark, where the cross-border shopping issue was addressed by reducing taxes, and in the result ended up generating sales at home that helped them to stabilize their tax revenues.

I ask this gentleman if he will allow us to pass his fuel tax bill so he can keep the money he has collected so far, but then eliminate the 1.7 cents he has put on a litre of fuel and also forgo the increase in January, which will have a minimal effect on this year's budget anyway, but which could assist him in maintaining a good number of the retail sales here in Ontario and allow the border towns to think that at least people are trying to do something, when they have seen nothing of substance so far.

Hon Mr Laughren: I think it would be irresponsible for this government, at a time when we are trying very hard to cope with a severe recession, to start eroding the tax base that delivers the services so many people are demanding. I must say I find it passing strange that after having been in office for five years, the official opposition would suddenly discover that taxes have a bearing on there in the province at all in terms of our economic health. Of course the taxes have a bearing, but for the member opposite to stand in his place and imply that we are a do-nothing government is simply unfair. I would ask the member opposite to go to Sault Ste Marie and tell the people there that we have done nothing to help them out when they found themselves in very dire straits, to go to the people in Elliot Lake, to go to the people in Kapuskasing, to talk to the people who work at de Havilland.

The member opposite is being most unfair, because he is implying that we can somehow deliver services to the people of this province at the same time we erode the tax base that provides for those services.

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr Sorbara: I would just tell the Treasurer that the people of Ontario are looking for a little bit of tax relief.

My question is to the Attorney General. On the weekend, the Attorney General tried to put to rest some very serious rumours about his impending resignation given the dispute currently raging over the possible appointment of lawyer Michael Code as the assistant deputy minister of criminal prosecutions. I want to tell members that Michael Code is, I guess, a competent but highly controversial lawyer, one of the most outspoken critics, during his career, of the police forces of the province and the crown attorney of the province.

In the dispute that is raging, we have on the one hand the Attorney General trying to defend the integrity of the crown law office within his ministry, and on the other hand we have the Premier and the people in the Premier's office trying to insist on the appointment of Michael Code.

I simply ask the Attorney General how long he will continue to defend the integrity of his ministry and whether he will continue to resist the appointment of Michael Code as the assistant deputy minister of criminal prosecutions in this province.

Hon Mr Hampton: It would appear that my colleague the member for Nickel Belt has lost his title as the storyteller of the Legislature.

Let me say this: I received word that a certain article was going to be printed in the Law Times. As indicated in the Law Times, I had no comment on the story. I have already commented in the press, however, that at no time have I discussed resigning and at no time have I talked with anyone about resigning.

I would say to the honourable member that he should read carefully some of the things he sees in the newspaper and he should perhaps think about where they might come from and whether there is any validity to them at all.

Mr Sorbara: Thus far, the only thing we have heard from the Attorney General is that he is avoiding the question here today. This office has now been vacant for some 14 months, since August 1990, even before the last provincial election. This is the office of the man or woman fully responsible for criminal prosecutions in this province, and that office has remained vacant.

Meanwhile, the criminal justice system is in disarray. Public faith in the integrity of the justice system has been damaged. Thousands and thousands of cases have been dismissed. There is an increasing backlog, notwithstanding that the Attorney General undertook nine and a half months ago to deal with the backlog, and we still have no assistant deputy minister for criminal prosecutions in this province.

We have on the one side the Premier, who is insisting that Michael Code be appointed. I want to tell the Attorney General that we support him in defending the position of crown law officers, who say this appointment would be very damaging. I ask the Attorney General once again: Will he continue to resist the appointment or will he tell this house now what his position is in respect of a critical office which has remained vacant for some 14 months? Does he understand he has to take responsibility for this?

Hon Mr Hampton: Once again I find I must reject assertions made by the honourable member. The fact of the matter is that the office of the assistant deputy minister for criminal law has been occupied on an acting basis over the last 14 months by someone who is quite capable, someone who was appointed by my predecessor, and I agree with that appointment.

I could also say to the honourable member that the person who is now acting assistant deputy minister for criminal law has done the province very great service in terms of navigating us through some very difficult times in criminal law, to the point that of all the criminal charges that have been laid since the Askov judgement of last year, 95% of them will come to trial within eight months. So I can say to the member that his assertions are simply false.

Mr Sorbara: I do not have any difficulty with the work being done by the acting assistant deputy minister. The problem here is that the Premier is acting as the Attorney General and trying to take away the right of the Attorney General, and I support the Attorney General in his termination as to determining who ought to hold that office.

But the Attorney General was not silent. He commented as follows to the Toronto Star on the weekend: "The job would be a challenge for someone with Mr Code's history as a criminal defence lawyer" and "It is a very difficult job and requires a lot of ability and a lot of experience." I want to tell him that we agree with that.

On the other hand, we have the Premier attempting to politicize just about every ministry. We have Marc Eliesen now as the chair of Hydro; we have Odoardo Di Santo, a former member of this House, now as the chair of the Workers' Compensation Board, and we have Phil Carter, a former executive assistant to my friend the member for Peterborough, now the executive assistant to Marc Eliesen. Here we have another case of the Premier attempting to politicize this bureaucracy.

I will put my question in this way: Does the Attorney General not realize that he must continue to defend the professionalism and integrity of the Ministry of the Attorney General, and will he undertake now to continue to resist in every way he can the appointment of Mr Code as the assistant deputy minister for criminal prosecutions? It is a yes or no answer.

Hon Mr Hampton: I can tell the member this: It is my understanding that there have been a number of applications for the position of assistant deputy minister for criminal law and I do not know the political affiliations of any of them. I do not know if any of them have any political affiliations.

I believe it is important to uphold the integrity of the system of criminal law administration in this province. I have tried to do that over the last year and I will continue to try to do that.

LANDFILL SITES

Mr Harris: My question is to the Minister of the Environment regarding her commitment to improve the environmental assessment process. Under the existing Environmental Assessment Act, all alternatives must be considered when establishing a waste disposal site. Her proposed legislation, as I understand it, steamrollers over this provision by excluding the Britannia, Keele Valley and Durham sites from this process. In other words, she no longer has to look at the best options for the environment; in fact, she must look at only her options.

I can see how the minister's proposal will speed up the environmental assessment process. I wonder if she can tell me how this very heavy-handed, dictatorial, "it's my way" actually improves the environmental assessment process from an environmental point of view.

Hon Mrs Grier: I suspect the leader of the third party is referring to the legislation I introduced last week which deals with Environmental Protection Act amendments to facilitate waste reduction and measures to deal with the waste management crisis within the GTA. The leader will, I am sure, understand that this is comprehensive legislation looking at waste management in an integrated and comprehensive way. The legislation provides for waste reduction, which is the basis of this government's policy with respect to waste management. It provides for the search for long-term sites within the GTA in accordance with the Environmental Assessment Act.

The reference to Britannia and Keele Valley is dealing with the short-term crisis, which as I have said many times before in this House, requires to be managed and will have to be managed in a way that makes sure that waste within the GTA is looked after in the short term while we look in the long term for sites within the environmental assessment.

Mr Harris: Can the minister tell me why the most effective way of managing the environment in the short term is to say: "It's my way or the high way. You can no longer consider the best environmental alternative. In fact, you must not take the time to find the best answer for the environment. You must do it my way"? Can she tell me how, in the short term, expressly telling people, "Don't look for the best solution," is good for the environment?

Hon Mrs Grier: The system that was in place when I became minister was looking for short-term sites in new locations that had never been used for waste disposal. The system that was supported by the opposition parties was short cuts to provide for new sites in Peel, Durham and other areas without an environmental assessment. Our government decided that was not good for the environment, so we have embarked on the search for long-term sites under the Environmental Assessment Act. We have recognized that there may well be a gap in the short term and that it is better for the environment to continue to use existing sites than to create new sites by shortcuts.

Mr Harris: The minister is critical of the former government, I understand that, but let me get it straight. She is critical of it for having shortcuts and having some hearings but not the full hearings. She now has no hearings, absolutely none. The minister is shortcutting the possibility of any public input. She is shortcutting the possibility of any input from the regions. She is shortcutting the possibility of finding the best environmental solution. Obviously, the minister has no clear plan for waste management. She has stepped all over everyone and everybody in her frantic efforts to dig her way out of this mess.

There are two things I would like to know. One is on behalf of the municipalities. They want to know if they have any say in waste management in their jurisdictions in this province. Second, why is it that in the minister's effort to streamline the environmental assessment process and make it work better, the only thing she has come up with to date is to eliminate the option that says, "You must find the best solution for the environment"? She has eliminated that and said, "You must accept the Ruth Grier solution, regardless of whether it is good for the environment or not."

Hon Mrs Grier: It is difficult to know where to begin to set the record straight with that kind of a preamble. I am sure the member is not deliberately confusing the issue by refusing to acknowledge the short-term crisis, which I wish could be solved in another way but which the facts demonstrate has not been solved up to now. When we came to the choice between finding new sites under a shortcut process or continuing existing sites for as short a period as possible, we chose the latter.

The member is also wrong when he says there is no opportunity for public input. My ministerial orders issued to Metropolitan Toronto and to the region of Peel have asked them to get on with the technical studies of reviewing those two sites and to put in place a public consultation process. It also recognizes that in looking for new sites there will be a full environmental assessment. That is what the environment deserves and that is what we are going to do on behalf of the environment.

RED HILL CREEK EXPRESSWAY

Mr Harris: My second question is for the Minister of Transportation. Ten and a half months ago his predecessor announced that Ontario would renege on its commitment to fund its share of the Red Hill Creek Expressway. He said at that time he was prepared to fund the other alternatives. Ten and a half months have expired since that announcement; 10½ months to find out if indeed everybody was wrong except him that there were no other reasonable alternatives.

The minister said on Thursday, in looking for a solution: "It is not complex. One need not be a mathematical genius emanating from Windsor or Harvard to understand the simplicity." I think he means there in finding a solution, an alternative. If it is so simple, if it is not complex, can he tell me what his ministry has done in the last 10½ months to find an alternative to the Red Hill Creek Expressway option?

Hon Mr Pouliot: Our position remains consistent. I think it is noteworthy, it is worth mentioning, that the municipal court cases took fully half that time, a full five months, and then time had to be given to get parties together. This has been done, and of course we are hopeful that within six months, alternatives can and will be found.

Mr Harris: It is absolutely insulting to the people of Hamilton-Wentworth to suggest there was difficulty in getting them together to meet with the minister. They have been crying, they have been begging for a meeting. They have come here to the Legislature. They have been ready to meet for all of these past 10½ months.

The minister said on Thursday, "If an alternative is not found, the region of Hamilton-Wentworth has the possibility of coming back with the original proposal." If an alternative is not found—these are his words, by the way—and the region of Hamilton-Wentworth comes back with the original proposal, is the minister prepared to honour the government's commitment and fund the Red Hill Creek Expressway?

Hon Mr Pouliot: Again, our position remains consistent. The focus here is on seeking alternatives. There has been no change of position whatsoever in withdrawing the funding for the Red Hill Creek Expressway. We are talking only about one position and that is of alternatives, plain and simple; no more and no less than that.

Mr Harris: I am quoting the minister's own words of Thursday. He said the region can come back with the original proposal. I think the question is quite simple: Why tell them they can come back with the original proposal if he does not know whether they are going to say yes or no? I think he had better clarify that. Otherwise this whole thing is a sham.

There is only one thing that has changed since last December and that is the NDP candidate in Hamilton is going down the tubes and needs a boost. That is the only thing that has changed in the past 10½ months. While this government has played politics with the Hamilton region, jobs have been lost, business has suffered and money has been wasted.

The minister's part of the agreement last week is nothing more than smoke and mirrors unless he is prepared to stand behind his statement of last Thursday. Will he stop playing games with the people of Hamilton? Will he answer the simple question: Will they have their expressway? If the possibility and the option is the original proposal, will he fund it? Yes or no?

Hon Mr Pouliot: There is no reason why anyone could play games. With respect, maybe the leader of the opposition party can go and ask the mayor of Hamilton what he said. It is quite simple. All he has to do is read the agreement. The agreement is focused solely on one option, which is an alternative to the Red Hill Creek Expressway. Will we fund the alternative? Yes. We have made a commitment that the province shall do so to the tune of 70% of the total. That is exactly what was said.

Mr Eves: What you said is, if they come back with the original proposal, you would look at it. Are you going to fund it or not?

Hon Mr Pouliot: In terms of the original proposal, it is not clearly, absolutely on the table. This is why the agreement calls for alternatives. It has nothing to do with the original proposal. The member should read the agreement; it is quite simple. We look forward to a good relationship and remain confident that alternatives will be funded and funded 70% by the province of Ontario.

VISITORS

The Deputy Speaker: I would like to inform the members of the Legislative Assembly that we have in the Speaker's gallery today a delegation of members of the standing committee on House management from the House of Commons in Ottawa.

MINISTRY OF CULTURE AND COMMUNICATIONS RECEPTION

Mr Conway: My question is of the Minister of Culture and Communications. On August 26, 1991, in what must have been one of her first press conferences and/or press receptions, the member for Perth, the newly installed Minister of Culture and Communications, convened a press reception or press conference at the Park Plaza Hotel to announce the government's new publishing support initiative. I have in my hand a bill from the Park Plaza Hotel for that reception and press conference, a bill to the taxpayers of $2,887.96.

Since August 26 was just a few days before the Premier went to Honey Harbour to announce to the province that restraint was the new buzzword in the government, can the minister explain to this House and the taxpayers exactly why she needed to spend nearly $3,000 on the rooftop at the Park Plaza Hotel for a press announcement, as opposed to using the press conference facility in the legislative complex at no cost to the taxpayers?

Hon Mrs Haslam: It was a very prestigious announcement. We chose to put it into a situation where the publishing community would feel comfortable. I am very pleased that I was able to announce this initiative.

Mr Conway: I would have thought that those hard-pressed, recession-ridden working men and women would have thought there is scarcely a more prestigious place to make an important government announcement than here at Queen's Park.

Perhaps the minister could further explain to these hard-pressed taxpayers of Ontario who paid for this reception, one of the minister's first, on the rooftop of the Park

Plaza Hotel at a total cost of $2,887 and why some $857 of that cost involved alcohol.

Hon Mrs Haslam: The question is well taken. I will investigate that and report back to the member.

NURSING LEGISLATION

Mr J. Wilson: My question is of the Minister of Health. Nurses across this province are shocked at the government's amendment to Bill 57, the Nursing Act, that will require nurses to take orders from midwives and chiropractors. This is yet another blow to the nursing profession, which has been hard hit by the government's lack of direction in health care.

The minister will know that historically nurses have performed procedures on patients under the authority of medical doctors and dentists. I want to know how she can justify adding another couple of levels to the hierarchy in our health care system by dictating that now nurses will also have to take orders from midwives and chiropractors.

Hon Ms Lankin: I disagree with the member's characterization of our having higher levels of hierarchy in health care. One of the things that we are very hopeful the new legislation will do for nurses is, for the first time, to provide them with their own scope of practice and set out in regulations from their college's own perspective what that scope of practice should include and their ability to do a number of authorized acts on their own.

The amendments do not provide that nurses will do things on the order of midwives; in fact, it is set out very differently. But there will be cases where a midwife may order an injection of medication, for example, and it would be appropriate for a nurse to carry that out. It would be a patient order, as opposed to an order directly to the nurse, who is a professional in and of herself.

Mr J. Wilson: A patient order? That is quite interesting. I have never heard of that.

I and my caucus colleagues have received hundreds of calls over the last week as a result of this ill-conceived amendment. Perhaps the minister would be more personally aware of the situation if she had attended at least one of the days on clause-by-clause hearings of these acts. She would be aware of the fact that this amendment is not at all appropriate and that Ontario is only now beginning to establish a program of education for midwives and that a degree program is not scheduled to begin until 1993.

I ask the minister again, is she prepared to withdraw her amendment that would force nurses to take orders from midwives and chiropractors?

Hon Ms Lankin: The member may not know that in fact I worked in a hospital in my past life and I know exactly what a patient order is. If he does not, then I suggest it is his unfamiliarity with the health care system, not mine.

May I say directly with respect to the question posed about having attended and hearing from nurses that I have met directly with the nursing association. We have met with a number of nurses' representatives to talk about the amendments. At this point in time we think it is an appropriate amendment.

The member recognizes that in fact, although the legislation will come into place, midwifery will not be a regulated profession until proclaimed and until the education program has started to produce certified, regulated midwives. We think at that point in time it would be entirely appropriate that where a midwife gives some recommendation of a patient order, for injection of medication, for example, a nurse could be an appropriate official to carry that out.

NURSING HOMES

Ms M. Ward: My question is for the Minister of Health. Approximately three weeks ago the minister announced a new funding arrangement for nursing homes and homes for the aged. Many of the facilities serving senior citizens in my riding of Don Mills are concerned about the current funding formula. On behalf of these facilities I would like to ask, how will the results from the fall 1991 level-of-care classification study be linked to the future funding formula?

Hon Ms Lankin: In the announcement that I made on behalf of the Minister of Community and Social Services and my ministry, we stated that the pilot project clearly indicated to us that the levels-of-care requirement currently in place with respect to nursing homes and homes for the aged, both charitable and municipal, in fact showed that there was not a difference of care requirement, and that funding in the future, as we move to redirection of long-term care, would have to take that into account.

We are currently moving to expand on that pilot project. We will have a classification study of each of the homes of the relevant categories in place by January 1993 so that we can move to funding based on that levels-of-care formula, which is based on the Alberta patient classification tool.

Ms M. Ward: The residents of True Davidson Acres, which is a home for the aged in my riding, are concerned about the current funding levels for the personal needs allowance. Does the Minister of Health plan to review these funding levels in the context of the new funding arrangements?

Hon Ms Lankin: The personal needs allowance that the member refers to is more often called the comfort allowance. It is the amount of money seniors have left over for their own funds after they have paid for things like the residential charge in nursing homes. As we move to levels-of-care funding and a redirected long-term care proposal for January 1993, we will be reviewing the amount which seniors pay towards residency and, by virtue of that, also the basic amount of comfort money they have left over in that personal needs allowance. So it all will be reviewed in that context.

DRUG BENEFITS

Mrs Sullivan: My question is also for the Minister of Health. In an attempt to control the cost of drugs available through the Ontario drug benefit program, a new and somewhat bizarre multi-tier system has been created with which doctors must comply to obtain needed drugs for their patients.

Two weeks ago the minister removed several drugs from the formulary list of medicine covered under the provincial benefits program. Those drugs were used primarily for the treatment of AIDS patients. There was no consultation with physicians on the removal of those drugs, but what the doctors have been told is that when they need those drugs on an urgent basis for their patients, they must provide their names, their addresses and a code number to pharmacists before those drugs can be directly dispensed for their patients.

What we have now is a situation where pharmacists can only dispense drugs which are specific to the treatment of AIDS when those drugs are prescribed by a doctor who is on an AIDS list. Through this system the minister has guaranteed that the privacy of those AIDS patients is destroyed. There is no guarantee of anonymity. The pharmacist will know, the pharmacist's aides will know and the clerk in the drugstore will know who is on that list.

What protection of privacy and what guarantees of anonymity now exist under this new system for AIDS patients who are prescribed these drugs? Will the minister ensure that the doctors inform their patients that their privacy will not be protected, and will she require that the doctors obtain the consent of their patients, before they prescribe the drugs, to have their identity made known to the pharmacists involved?

Hon Ms Lankin: I think it is a very good question. The process that has been put in place with respect to streamlining the ability of primary care physicians who have a large number of AIDS patients in their practice has been done as a result of requests from the community, both AIDS patients and AIDS doctors themselves. It has been one of the central demands that they have asked for and there has been consultation with AIDS doctors about this process.

I want to correct one thing the member said, which is that this is not the only way in which doctors who are treating AIDS patients will be able to prescribe and get those drugs filled for those patients.

What we received was a complaint from those physicians who were primarily treating AIDS patients, who had very heavy practices, that the process, the amount of paperwork of seeking special authorization under the rules of the Ontario drug benefit plan on a case-by-case basis was drowning them and that they were unable to provide the appropriate level of care. It was eating into their time; the administration was too complex. We have been working with them to attempt to streamline that and deal with that, but those are the doctors who are on that list.

I think the question the member raised about whether or not patients should be made aware of that and ask for consent is a reasonable question and I will look into that.

Mrs Sullivan: I have the list of the doctors whose names are listed with pharmacists across the province, when they are prescribing those drugs for AIDS patients and do not want to go through the section 8 approval of those drugs, which takes anywhere from eight weeks to months. One of the things the minister has not responded to is that those drugs are not only used by HIV/AIDS patients, but also by elderly patients and those who suffer from particular diseases such as respiratory and other illnesses.

The October 18 letter to doctors, which I have here, informs doctors that the cost of these drugs will not be reimbursed, without going through the eight-week process, if the person is not suffering from HIV/AIDS symptoms. Many people who are elderly suffer from shingles, a debilitating and painful illness, from respiratory illnesses and other diseases for which these drugs are useful treatments. They cannot wait the six weeks to eight weeks to the months that it takes to go through section 8 approval. I have put these drugs back on the formulary for the benefit of HIV/AIDS patients and for the benefit of senior citizens in Ontario?

Hon Ms Lankin: I must correct the member just on the technicality, in that these drugs were never on the formulary. There was a non-formulary list of drugs. What happened over a number of years was that there grew up, not just a section 8 special authorization, but another list of non-formulary drugs that were covered just generally as a benefit. The Lowy commission review recommended that these should be taken off. In fact, there was extensive communication with the manufacturers asking each of them to submit their information for these to be reviewed for possible inclusion in the drug formulary.

One of the things the member should know is that there is a very rigorous process of the Drug Quality and Therapeutics Committee, an assessment before a drug is actually on the formulary. None of these drugs has gone through that and therefore none of them has ever been added on the formulary. They were being paid for as a matter of course of the benefit. It was recommended by the Lowy commission that this cease. We gave the manufacturers an opportunity to respond, and the ones in particular that have now been deleted from this non-formulary list are the ones for which they did not respond.

With respect to the case the member raises, the drug that is of particular help to seniors in the treatment of shingles, I take that as a very serious issue. I have assurances from the ministry that a process has been put in place to handle those section 8 special requests in a one-day turnaround because of the nature of it.

Mrs Sullivan: It still takes three months.

Hon Ms Lankin: The member yells that it takes three months. I have been assured and have directed that for this drug, the process take one month. Additionally, we have written to the drug manufacturers yet again and asked them to please submit the materials with respect to this so that they can undergo a rigorous drug quality and therapeutic review in order to be added to the list.

EMERGENCY TELEPHONE SERVICES

Mr Runciman: I have a question for the Solicitor General. Day after day we read about increasing crime rates in Ontario, especially with violent crimes, and have to assume that more Ontario citizens are becoming dependent on emergency services in this province. We have just recently been advised that this government has cancelled its 911 consultancy service. In fact, we are getting quite a bit of mail on this matter. Could the Solicitor General explain the logic behind that cancellation?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I can only respond to the member in the sense that there are fiscal pressures all across the government, as the member knows, and of course the Ministry of the Solicitor General does not escape either. A number of matters are being considered in the upcoming estimates, and that would be one of them. However, my understanding is that if this does become a formal decision, there would be alternative information available to those municipalities and regions that would have an interest in pursuing the development of the 911 service.

Mr Runciman: This is another one of the minister's non-answers. He obviously does not have a clue what is going on in his ministry. We asked him about the OPP going into the official opposition leader's office. A week after the incident he said he did not know anything about it.

Here we are talking about the cancellation of a very important service to municipalities right across this province and again he does not know what is going on. We have to wonder what he is doing with his time every day. The 911 service is an extremely important service. The city of Orillia had an estimate of $200,000 for installing the 911 service. They went to the government consultant on this matter, who was able to come up with a system that costs that municipality only $50,000, a considerable saving for municipalities right across this province.

Again, I ask that minister to get on top of what is going on in his ministry and reconsider the decision. He does not even know it has been made, but it has been made. He should take a look at it and change it.

Hon Mr Pilkey: I can well appreciate the perspective from the opposition benches, but I would like to indicate to the honourable member that we are certainly aware of the matter. As I indicated in the House last week, we are certainly aware as well that the question with respect to the OPP being sent to investigate members opposite is incorrect, in so far as the OPP being directed by this government is concerned. Once a breach of trust has been identified by the deputy minister to the OPP, the OPP itself decides whom it will interview, and it is not with respect to any directions from this minister or from this government.

WATER CONSERVATION

Mr Duignan: My question today is for the Minister of Natural Resources. In August the minister announced an initiative to challenge the people of Ontario to practise water efficiency and conservation. As most people are aware, the people of Ontario per capita use twice as much water as people in western Europe.

Recently the town of Milton, in the southern part of my riding, proposed a pilot project for water conservation and efficiency. Will the minister look favourably on the Milton project and tell us what particular reasons there are for launching a water efficiency program at this time?

Hon Mr Wildman: I appreciate the member's interest in this. There are many reasons for the initiation of this strategy at this time. As the member will know, we have had a number of very hot, dry summers in Ontario and water use has gone up substantially. Also, as we see more predictions in the scientific community with regard to global warming, we can anticipate many more periods of dry weather that will require the high use of water. As the member knows, the people of this province are concerned about managing their resources on a sustainable basis. After all, the more we use now the more we take away from future generations.

The initiative I announced in August called for zero growth in water consumption by the year 2010. We are attempting to develop a partnership between the provincial government and the municipalities and other water users in the province. We are holding workshops across the province to develop a water efficiency strategy for the province. The question with regard to Milton will be considered in that regard.

Mr Duignan: The people of Milton will appreciate it if the minister does look favourably on that particular pilot project, as I believe it is in the forefront for other projects throughout the province. I note this initiative touches on the mandate of several ministers. Also, some would argue this is an area of municipal jurisdiction. Why is the Minister of Natural Resources taking this initiative?

Hon Mr Wildman: As the member knows, the Ministry of Natural Resources is responsible for managing many water resources in the province. After all, we are responsible for the fish habitat, the power generation agreements and the general wellbeing of lakes and rivers in the province.

It is not just a Ministry of Natural Resources initiative, though. It is supported by 12 government ministries and agencies across the government. For instance, the Ministry of Government Services is actively developing a strategy for water efficiency in the 9,000 government buildings across the province. The Ministry of Housing, through the Ontario Housing Corp, Canada's largest landlord, is examining its portfolio to seek water efficiency opportunities. As the member indicated, this is the responsibility of the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, and the regulations and legislation of that ministry will enable us to develop a partnership with the municipalities. We look forward to having the successful development of a strategy in the province.

AGRICULTURAL LAND

Mr Bradley: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Members of the Legislature will remember that last summer, in the warm sun in Vineland or Beamsville, Ontario, the Premier denounced previous administrations over the issue of the preservation of agricultural land and renewed the promise of the New Democratic Party to save agricultural land in the province from development.

In view of this pronouncement by the Premier and the long-time policy of the NDP to save agricultural land, could the Minister of Agriculture and Food tell us why he is allowing the Minister of Transportation to expropriate some of the best farm land in the province in order to pave it over for a truck weigh station in Beamsville?

Hon Mr Buchanan: The member raises a good point. This party has had a long-standing position of trying to protect good agricultural land and we will continue to do so. From time to time services are required that need agricultural land in order to have those services, whether it be hydro corridors or transportation networks, and unfortunately there are occasions when these kinds of things happen. It is unfortunate.

I would certainly like to see all the tender fruit land in the Niagara region preserved, but a situation came up that requires some additional land. I think it is a very small amount of land, though. We are not talking about massive amounts. I think we are talking about something in the order of four acres, which is not really the sort of thing we should all get flustered about.

Mr Bradley: That is a most interesting response on the part of the Minister of Agriculture and Food, the person responsible for preserving agricultural land in Ontario. How does the minister react to local people, some of whom have supported his party over the years—one of the reasons they have is because they believed his party was going to be interested in saving farm land—how does he answer them when they say the ministry has a lot of nerve trying to develop on prime farm land when the province is considering whether to crack down on other Niagara farmers who want to sell land for development to ease their debt loads?

Does the minister not recognize that when we set that example the Minister of Transportation is setting, paving prime farm land, he loses all his good arguments with those farmers who also want to develop their land because they are facing economic stress?

Hon Mr Buchanan: I think we are talking of in the order of four acres; we are not talking about massive amounts of good farm land in this case. Since I just became aware a few minutes ago that this expropriation was in the process of taking place, I would say to the member that I am prepared to take a look at it. There is always the possibility of having that reconsidered. I have just consulted very quickly with the Minister of Transportation. That is a possibility and I will take it under advisement to see what we can do.

TRUCKING INDUSTRY

Mr Turnbull: My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Does he not recognize that the trucking industry in Ontario is in crisis? The industry simply cannot afford another $2,000 tax grab. The tax is coming at a time when the industry is still reeling from the effects of recession and deregulation. The diesel fuel tax, which we will be debating here today, will add another 31% to the cost of fuel. Will the minister commit to repealing this tax?

Hon Mr Pouliot: We are not going to repeal the tax. That answers the question directly. We do recognize the dire needs of the trucking industry, with the oversupply of trucks, deregulation, free trade, high interest rates, the high Canadian dollar, the GST; the list is almost endless. We be frozen by moratorium the number of licences out there so that truckers can find a better competitive climate.

We have also commissioned a study so that we can react on individual needs, on individual components, that will make the trucking industry a more competitive place to be. I do not wish to convey to members of the opposition, when they talk about trucking, "We told you so; a case on both your houses." No, we evaluate from a positive climate. The answers will take a little time, but together with the trucking industry, in partnership, we will be there and make the trucking world a better place to live in indeed.

Mr Turnbull: I have heard all this before from this government. Whenever they get a question, all they can do is point at other people as being the problem. What the minister is quite simply saying today is that he is writing off this industry. The president of the Ontario Trucking Association has said in that the present situation it is essential that we get relief from the fuel tax if we are going to get off bankruptcy from these companies.

Last week during estimates the minister said: "We empathize with those involved in our trucking sector, but as you will appreciate, the current economic recession and fiscal constraints make it very difficult to provide tax relief at this time." Well, the tax relief at this time is necessary. It is taxes the minister is adding; it is not something that has been added. It is taxes the government has added. The government has added $500 million to the cost of the civil service since it has been in office. It is adding $90 million in taxes to this industry, an industry that is going bankrupt. All the minister says is, "It's the fault of this and this."

The minister knows the trucking industry has said very clearly that it needs a reduction in fuel tax. Having US truckers survive is not going to help this province or the workers in this province. Will the minister not finally see the light and realize that adding people to the unemployment rolls is not going to help his government? Will the minister not rethink his policy?

Hon Mr Pouliot: With regard to the taxes that were mentioned, we did not get there overnight. Of course, any government needs revenue. I can assure the member that if the latest increase in diesel fuel tax is a component, as the member opposite suggests, the GST is the catalyst. That is the culprit. We are putting together measures to help the trucking industry.

Mr Turnbull: That's not what the trucking industry is saying. Read your own reports, Minister. You're telling the trucking industry it's the taxes taking away the jobs.

The Deputy Speaker: Order, the member for York Mills. You have asked a question. The minister is answering your question.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Mr Speaker, I know it is difficult for you to cap the bottles. Where I come from, when someone asks a question at least they have the decency to let people answer. If asked to carry the guilt, I have no quarrel whatever. Suffice it to say that the member should come up with rationale and substance.

This side is going to help the truckers. We are trying to be imaginative and innovative. The other side does not wish to listen. We have a dilemma. They will fail and we will succeed because we have real, concrete, palpable measures that are conducive to good economic order for all Ontarians. We realize and are fully cognizant of the most useful service that our brothers and sisters in the trucking industry provide.

MISSISSAUGA PUBLIC LIBRARY BOARD

Mr O'Connor: My question is to our new Cinderella—I hope she has found her new slipper—the Minister of Culture and Communications. Proposed legislation has been brought forward to dissolve the Mississauga Public Library Board. Even though Mississauga is not in my riding, the outcome will affect my constituents and myself.

A number of people are concerned about the public library board being replaced by a committee of council. Will citizen representation, as well as community input, no longer be needed in the functioning of the library? Earlier this year, the minister's predecessor informed the House that his parliamentary assistant would be undertaking consultation with the library community. The present minister promised that this report would be completed this summer. We are now into the fall. I was just wondering when we could expect some feedback.

Hon Mrs Haslam: I would like everyone to know that I started out in the education system and in the library system, both public and education, so I do understand the member's concern.

Since last April, the member for Kingston and The Islands, my parliamentary assistant, has been meeting with many of the individuals and groups concerned about the committee of council issue. The meetings have included library administrators, library workers, library trustees, representatives of CUPE and elected municipal officials. The final consultations will be taking place this month and our review and analysis of the concerns and points of view presented to us will follow promptly.

The Deputy Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: The House will settle down a bit. Those who want to leave can do so now.

PETITIONS

CLOSING OF TREE NURSERIES

Mr Mills: I have a petition signed by 1,500 people in my riding of Durham East. It says:

"Whereas the Orono nursery makes a significant contribution to reforestation in southern Ontario,

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to maintain the field tree seedling production at Orono nursery to contribute to environmental and economic programs in our forest and in our agricultural lands.

"Further generations depend on the environmental leadership of the day."

I also add my signature to this petition.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for interim supply for the period commencing November 1, 1991, and ending December 31, 1991.

Mr Callahan: I have never really had an opportunity to speak in this place with this many people in attendance. I guess they are all hanging around for my speech.

When last I left off, I was addressing the Treasurer. I got into a few things. I was basically talking about the question of alcohol and drug treatment in this province, this country and, for that matter, in the world. It receives very little attention from the public, from governments, from various sources. It should receive great attention.

I think on the last occasion I indicated that probably something in the neighbourhood of 70% or 80% of crime is committed as a result of either alcohol or drug abuse. We pay very little attention to it. The standing committee on public accounts is presently reviewing this issue and hopes to bring a report forward. With the co-operation of all the House leaders, we are seeking at least one day in this House to debate this very important report.

I think that the government's move through the health care system to limit access to facilities in the United States is perhaps a wise fiscal policy to eliminate unnecessary costs to the US, but I suggest that doing this without providing adequate facilities in this province to cover the shortfall is somewhat like putting a plug in one hole in the boat while you have six others there: You are still going to drown.

I think the Attorney General would recognize, through his offices and through the people who work under him, that a large degree of the backlog in the courts is to—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. If members want to hold conversations, I suggest they hold them outside. The member for Brampton South has the floor.

Mr Callahan: I think the Attorney General will recognize the statistics I gave him with reference to how our courts have become backlogged. To a large degree they have become backlogged because people who are before the courts have drug or alcohol problems. When they are sent off to prison, the facilities in prison are so inadequate in dealing with this issue that all it is is a revolving-door syndrome: They go in one door and out the other.

It is great politics to send people to jail; it makes the public feel very comfortable. But what we are doing is sending people who, perhaps through no fault of their own, are in this predicament. I do not say this in a pejorative fashion to the Attorney General. This is not a matter that has arisen just since his government was elected; it is something that has gone on through successive governments. It is an issue that has to be dealt with. There has to be provision for expanding such facilities as the Ontario Correctional Institute; OCI is one of the few facilities where treatment is looked into.

On the question of schizophrenics, schizophrenics' families, as a result of amendments that were made to the Mental Health Act back in 1985 or 1986, were literally divested of any possibility of assisting their loved one. Schizophrenics could not have treatment forced upon them; they could refuse treatment. It was like telling diabetic, "It's okay, you don't have to take your insulin if you don't want to," even though we know insulin helps diabetic maintain control.

Similarly, the situation with schizophrenics has come to that. We see parents who have their loved ones in a situation where there is no way they can help them, knowing full well there is treatment that can assist them. We see people brought to the courts for somewhat foolish crimes who cannot plead their schizophrenia or temporary insanity, because if they do, they do it at the risk of winding up as a guest at the pleasure of the Lieutenant Governor for perhaps two years for a crime for which they might otherwise get a fine or probation or even a discharge.

Quite apart from that, there is the ignominy that families of schizophrenics have to go through because a mechanism is not in place to allow them to deal with and treat their loved ones. I suggest this is something that has to be addressed. I had thought at one point that the bill introduced—I think it was Bill 53—that provided for alternative decision-making would assist in that regard. I suggest it will not. I think the government will find, as the committee goes out into public hearings on this bill, that group will come before the committee and tell it that the bill is not appropriate and will not deal with this specific issue.

I would like to deal with the farming community. Although my community grows more urbanized each day, it is still an agricultural urban community. Day after day we hear in this House and read in the newspapers from across this country, across the United States and North America perhaps around the world, of the plight of farmers.

Farming is not something you teach. It is not something you pick up as a hobby in most cases. It is something that is passed on from generation to generation by people who are truly interested in farming. If the people of this province, this country and beyond expect to receive food adequate for the purposes of feeding themselves and their families, governments are going to have to take a much more realistic approach to the question of how we deal with our farmers.

Our farmers are always the last persons in line for anything and they constantly have to beg for every nickel they get. That is not satisfactory. Those members who come specifically from rural areas must understand that the farming community obviously is the backbone of the supply of food. What does the farmer get for it? The farmer gets peanuts. The product itself goes through maybe four or five hands and then gets nicely packaged—packaging we throw away and fill up our landfill sites with—and the farmer himself or herself, who has dedicated his or her life to farming, receives very little in the way of the cost of that.

People out in society are not prepared to pay what it is worth to keep a farmer on the farm. Truly, if there were a systematic way of providing farmers with a way to allow their young people to become educated at the University of Guelph or sophisticated universities that teach business management techniques in agriculture in a modern way ny of these people would stay on the farms, but it is a temptation. Young people see developers picking up lands and developing them and see some farmers selling out. Young people see the fathers who own the farms selling out. They are then able to take on a lifestyle that is very much different than it was when they were actually on the farm.

We lose them for ever. We will never get them back again, because those people have been told in not so many words by the governments of the day: "You don't count. We're not concerned enough about you that we would try to come up with an innovative way of providing you with money so that you can give the good things to your family and ensure that you stay in farming, a profession you love." We have to work at that, because if we do not work at that, we are going to find ourselves slowly but ever so easily getting out of the production of food. We are going to find that our food will be very costly because it will be imported and we will probably be buying a great deal more from across the border.

I suggest that is something this government should look at. They should forget about the life preservers you throw to a farmer when he is in desperate need. They should think about it in terms of long-term planning.

That is one of the problems with this Legislature, the fact that the process itself provides for the quick political fix. It does not provide for long-range planning. It does not look at an issue and say: "Here's a problem. Let's try to solve it." What it does do is try to find the sexy way of doing it or plug the dike with a Band-Aid when it requires much more than that. Perhaps it needs a major operation.

I suggest that the process in this House is one that has to be changed as well. The people who are watching us on television every day are becoming much more sophisticated and much more aware of the factor that what goes on in this House to a very large degree really is theatre, that it has nothing to do with the real things that are going on in the world, and that much of the government is run by maybe five or six or seven people, several of them not elected, rather than being run and contributed to by each and every one of the members from the various ridings. I think people are catching on to that.

If the process is not reformed, the people are going to say to us, "Why do we need 130 people down here who are doing nothing for us, who are not advancing the cause of their particular riding, who stand up"—this is not a criticism of the present government; it has gone on with several governments—"and vote on every issue the way the government wants them to vote?" The people out there are not that naïve. They have to understand that if members are doing that, it means the members are doing nothing for them, are just becoming part of a large glob.

People are very suspicious of politicians today. I note, however, that this morning we did not rank in the first four in the Globe and Mail. I cannot remember what they were. I think there were a number of them. Politicians were not among them, but I am sure if they had printed a fifth one, we would have been within the fifth category. Politicians used to be second to the oldest profession in the world in terms of popularity with the people.

I think we are seeing more and more in elections that people are much more attuned and much more aware of what is going on in politics. They expect their politicians to work for them. They expect their politicians to advance their cause. They expect them to make certain that every tax initiative that is brought forward is one that is scrutinized to the nth degree.

We are not doing that. That is not going on in this place, and if we do not get back to that way of doing it, or reform this Legislature, we are going to find that we are going to become as much of an anachronism as dinosaurs, if we are not already. I urge all those people who were elected—I suppose, in a sense, in the last election many of them had not anticipated being elected, so I suspect they come from very strong roots and want to advance the cause of their individual ridings. Here is an opportunity for them to make history, to reform this Legislature.

Several government members voted for a private member's bill I put forward that bills be referred after first reading to get meaningful input from the public. If that is the case, why have we not seen that bill come back from the House leader in terms of an order of priority in terms of business? I would think that would be a major priority for the government, to reform the Legislature. If they reformed it, they would have a much more democratic process. The government, I am told, is the New Democratic Party. That obviously must have some meaning within the term of democracy. One would think they would be trying to reform the Legislature.

To send bills out to committees after second reading—I think the public should understand this—once the principle of the bill is established, then to go out and meet the public on the road and spend megabucks of taxpayers' dollars to hear from people makes no sense. If the government has already established the principle of the bill, as it goes out to the people, everything they say is going to be ignored if it is contrary to the principle of the bill. If they send it out after first reading, they would be able to get some meaningful input from the people who take time out of their busy schedules to appear before the committee. They would give some meaning to that $40,000, $50,000, $60,000, $70,000, $80,000, $90,000, $100,000, $120,000 or $130,000 that might be spent on travel and accommodation to bring these people before their committee.

I think in the past the good Speaker who is in the chair now used to castigate us in committee. When we were the government, he would say: "Isn't it terrible? You've spent all this money going out to the public to hear from them and you have already established the principle of the bill. What a waste of money." I often thought to myself, Mr Speaker, that your words were words of wisdom, and I advance them to you now that you are in government. Use that and take a look at it, because the government is going to have to account for that to its public.

They should forget about the roof garden parties by the Minister of Culture and Communications. That is peanuts; $2,500 is peanuts. They should forget about the Attorney General's big bash down in Niagara Falls for $10,000, of which about $2,500 was for booze. That is peanuts. The important stuff is the money we spend in our day-to-day operation to represent our constituencies in this Legislature.

We could be a guiding light. We could perhaps set the pace for Ottawa. Maybe we could get those 276 people up there, or whatever their numbers are now, to actually do something for their constituents instead of all the gabblegob that goes on up there. Surely we cannot afford the luxury of bodies that are just bodies, that are not prepared to stand up and be counted, prepared to be imaginative and to be empowered to be able to participate in the whole role of government. Rather than letting the Premier of the day, whoever it is, and maybe four or five cabinet ministers, whoever they may be, and maybe four or five spin doctors down in the back office, sitting around throwing darts at a wheel determining—that is a little facetious, but in terms of deciding what will be the order of the politics of the day, what is going to be popular, how can we advance winning a seat in this riding or that riding or how can we make ourselves more popular in this poll or that poll, when that is really what is going on, what really should be going on should be that they, as members of this Legislature, each of them elected, should at least be consulted in terms of what is important in this province. They should not have to stand up like taking attendance in grade school, when the snap of the fingers comes, “Here’s what we’re going to vote on, guys and gals; stand up,” and everybody stands up.

I am convinced that the people out there who watch a vote being taken in this House have to make one of two conclusions: Either they have to conclude that the idea being advanced by the government is so magnificent and is going to do so much for them that it behooves their member, that member who they know best because they voted for him or her and probably helped campaign for—they have to be convinced that is something they really believe in.

I find it difficult that when you go back to your riding—

Mr Turnbull: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I do not believe there is a quorum present. I think it is important that the government should be here listening to this very good speech we are hearing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): I have listened and this is not a point of order. I would suggest—my apologies to the member for York Mills; I thought you were rising on a point of order. I hear it is a quorum you have asked for and the Clerk is taking a count.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

The Acting Speaker: If I could have the attention of the member for Brampton South, I remind the member that this is a debate on the motion of interim supply. This is generally a free-ranging debate. However, I would remind the member that no matter how free-ranging it is, some reference to the topic before us is essential.

Mr Callahan: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker, for bringing that to my attention.

Let’s go to the question of funding for community colleges and universities. Somewhere along the line, some government, I cannot remember which it was, or the board of regents of the various institutions, made it a rule that if you missed your year, you had to stay out for two years.

A lot can be done by co-operative methods in this House. It does not necessarily always have to be fighting and scrapping. I went over and spoke to the minister and said to him: “Do you really think that’s a fair process for a young child who has a learning disability? A young person who misses his or her year in university has to wait out the two years just like the students who missed their year because they were out carousing or not studying or not participating in the work they should be doing.” The minister said, “I’d never thought about something like that.”

I really think there are opportunities in this House to make certain that the moneys we spend on education and the networks and the processes we put in place to see that people get a fair shake in this province, can be shaped in such a way that we do not have one rule that is so stagnant that it captures these young people who are disabled people. They have an invisible disability. If they have a wheelchair or crutches or are blind or deaf, we can see that and people immediately change rules because of that, and quite so. It is only fair that should happen for disabled people. The people with learning disabilities have an invisible disability. Once we lose sight of the fact that these people perhaps have missed their year not because of anything on their part but simply because they are disabled, it makes no sense and we do not change the rule or react to the rule. Then the moneys we spend and allocate through taxation dollars are not being spent appropriately.

I suggest the same thing is in vogue in terms of some of the things the Ministry of the Attorney General has not done. It is not just this Attorney General; I do not believe our Attorney General considered enacting this alternative. Under the Criminal Code, if the government of the day decides to bring it into vogue, it can in fact provide for an alternative to fines. It can be community service or a number of things. That has never been enacted in this province. It has never been brought out of the Criminal Code the way it should have been, and is, in some provinces.

What it means is that there is a law for the rich. If you are very wealthy and you are fined $500, $600, $1,000 or $5,000 and you have the money, you can pay it. If the person is poor, because that power is not given to the judges to provide some alternative to fines, it means the judge has to say $5,000 or two months in jail. In fact what we have is a two-class system in this province in that certain people can buy their way out of jail and others have to go to jail because they cannot afford to pay the fine.

That is a measure that would not cost this government one nickel to impose, except that there is no question that fines paid through the justice system generate income for the day-to-day activities of the government. However, one has to examine whether or not that is a proper rationale for maintaining a system that creates two levels of citizens in Ontario, those who can pay and those who cannot pay.

I know a number of my colleagues and others in the house want to speak on this, so I am going to address two other things. The first one is that, for some reason, treasurers have been very wont to earmark funds. I started on Thursday by saying it seems absolutely outrageous to me as an Ontarian, as a Canadian and as a human being that we can collect—in fact impose the collection of—dollars on selling all sorts of alcohol and not earmark at least a portion of that money to provide for the flotsam and jetsam of the world that we create as a result of our encouragement to buy alcohol.

It is the same with drugs. Why are we not using that same amount of taxes—they call them sin taxes. Why are we not earmarking those for people of the province who have been afflicted because we have in fact allowed these things to be sold? It seems to me we are burying our heads in the sand if we do not realize that if we do not use those taxes, allocate them and provide proper funding and proper facilities, we are in fact fooling ourselves.

We may think we are having a safe time right now, but as we pass year after year, we are going to find that crime increases dramatically. We are going to find families that will never get out of the welfare ghetto because of alcohol and drug abuse. We are going to find young people who will be destroyed, never to be reclaimed, if we do not use some of those moneys to assist them. I really believe that the present Treasurer and future treasurers have to get out of this mindset about money not being earmarked for specific things.

Let's take seniors. There was always an argument among those who sat on municipal councils about why seniors should have to pay the education tax after they are seniors. I must say that argument was very attractive because it seemed to me that seniors reach a fixed income level where extra dollars are eaten away by inflation, and in paying to pay this tax and gaining no benefit from it becomes a bit difficult for me to rationalize.

Clearly there was an effort—and I am going to use this as an example—by the Conservative government of William Davis, I think it was, to bring in a $400 tax rebate to seniors which was supposed to reimburse them for the money they spent on education. It was based on the principle that because seniors do not have anybody in school, the government was going to give them a bit of a break. The unfortunate thing is that the $400 never got a boost until the government boosted it by $100, and it no longer represents the lion's share taken from seniors out of their tax dollars.

However, it did establish a principle and I urge the Treasurer and treasurers in future to zero in on particular problems and say: "We're making money from this, but there is fallout. People are being hurt by it, so let's earmark that money for them. Let's not require lobby groups to come before us and beg for it. Let's be up front, let's be honest, let's be humane and let's make certain we do it in an innovative way rather than having people force us to do it."

I have to give credit to the government. I have learned through the standing committee on public accounts that it has set up a program which is a registry of available alcohol facilities. That is a good step forward, but it cannot just stop with that. That was obviously done as part and parcel of the scenario of trying to prevent money being spent in the United States at alcohol and drug treatment centres. I applaud that as well.

Our health care system is too important to allow it to go to shambles because we are spending money in an inappropriate way. At the same time, it is only one step. There are all sorts of steps we can take in this regard to attempt to make decisions based neither on their political sexiness nor on what happens down the corridor in the back room or whatever. Members probably know by now that what I am saying is correct, that this is how it goes on.

Let's take some power; let's empower ourselves. Let's not allow any government, majority or minority, to tell us, as members of our ridings, that this is what we can do and this is what we have to vote for. Obviously, to maintain some degree of sanity around here, there will be issues on which we will have to vote party solidarity, but surely to heaven it is not on every vote. If it is on every vote and if we have to speak in favour of our government or against the opposition, or the opposition against the government, on every discussion that takes place in this House, then we have all become replaceable. We will be annihilated like the dinosaurs. We are just wasting taxpayers' dollars. It is something we should think about and try to consider.

One final item: The member for St Catharines talked about the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Everybody thinks that is a marvellous piece of legislation. I have to say I have my doubts. It is a nice phrase, "the Charter of Rights and Freedoms." Unfortunately, it has reached the stage where it is just freedoms, no responsibilities, and that is devastating. That erodes the very foundations of society.

We are seeing decisions being made by judges. With all due respect to the judges, they are making decisions on policy which governments used to make, democratically elected members of this House and the Parliament. They were accountable to the public in the final, ultimate thing—the vote. With all due respect to the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada—they are very learned and, I am sure, very caring and honest men and women—they are making policy that will change, and has already changed, the fabric of a myriad of issues in our society.

The Acting Speaker: I remind the member that we are talking about interim supply.

Mr Callahan: The Charter of Rights and Freedoms does in fact impact significantly on the costs to this province if we look at the number of cases that had to be thrown out in the lower courts because of decisions made in the Askov case; if we look at the number of changes that have to be made to our policies, to our laws, where our laws are declared unconstitutional because the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is in place.

I know people will probably say, "Well, Bob, you don't believe in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms." I do believe in it, I think there is some good content in it, but I think it has given too much policymaking power to people who are not accountable in terms of election. They can remain in office until they are 75 and, as I said, I am sure they do the best they can interpreting the charter and creating fairness under the charter. That is their job. I do not dispute that at all, but I think we as legislators have put them in a position where they are now making decisions that should really be made by elected representatives, not by the judges.

I join with what I think I heard the member for St Catharines say regarding the difficulties the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is creating and is going to create in terms of law and order in our society, not just for today but in the future. If members do not believe this, they should take a look at the United States. The US Bill of Rights does not go half as far in its content and interpretation thus far as our Charter of Rights and Freedoms does. We are in fact creating a scenario that allows elements in this society to have a leg up that should not have a leg up. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms to a large degree assists and can be used by unscrupulous people in this community.

In my riding recently I found a 14-year old boy outside a beer store selling chocolate-covered candies. He was alleging, not by specific, direct word but inferentially, that he was selling these for a charitable organization. I walked up to the kid and said: "Where did you come from? What charity is this for?" He said, "Well, it's not a charity," yet it had very clearly on the wrapper "In aid of the welfare of children."

I said, "How did you get here?" He said, "I was dumped off in a truck by somebody from Toronto." Apparently there were 10 or 20 of these kids selling chocolate bars, worth about 50 cents, for $3.50 to unsuspecting people, members of my community.

Somebody jokingly said—and it may not be all that unkind—that the guy running the whole thing might be 12 years old, and if he is 12 years old or under, he cannot be charged under the Criminal Code. He becomes literally a free agent in terms of running criminal activities.

These are things about which we should be very jealous and guard very carefully. We may need the impetus and the courage in the forthcoming discussions about constitutional change to perhaps look at that, because if we do not, we are going to create an environment that we are not going to be very happy about in about five or 10 years. I am sure none of us wants that.

To bring this right back to the question of interim supply, all of that costs the province not just money—that is important—but it also costs in terms of human loss, agony, hurt and family breakups. Those things are probably more important than the economic side of it but also result in further economic costs to this government.

I urge all members to be innovative and vigilant, not to allow the present procedure in this House to take place all the time that requires them to vote for every single thing the government says they have to vote for. If they do, at the end of their session here, be it this term, next term or five terms from now, they are not going to have much satisfaction in going back and thinking about what they could have done but did not, when they were given a sacred trust by the people of their ridings.

Mr Bisson: I listened with interest to the member for Brampton South speak on the question of how the Charter of Rights and Freedoms can, if not properly administered, in some way work against us as citizens. I, for one, share that view to a certain extent.

There was a little bit of generalizing in the way the member put it across, but I think the point is well made that if we do not watch ourselves and if we do not find a way of dealing with that, we can see a lot of our rights diminished by special-interest groups that happen to have the money to make it to the Supreme Court of Canada.

We have seen those types of decisions made recently around the Election Finances Act, challenged by some corporations, that allowed the Conservatives access to money to be able to make it through the last general election.

The other point the member makes is that he hopes government members will remember that they should not always vote on the side of the government. I say to the member that we live in a parliamentary system with quite a bit of tradition that says that to a certain extent we are elected here as parties and we are here to carry out an ideology that our party and caucus strongly believe in.

I would point out one thing, though, to the member who just spoke. I would like to see what his voting record was while he sat on this side of the House and whether he voted against his government on all occasions.

Mr Callahan: I am not going to take much time, Mr. Speaker. Others would like to participate in this debate.

I can tell the member opposite that my record—and I invite him to look it up—would demonstrate that throughout my tenure in the House I attempted to meet each issue, look at it and vote the way I thought appropriate. I did not do that on all occasions because, as I have said, I agree that we are elected on a particular party philosophy. In reviewing for my private member's motion, I found that in the United Kingdom 82 votes took place; the members voted as they wished and the government did not come tumbling to the ground.

Also, in the McGrath report reviewing this entire issue, somebody came up with the astute decision that when governments have a large majority, every vote becomes not a vote of confidence but a vote of respectability. In other words, if you do not win every vote and if everybody does not vote the same way on each occasion, it makes the government look as though it does not have control of its members. Surely to heaven that is not the reason we were elected, to be controlled; we were elected to espouse the philosophy of our party, but not on each and every occasion; to participate in debate in the House without necessarily being so blinded by our particular philosophy that we could not be innovative and perhaps plan ahead.

Mr Stockwell: The interim supply debate is always interesting. It is wide-ranging. It encompasses many different facets of government and dwells mostly upon the issues we have faced in the last few months generally in that session.

I would like to go a little further back and remind the government, as I have on a number of occasions, that we should always go back to that day in August, August 19, 1990, when the now Premier, the member for York South, was leader of the official opposition at the time, was determining exactly how best he could manipulate the vote to ensure he would be elected Premier. I am sure the Premier would much rather forget that fateful day, August 19, 1990, because that was the day he announced his Agenda for People, the noblest, fairest, most honest document that ever came down the political stream.

It is kind of humorous; it is kind of funny. I like running into acquaintances and some friends who are socialists, who are members of the NDP. I have enjoyed running into those people in the last year or so because I have found their comments to be very interesting and very enlightening.

I find there are three kinds of socialists left in Ontario. The first kind is Socialist A, who basically still stands by the party pap and the rhetoric the NDP espoused in August and September 1990. This group is generally made up of people across the floor, because of course they are paid to say what they say. You will never change their minds, though I take great delight in pointing out the inaccuracies and the changes and the differences between them and the old socialists we knew, the guys who were bearded and wore check jackets with elbow pads ironed on and so on. In talking to them, they are still of the firm belief that this is the party of the people. "We got off to a slow start" is what they will say; and "Sure, auto insurance was an issue, but, eh, we had to change our minds because we were really stupid before."

It is kind of interesting. You run into those people, then you run into the second group who are kind of on the fence about every decision this government makes and try to defend it there from day care to co-operative housing to auto insurance. They are really having trouble. Their guts and their hearts are saying, "I can't support these people any more. They just aren't saying what I want them to say," but their heads are saying: "But, gee, who can I support? I can't support the Tories because they won't ever put a piece of trash out like this and pretend they endorse it."

After those two groups, you run into the third group. I have a great deal of fun running into this third group of socialists. These are the pre-September 6 socialists, not the post-September 6 socialists. These are the rank and file, the ones who knocked on doors, and maybe they are elected to local councils, etc, the true socialists who used to dump all over the Tories and the Liberals in the past. They would have glib one-sentence answers to a lot of very sincere and difficult problems, much like the Agenda for People does.

I run into these people and they are just totally disheartened. They realize that basically what they are is nothing more than a bunch of collective, group politicians who are no better or worse than previous governments. Their sanctimony is certainly eroded and they are having a very difficult time because they basically said in no uncertain terms, "This government has sold out on our socialist principles."

It is fun to run into them, because in previous years, in my eight years on local council, I would run into them and they would have instant answers as well. I guess they are discovering that when you shoot the arrows, it is a lot simpler than catching them.

Having said that, on August 19, 1990, the member for York South outlined his new Agenda for People. This is really a great document because it allows all opposition members to photocopy it and, come next election, trot it out and say: "Now here's the group that was leading us to the promised land, the socialists, with answers for all. How have they done on their Agenda for People?"

What is equally interesting, although I did not re-read this until last week when we were talking about having this debate, is that the then Leader of the Opposition, the leader of the group across the floor, issued a press release on that date. He had some really interesting things in that press release, and I think the people of Ontario and certainly the people across the floor, who I do not think read this that much any more, should remember what was said on August 19, 1990. Their leader, the member for York South, who on the day the election was announced called the then Premier Peterson a liar five times in a press conference for not fulfilling his campaign promises—

The Acting Speaker: I realize this is a free-ranging debate, but it would be helpful for me and perhaps for others if you could make a relationship to interim supply for the period commencing November 1, 1991, and ending December 31, 1991.

Mr Stockwell: It is very simple, Mr Speaker. The list of promises that were made on that fateful day on August 19 have a great impact on the operating expenditures we are dealing with today. Anyone could make that assumption or that leap of faith, I suppose, so that is where I am coming from. Although it is a little longer than normal, I think even the members across the floor could follow this.

On August 19, 1990, the Premier, the white knight of the lefties, the socialist king, stood up and made his pronouncement of the Agenda for People. It is very important to bear in mind that not two or three weeks earlier he had sat in that studio downstairs and called the then Premier Peterson, who he has claimed reneged on an auto insurance commitment—imagine that; that is astounding; he accused the then Premier of reneging on an auto insurance commitment—a liar five times that day. And here we have the Agenda for People on August 19. He did not know but would know very shortly that he would be the next Premier. He had some really important things to say on this date. Some of those important things we should listen to.

This is from their prized leader, the accuser of liars, the person who accuses people of lying to the public: "I started this campaign by saying our party would not be presenting an endless catalogue of promises to the people of Ontario." Can members imagine him saying that, then introducing this catalogue of endless promises to the people of Ontario? It is unbelievable.

"Men and women across Ontario have told me that they don't want promises that can't be kept." He said that on August 19. The now Premier who accused the then Premier of being a liar said—and this is unbelievable—"Men and women across Ontario told me that they don't want promises that can't be kept and they don't trust parties that pretend to serve every need and satisfy every demand." This is astounding.

Having sat through the first year or so of this government and seen the endless list of promises that are broken, it is amazing that on 19 August, 1990, he could have said these things and still face off in the House across from the opposition parties. How he can even stand here and try to defend it is absolutely unbelievable to me.

As we see, it refers back to the expenses today. We can see why he has a difficult time defending such statements as "We don't have a fair tax system." He said, "We don't use election campaigns to discover problems, promise solutions and then ignore them afterwards." With all due respect to the party across the floor, it has discovered more problems since it has been elected than any government in the history of this province. It discovers new problems every day.

The recession was a discovery to these people. In the summer of last year we were well on our way into a recession, and they got elected and somehow they discovered there was a recession in this province. Were they living in caves? That is the question that must be asked. Apparently so, because they discovered the recession when they got elected.

"There are of course costs to our program." This is a beauty. They admit that it is going to cost money to implement the Agenda for People and the Premier who, as I said, accused the then Premier Peterson of being a liar five times in that studio downstairs—and I would never suggest that the Premier is a liar. I would never suggest that. I would wonder what he calls himself, but I would never make the suggestion.

"Our commitments add up to an affordable program." This Premier is $10 billion in debt and he claims he cannot fulfil his promises because he does not have the money, because he just discovered there was a recession when he got elected. This is scary. It is a very scary situation when this Premier, who accused the then Premier of being a liar five times, discovers there is a recession when he is elected and then goes out and does exactly the same thing he accused Premier Peterson of being a liar for. He reneged on his insurance promises. Even the hard-hearted, even the ring-through-the-nose socialists who get led around this province cannot buy that. Even they cannot buy that.

It leads me into the next set of promises that he did not make, promises that were not just going to be a catalogue of promises. "David Peterson and the Liberals have sat on the sidelines as free trade and punishing interest rates have cut a swath through the Ontario economy." Then, son of a gun, here is a guy who said he would have dashed free trade. He is also the same person who said he was going to have a revolt over the GST. So I do not see a lot of differences between our last two Premiers.

Then he suggested—get this, Mr Speaker; this is another humorous part of their promises—on page 3 of his August 19 manifesto that the recession is here. Is that not humorous? They got elected on September 6 and did not know there was a recession, but on August 19 they told us we were in the middle of a recession. Can you get over that, Mr Speaker? We got into a recession and out of a recession inside of two weeks. It is a miracle, an absolute miracle, unless some would suggest—and I would never suggest this—maybe they were being less than honest. I do not want to say that. I think that is for other people to say who are far more cynical than I. But definitely I would not make that suggestion.

"The Liberals make promises and they break promises." Can members believe the socialist leader of the NDP government saying something like that? I agree wholeheartedly. One would not want a government elected by making promises it could not keep, would one? Terrible stuff. It is astounding that anyone would think about doing that, making promises they could not keep, such as the day care or the co-operative housing or the auto insurance or the relief to farmers and small businessmen. You would hate to think someone would actually do that, would you not, Mr Speaker? I would never suggest that this government did that. But again, the cynical sorts out there would make that suggestion, and they would put up a pretty good argument if they ever got hold of a copy of this text.

"And that is the choice of this campaign. Across the province New Democrats are saying to the people: 'This is you Ontario, and together we can make sure that people, not simply the rich and powerful, call the shots in Ontario.'"

Some hon members: Hear, hear.

Mr Stockwell: They are still applauding these statements. They cannot get it off their brains. They have got to continue applauding these bits of rhetoric. Here we go. They just do not want the rich and powerful. It seems to me that some would suggest again—and I am not one—that maybe Bob White and the unions are calling the shots. I would hate to think that was the case, not with a party that is so upfront, public, fairminded and truthful as a party that would, say, produce the Agenda for People. We would never think that about this party.

Having said that, I think it is very important that we review very quickly—it would be sort of like a political science course 101—the Agenda for People, because the people in Ontario deserve to be reminded of exactly what the members opposite were promising on that day in September 1990. It is very important because their leader did call Premier Peterson a liar five times when he made the announcement. We should make them stand up and defend their record, seeing as how they are so noble and above board and almighty as compared to the other less-than-desirable, less-than-honest parties in this province. I think it is important we go through these.

It is funny. Here we have the first page: A very important factor in this government's application to become the government of Ontario was based on "A Fair Tax Plan for Ontario." "Minimum Corporate Tax": Apparently they have formed a committee. Is that not a novel idea? Here is a government that may not want to face the realities of the situation, so what would you think it should do? They formed a committee. The oldest political axiom in the book: When in doubt, form a committee.

The beauty of all this is that when their Treasurer was asked, "Gee, Mr Treasurer, why did you form a committee this when you were so convinced, pre-election date"—it was in the period of time when they were noble, righteous and sanctimonious—"of exactly how you were going to handle this tax plan?" he muttered something along the lines of: "Well, we weren't in power. We really don't know what we were talking about."

Is that not hilarious? Is that not funny? Some would be cynical. Not I, of course. Some would suggest they were being less than truthful. Not I. Even some of their own could make those kinds of suggestions, but I would never say that. That would be attacking the Premier of Ontario. That would be like saying five times in a press conference before an election, "Gee, the Premier is a liar." I would never say that. There are some who would say those things—the Premier, for example—but I would never say it. But some would.

As we get back to the interim financing debate, we can be clearly in the interim financing debate exactly why a tax plan—

The Acting Speaker: Order. Take your seat, please. I am being quite generous in the interpretation and the latitude I am giving the member. I think the member can reciprocate by speaking to supply and not making a mockery of some of the rules of the Legislature, and I think that is taking place at this time.

Mr Stockwell: I would hope I am not making a mockery of this setting. I would not want to do that. What I am trying to point out is that there are people out there who could make these suggestions and, yes, across the floor there have been members who have done so on a very public and real occasion. I am trying to use as much latitude and leeway as this government would have used when it was in opposition. I would certainly hope I would not use any more, and I would beg the indulgence of the Speaker.

We get to "Minimum Corporate Tax."

The Acting Speaker: I call the member to order. He has had the indulgence of the Speaker. The Speaker's patience is running out.

Mr Stockwell: I appreciate that, but I really do not understand exactly what rule I am breaking here. I am dealing with interim supply. I am speaking about issues we are addressing, and with all due respect I do not think I have pushed your limits, Mr Speaker, as this party has in opposition in the past.

"Tax Fairness for the Working Poor," "Succession Duties on Estates of the Rich and Super-Rich," and "Speculation Tax": Some would suggest that maybe they did not know what they were talking about before September 6. I may well have been one of those people. I may have suggested they did not know what they were talking about and were going to get us in a peckful of trouble.

Some would even go as far as to say they were not being truthful. I am not one of those people, but there are people out there saying that. I know that is going to burn their ears, but there are people saying that they were less than truthful in the last campaign. I am not one of them and I hate to think that they are out there, but I think they are out there. I really do.

We got to the tax position that has left us in this interim financing dilemma because they claimed they were going to raise billions and billions of new dollars through this tax plan they had. Of course, it is the same tax plan about which the Treasurer said, "Gee, I don't think we knew what we were talking about," but having said that, they were going to raise some money this way.

We have now formed a committee that is going to report back to this House. First it was supposed to report back in six months. Then they said: "This is a lot more complicated than we thought. We'd better not report back for about a year." They really got looking into it and somebody got the bright idea: "A year is really too quick. We're going to have to report back in, say, about 18 months." Somebody said, "Well, the opposition is going to say we're just stalling this," and somebody said, "Well, we'll put in an interim report." Then someone said, "If we put in an interim report, we won't have to report back for, say, 24 months." So the wheels are turning on the other side. Now we hear it is not 24 but 36.

They could probably base their next campaign on the first two pages of their Agenda for People and all the promises they made in the last campaign in 1990. It seems to be a pretty appropriate way to do business. Again, some would say, "Gee, this government is less than honest." Not I. I would never say that, but there are some who would say that. If they got hold of this, they might have a really good argument to make.

We have "Ontario at Work" and "Interest Rate Relief." I am quoting from the Agenda for People. We were going to have interest rate relief from "the high interest rate policies of the federal Conservatives." We will use "borrowing power and preferential rates."

"Relief for Farmers": $100 million would be made available in interest rate relief. There are farmers in Ontario who would say, again, that this government was less than honest when it made that promise, because we have not seen that $100 million in interest rate relief, nor have we heard of the $100 million in interest rate relief, nor has the government made any noises about introducing that piece of legislation for $100 million.

That leads us right back to the interim supply bill. Why can they not do it? Because they have already spent $10 billion more than they had.

There is a promise about which some out there are going to say, "You guys weren't being real honest," but I am not one of them. I will be clear. Their Premier may well have said that when he was in opposition, as he did on the day they announced the election. He said five times that the then Premier was a liar. I would not be one of those people, but he may well have been.

"Building Homes: The program would make $1.4 billion in mortgage funds available at the government's own long-term cost of borrowing." Here we are again. All those people out there trying to buy homes for the first time would have qualified for this $1.4 billion, yet we have not seen the program; we have not seen the announcement. It must come back to this interim supply. We see the government is $10 billion in debt. Maybe what happened is that the recession is a little worse than they thought it was, because they did not think it existed when they got elected. It must be that way.

We then get to "Small Business Assistance"—$40 million available. We have not seen that. Again, it comes back to the interim supply amount. I guess the recession was worse, when they announced this on August 19, than they thought it was when they discovered it on September 6. I am not sure how that works, but I am certain someone over there will be able to explain it to somebody somewhere—if they are asleep.

"Driver-Owned Insurance"—Is this not interesting? The now Premier at the time of that announcement downstairs called Premier Peterson a liar five times. Five times he called him a liar, and he said one of the reasons he was a liar was that he did not honour his auto insurance promise. Some people out there—I am not one of them—are going to think that maybe this government was being less than honest. That would be a terrible thought, but they are thinking it. They have even mentioned to me that this government was not being truthful when it made the auto insurance promise.

I say: "Oh, please, you can't say that about the NDP. They're righteous, they're sanctimonious, they're truthful. They would never do something like make a promise they couldn't keep to get elected." No, not the socialists. Not the Premier, who accused David Peterson five times that day of being a liar for exactly the same thing. I denounce that. I say: "You're wrong. You don't know the socialists." I am getting worried that I might be wrong, but I might not and they might come forward in the next three years and fulfil these promises.

As we go through we see "Job Protection," "Training and Adjustment," "Minimum Wage" and "Pay Equity." We see "Child Care." That is a good one. "New Democrats would provide funding for 10,000 new non-profit child care spaces and for subsidies on 10,000 spaces in each of the next two years." They have not done that, but I think the hilarious part is that they said it would cost only $240 million. Again, it gets back to interim supply. No wonder they have a problem. They actually thought 20,000 day care spaces would cost only $240 million. I think the calculator was broken, because if it were not broken, some would suggest—again, not I—that they were being less than truthful. I think the calculator was broken. That must be the problem.

Moving on to "Poverty," that was the eradication of food banks. That was another interesting argument that was made when, of course, government members were in opposition and they could say pretty much anything they wanted or write pretty much anything they wanted, which they did. They would eradicate food banks. I guess the meaning of the word "eradicate" is to do away, gone, delete, finish.

People who are going to food banks now under the NDP government, and maybe the same people who were going to food banks under the Liberal government and the same people who were going to food banks under the Conservative government, may say that the government members were being maybe a little less than honest. But I would never say that, because they do have this financing problem with interim supply. The financing problem they have is that they have overspent the budget by $10 billion without really fulfilling one campaign promise. So I would not say that. Interim supply being a wide-ranging ability to debate and discuss different aspects of this government allows me the opportunity to say, "Gee, I guess the calculator is broken."

"Protection for Seniors." The seniors are really concerned. In fact a couple of seniors have said to me on a few occasions, "You know, Mr Stockwell, I don't think this government was being real truthful." I again stand up for the members opposite. I say: "No, it cannot be. Not the socialists. Not the NDP. You mean, the people who wrote An Agenda for People, you honestly believe they were just saying these things to get elected?" Then of course they understand and say, "Oh, I think I lost my head for a moment there," and they get back to reality.

Not the socialists; they would never say things like that. Liberals and Conservatives would, but never the socialists. They could not say that because their Premier, on that day when they announced the election downstairs called Premier Peterson a liar five times for not fulfilling his campaign promises. They could not do that and look themselves in the mirror, so it could not be them.

"Rights to a Clean Environment"—this is another good one, the environmental bill of rights. That was so easy to write on this side of the House. They wrote it two or three times, I think, and they introduced it. Now when they get to that side of the House, I think they honestly forget how to write. That is the excuse I use for that one: They forget how to write.

Mr McLean: You forgot "Rent Control."

Mr Stockwell: I forgot "Rent Control," which was a total move to the right from the principles they espoused when they were in opposition. Even some people in apartment buildings have suggested that this was less than honourable, but I am not one of them and I have defended members opposite.

"Clean Air" and "Preserving Agricultural Land"—we heard today about agricultural land, a weigh station on four acres of land. Then they are parcelling up the Niagara area, an acre at a time to finance the operations, which again is something members opposite have opposed. They will get around to it, right, in a few years? There is no question. I said that to them. They have been really busy.

"Improving Public Transit"—this is interesting. They announced the program for Metropolitan Toronto about moving forward and the $5 billion. We have not seen a dollar yet, but they announced it so they must mean it, right? They have to mean it, because they did the announcement.

"Responding to Needs of Native People" and building the northern fund. This one is interesting as well, because they are talking about single-industry towns and the Liberals bleeding the north dry. "We propose a northern fund of $400 million over two years," returning jobs and $200 million a year.

Then we get down to another northern promise. I was up in the north not long ago, in Thunder Bay, and people are not sure but they said to me that maybe government members were not telling the truth when they made the promise that they would four-lane the Trans-Canada Highway. I said: "You're kidding, aren't you? You can't tell me you don't believe they meant that." They say they did not. I say, "Now, come, come, not the socialists," and they say, yes, the socialists."

It is of very much concern to people in the north too that maybe the government members made a couple of promises they could not keep. I do not think that is the case, but again they will have to go up and defend that decision and ask them about it and probably in the next election a Conservative or a Liberal may well pull this out. Government members had better warn their northern members. They had better be warned that somebody might say, "We promised to four-lane the Trans-Canada Highway and we didn't do it," so they had better have an answer. What about "We forgot"? That is another good answer. We forgot. We meant to four-lane it but we just never got around to it."

They were not being irresponsible. They said they could do all these things, which I thought was really good of them because they put a pricetag on them, and their expenditures for 1991 would be around $44.5 billion. Now we go. We have all these promises. This comes back to interim financing. Interim financing is really important, because we have a government that made a lot of promises, which we calculated at $14 billion or $16 billion. Of course, we were just Conservatives, we were merely Tories. We were just trying to get elected, so we calculated the figure at $14 billion to $16 billion. The government members, being the true socialists they are, who would never make a promise they could not keep, suggested it would cost $2.38 billion to do all these programs and of course the expenditures for the 1991 operating budget would be about $44.5 billion. Well, we have seen that the operating budget this year is, I think, $53 billion or $54 billion.

They have not even fulfilled these promises and they have already spent $10 billion more than they thought they could spend. Again people across this province will say, "They weren't being honest." But they do not know the government. They do not know that it would never ever make a promise during an election campaign that it could not keep in order to get elected. No, they would not do that. In that studio downstairs, when the then Premier Peterson announced the election, they would not do that because their leader, the member for York South, called Premier Peterson a liar five times for not fulfilling his campaign promises. They would never ever do that.

That is what I tell them. Again they come back and say: "Gee, I don't know what got into me. I don't know why I said that." I almost thought for a moment, a fleeting moment, that some of them said to me—I have washed it right out of their heads—"Gee, I thought for a moment here that the socialists were just politicians." I straightened them out right away. I said: "No, they're more than politicians. They're not mere politicians who would make promises to get elected. They would never do that." People read the Agenda for People and these are the conclusions they reach. The government has a lot of spade work to do out there, to get out to the constituencies, to get out to all these people who are thinking these impure thoughts and straighten them out and tell them: "No, we wouldn't do that. This is a figment of your imagination, the Agenda for People. We didn't do that." They are going to have to face the fact that some are going to say they were less than honest, but they can handle those people.

Dealing with a few of the issues we are faced with today that were spoken about in the Agenda for People—again it is the wide-ranging debate of the interim supply bill and how come the promises cannot be kept or are taking longer to keep—one of these would be waste disposal. I am running into people in the regions of Peel and York who are somewhat concerned that, as Mayor Hazel calls her, the Great White Mother, the Minister of the Environment, who was so pro-public hearings and pro-environment when she was on the opposition side, has moved that the Keele Valley and Britannia dump sites be expanded without a minute of public hearings, without a minute of environmental assessment hearings. There are people out there in Peel and York who think that when the government's leader stood on those sites and said, "Never will I allow these dump sites to be expanded without full environmental assessment hearings," he was being less than honest.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Lay off. Enough.

Mr Stockwell: Exactly. I said that: "Enough. Stop it. You've obviously lost your mind for a minute. They would never do that. Even the Liberals know that. They would never do that." Our caucus quite often goes into the fact that, "Gee, I'd like to attack them on their promises but they would never say things to get elected that they didn't mean." No, not the socialists.

Another interesting issue of concern that has happened in the past few months is that the police are investigating opposition members and trying to find out exactly where they got leaked documents. If this government had been in opposition at the time these documents were leaked and had got its hands on these documents and had asked a question about them or outlined them in the House here and another government—say, someone as wily and unkind and almost dishonest as the Liberals or Conservatives—had sent in the police, I think this government would have been very upset.

I think it was obviously just something that came up and they did not give a lot of thought to. So again I protect their interest when this debate comes up about the police investigation and the fact that they were not doing anything they would not have expected when they were in opposition. For instance, if they had got a secret envelope and introduced it in the House, I think the member for York South would have been accepting of the fact that yes, they sent in the police to find out where he got the envelope. I think they would have accepted that. I do not know why they would not do that.

With regard to the power corporation, gee, I do not know. I did not hear any promises—speaking about interim supply again and the financing of this great province—during the Agenda for People or the campaign that they were going to raise hydro rates by nearly 50% over a three-year period of time. I never heard those promises. Some say they never made them because they thought it would not get them a lot of votes. But I straighten them out and tell them: “No, that’s not the way it is. They didn’t know about it. They were not sure that was what they would have to do, fund social programs through the process or try to fob off the payroll of the chief executive officer and chairman to the board rather than taking the responsibility themselves because they did not want to have the flak from the public.” I said: “No, they never had those ideas. That’s just something that has come up.”

Sunday shopping is crucial. This is a tough one. This is a real tough one when I get a constituent who comes up to me and says things like: “This party was in favour of a common pause day for all 12 months in a year. Now they are in power, they are saying to me we can have a common pause day 11 months out of the year and for the 12th month they are not in favour of a common pause day.” They are saying that the government was being less than honest once again, but I defend it.

I say things like, “No, they gave this a lot of thought in caucus and they decided we can shop on Sunday in every month that starts with a letter D.” They have come to the conclusion that this is a good policy to have. They have decided: “Gee, we can protect the workers’ rights 11 months of the year, but it is way too onerous and way too time-consuming to protect the workers’ rights 12 months of the year. To alleviate a lot of work, we’ll only protect them 11 months and then in the 12th month we’ll say to everybody, ‘Don’t worry, you’re being protected.’”

I really have a tough time following that theory, because if they can be protected in December, why can they not be protected in all the other months of the year. If they can protect the workers in the month of December against the problems and concerns they have for a common pause day, why do they not just introduce the same legislation for 12 months of the year? Here is a brainwave. Here is a bolt. Maybe one of them could catch this. Maybe they could introduce a piece of legislation, patterned on the legislation they just introduced, that could protect the workers in December and the other 11 months. That is just crazy enough to work. They should take that one to cabinet and somebody should stand up and say that. Of course, it was not exactly what they said in the election, and they would not say something to get elected and they would not make a promise they could not keep, but if they did, that seems like a way to do it. I know they would not, but if they did.

I think labour laws are driving people and businesses out of this province. People in business are going to have very grave concerns about the labour laws. I have spoken to a number of businesses. I think when they are introduced, there will be an exodus to south of the border or to Manitoba or to Quebec.

I would have liked to get into law and order but I think there is an opportunity for others to enter into this debate. It would be of interest to hear what they had to say. Maybe they could give me some ideas of what I could say to members of the public when they come and tell me the government was being less than honest when it wrote the Agenda for People and is not doing any of it. Maybe they could give me ideas about what I can respond to my constituents, to tell them: “Gee no, they’re being honest. They just didn’t know what they were doing, as the Treasurer said or they were being far too simplistic, as the Treasurer said. Or should I just say what the Premier said to Mr Peterson, “You’re a liar”? Should I say that, or what exactly?”

There are a lot of broken promises here, or potential broken promises, and there are a lot of people out there who have some real grave concerns. Sunday shopping is one.

Mr McLean: School funding.

Mr Stockwell: Another one is school funding, and should get to that, because right now we are in the midst of a municipal election. I am glad this one was brought up.

Right now we are in the midst of a municipal election and there are trustees out there running for the school boards who have said things like, “The NDP promised 60% funding but knew full well it couldn’t deliver.” Imagine someone standing up and saying publicly that this government made a promise of school board funding of 60% of costs and knew it could not do it, that it was just making promises to get elected.

Their ears should burn when this happens, because they are being talked about in every community hall and every all-candidates meeting that is taking place for the trustees. Everybody is saying, “Gee, this government might not have been telling the whole truth when it was running last time.”

I pop up at every one of those meetings and stand up and say: “Hold the phone, folks, they’ve got three more years to fulfil that promise. They said to us in the House that they’ll fulfil that promise, even though they are $1 billion in debt.” It is going to cost billions and billions of dollars to do it, and even their Minister of Education said it is impossible to do and “I don’t think we can do it.”

The government will still fulfil that promise, will it not? Because otherwise it would be letting down a whole bunch of people. Worst of all, people would start saying things like, “Wow, those socialists are just politicians,” “Those socialists said some things in the election that they had no intention of keeping.”

I am glad I had the opportunity of discussing interim supply. I think this government has some problems, as all governments have. It has some problems with respect to promises it has made, but the very greatest problem that this government has is this, and I will say it to the public—

Mr Johnson: Right now it’s you.

Mr Stockwell: Maybe it is me. Maybe I am their biggest problem. Maybe the member is right. But I want to remind the government members of the things they promised just so they do not forget. I would not want to see them fall off the soapbox they preach from or used to preach from. I do not want to see them do that, or fall off from under their halos. So I am going to promise that I will keep reminding them of these things until they fulfil the promises.

The most important problem this government faces is the fateful day on August 19, 1990, when its leader, the leader of the Opposition at the time, made these promises and these statements, because they are socialists and they are always told us that they will do as they say. They do not like parties that make promises and break promises. They have said it right in here. They do not like parties that will just say anything to get elected and they do not like to have a catalogue of promises they cannot keep. This is their problem: They have gone into power with those promises and commitments outstanding and they are falling all behind in a lot of their commitments and promises.

The other problem the government faces, all of this time, come next election, is that the day the election was announced its leader sat downstairs in that studio and said the times that Premier Peterson was a liar for not fulfilling his campaign promises. He said that five times. They have no problems: They have a catalogue of promises they have made and a leader who called another leader a liar for not fulfilling his campaign promises.

Interim supply is an interesting debate. It allows the opposition time to go over some of the motions and legislation and to go over the last election and look the people across the floor in the eye and say: "Tell me when you're keeping your catalogue of promises. It is getting very difficult to defend you."

Mr Drainville: After listening for a considerable length of time to the rhetoric and hyperbole of the honourable member opposite, I must say that I have been noting with regularity the verbal inexactitudes with which he has peppered his discourse.

In his attempt to pillory the Premier in terms of the comments he made on the day the election was called, I must say, as a member who has sat across from the honourable member for Etobicoke West, that on many occasions his own speeches and his own comments and interjections during the House have not been, let's say, without some inflammatory aspects. Words like "bunk," "unreal," "garbage," "that's embarrassing," "resign" and a number of other things that would be totally unparliamentary for me to mention here have been uttered by the honourable member.

I must say in those terms, when he says to us over here that he defended us, he could not defend us because he cannot stand on anything that he believes. He attacks the government, but does he put forward his own agenda? No. He raises the Agenda for People, in my view a fine document that indicated the direction we want to go in in Ontario. If he says we have not complied with promises, indeed we have not, and it is a credit to this government that we have been willing to accept the financial difficulties and challenges that we have.

I must say, in terms of this constant attempt to vilify by making himself look noble in the process and by saying that he defended the government, we know the truth of this situation, and the truth is that he is trying to make others look bad at the expense of not putting forth one wit of credible policy or evidence.

Mr Bradley: The member had a lot of interesting things to say, but one of the things I was surprised at was that he did not raise the issue of Niagara farm land disappearing.

Mr Stockwell: I did.

Mr Bradley: Perhaps he did and I just missed that part of the speech. The reason is that we have a situation where the Ministry of Transportation in Ontario is attempting to expropriate land from farmers in the Beamsville area.

There is a Martin Schuele who, it says in Friday's St Catharines Standard in an article by Carol Alaimo, "is a rarity among Niagara farmers—he's optimistic about his future. That's why he cannot believe the Ontario government wants to pave over part of his vineyard to make way for a massive development at the same time the province is pushing for farm land protection." He wonders why, when the farmers of the Niagara region are forced to keep their land. They cannot sell it; they are restricted by rules of the province from doing that, and by the regional municipality, though it appears to be changing its mind. On the other hand, this government, to set the example, would pave over prime farm land in the Niagara region.

I am a person who believes in the preservation of agricultural land. I have said so on many occasions in this House. That is why I have spoken to and directed questions to the Minister of Agriculture and Food indicating there should be sufficient support for those farmers so they are able to retain their farm land.

I heard the Premier of Ontario in Beamsville announce that he was going to protect farm land in the Niagara region, criticizing previous governments for this. Here we have the Ministry of Transportation bulldozing ahead, expropriating land from farmers who are working hard to save that land. They want to farm that land, and we have the province, led by the Minister of Transportation, doing the opposite. What was most flabbergasting was the fact that the Minister of Agriculture and Food apparently knew nothing about this.

Mrs Marland: It is really amazing to hear the member for Victoria-Haliburton get up on his feet and talk about verbal ineptitude—I think those were the words he used in accusing my colleague the member for Etobicoke West—when this member for Victoria-Haliburton, I would suggest, is a past master at verbal ineptitude.

The difference—this member obviously, although he has been here a year, still is not able to see it—is that the member for Etobicoke West did not promise the Agenda for People. He did not campaign on the promises contained in the Agenda for People. The Agenda for People was the New Democratic Party's campaign promise. It was this socialist government's promise to the people of Ontario, and it is the most insulting campaign literature the people of Ontario have ever been exposed to.

We have a Minister of Education, which I will give just as an example, who will not even visit St James School in my riding, to come and see the kind of conditions those students are trying to be educated under.

We have had all kinds of examples where this government on the one hand talks about how much it cares about the people of Ontario, and at the same time is ignoring the basic needs and rights of those people of Ontario. We can talk about housing, we can talk about health care and we can certainly talk about examples in education. When we look at the kinds of cuts hospitals are having to make in this province today and the whole responsibility for the provision of health care, this government simply does not care.

Mr Johnson: I listened with interest to the member for Etobicoke West and I heard him mention that he did not know what he could tell his constituents. He was having trouble trying to find the things he could tell his constituents about this government. I would suggest that he tell the people in his constituency that many years of bad government in Ontario, leading up to the government this government inherited, is one of the main reasons we are having the difficult time we are having today.

There are more reasons. There are reasons their federal cousins have contributed with the free trade agreement, for example. Certainly the federal government is trying to bring our country into the global economy and most would say that is inevitable, but how they did it is the thing that is so serious, and the fact that they did not plan as well as they should have. They did not have the ability to foresee the future as they should have.

Here we have a member of that party, albeit a provincial member, who says he does not know what to tell people. I suggest that maybe he should tell the people that this government unfortunately inherited a situation that is very tragic, a situation where we found ourselves more in debt than we had anticipated. With the lost industrial and manufacturing jobs, personal income tax revenues are down. People are not buying as they usually do, and the fact that retail sales tax revenues are down has made it very difficult for this government in any way, shape or form to deal with some of the things it said in the Agenda for People that it might like to do.

I think he might remember this and might tell his constituents that this is one of the problems we have to deal with. The fact that this government made suggestions of what it might like to do should it be in government I think is very honourable and some day in fact may be true.

Mr Stockwell: I would comment on the member for Victoria-Haliburton's statement, but as usual it is not worth commenting on, so I will move on and comment on the member for Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings.

The funny thing is that when I tell constituents I run into that they have a lot of problems, like the recession, that the federal government is not their friend, and that there is the GST, free trade and all those things, do members know what they say to me? They say, "Gosh, Chris, weren't all those things in place when they made the promises?" and I say, "Yes, they were." "Wasn't the GST going through?" I say, "Yes." "Wasn't free trade in effect?" I say, "Yes." "Weren't we in the middle of a recession?" I say, "Yes." "Weren't the Conservatives in power federally?" I say, "Yes."

Then they say to me: "You'd think, Chris, that the people made these promises solely on the proviso to get elected. I don't think they meant them. I don't think they were sincere. I think they just said this so they could form a government." I say: "Even though the GST was there, free trade was negotiated and the government was in place federally, even though all the things were there and you say they're using them as excuses, I say you don't know the socialists, because the socialists wouldn't do that. They're too sanctimonious, too righteous. They have far too many soapboxes to preach from."

The New Democrats have this problem out there and they are going to have to deal with it on a riding-by-riding basis. The whisper campaign—and I will let the members opposite in on it because it is a secret—is that they make promises they could not keep. Some people are suggesting, like their leader, that people lie when they do that, but I say they would not do it.

Ms Harrington: This afternoon is an opportunity to look at the interim supply bill. It is also an opportunity, as we have heard today and for several days last week, to assess and reassess this government, the past, the future and the present. I would like to look at the direction of this government, and I would like to also comment on some of the previous comments that have been made with regard to this bill, as the opposition has done.

First, with regard to the previous speaker, it is certainly very obvious and evident to everyone in this chamber that some people just live on a stage, which is a wonderful thing to do if you can, to be in high drama at all times. I did not think too many people could top our own Minister of Culture and Communications, the member from Stratford appropriately enough, who had such a sense of drama over the weekend, with the Prince and her shoe, but certainly this member can try to do that. This member does live on a stage, but the people of Ontario do not live on the stage. They live in the streets, in the homes of Ontario. I ask them. They are the ones who are judging at this moment the evaluation of this government. Obviously that is the way it should be.

The member for St Catharines last week put forward the argument that this government is no different than others, and I would like to touch on that. Also the member for Markham last week made the statement and went into many details about how this government has no business sense, and I would like to address that issue as well.

Last Thursday, I arrived home on Thursday evening and my husband had been watching the House in session. I guess he does this for entertainment. He was telling me how he was very impressed with some of the statements from the member for Brampton South, some very cooperative attitudes, some reaching forward and working together. I appreciate this. Some of the things he was saying today were that we should reform the process, that we as a new government should try to look at this House and how it functions, as well as our interaction with the whole province, and try to bring forward some new ideas to make how this Legislature operates more relevant to the people of Ontario.

also would like to put forward my own personal view within the last year—this is a time to evaluate how our government is doing and where it is going—I believe we have made a substantial change in attitude in Ontario, and I would like to address that point.

First, I think it is appropriate that we look at the challenges we face. I think everyone would agree that one of the major challenges we face is bringing the spending under control in several large ministries. I think this has been the case for several years. For instance, in the Ministry of Health over the last decade, the increases each year have been in the order of 8%, 9% and 10%, and this cannot be sustained.

Other ministries, such as the Ministry of Community and Social Services and the Ministry of Education, are also spending ministries, and we have to deliver these services to the people of Ontario in a way that is affordable. Everyone knows that. What we have to do then as a government is take much care in evaluating these huge ministries. We cannot change them overnight because they are so important to the people of this province. They do not turn around on a dime.

Second, what we face is not just a downturn in the business cycle; we face a major restructuring of manufacturing in this province, something that is very difficult because the government is not in control of this situation. There is a worldwide interaction. Yet we have an obligation to the people of this province to plan for the future and to have some vision as to what kind of jobs we will have in the future for our children. We cannot say it is not our business. We have to be involved.

Third, what we face in this province is a national constitutional crisis that we have to be involved with. I would like to tell the members here and also the people watching tonight at 8 o'clock in this very chamber—it will be televised—our select committee on Ontario in Confederation will be meeting with the federal joint parliamentary committee to discuss our vision for the future of Canada. I would mainly invite everyone to come to the chamber—it will be open—and also to watch on television.

The bottom line is that the government is facing not just one but three enormous challenges. An illusion has been put forward—and it is a very plausible one at times—that there is a great difference, a great gap between those people who believe in equity in society and those people who believe in efficiency. I am here to tell members that we have to believe in both.

Most of us on this side, as I think the opposition may have pointed out in the past, may have got involved in politics because of a social justice issue. I must admit that I have been involved with environmental concerns locally and then I have been involved with women's issues. Those are my roots, that is what I believe in, that is why I am here. I do not believe that. But the creation of wealth is crucial and we as a government have to address that. Why? Because social justice issues are impossible to change effectively without a healthy economy. We can look at it as a pyramid. On the top of that pyramid is our taxation base, our jobs situation. What we collect in taxes, we can then reform the system with, but it will not work unless we have a healthy economy.

Before this year, there was enough gravy in the system that things could be changed. Now there is no more gravy. It is going to be a difficult time. What we have to do is have a level of trust in our society. We have to work together because of the huge problems I have just described.

I would like to give members a sense of an event in my riding this weekend. On Saturday evening there was a conference in Niagara Falls. It is a beautiful place to come for a conference. We have lots of facilities. At this conference, we had several officials from the Catholic school boards across Ontario. I had an opportunity to talk with them to find out how they feel about our government. We also had the Minister of Education there speaking to them. There was a level of understanding from officials of the Roman Catholic school boards across Ontario that we face a difficult time. There is considerable trust, I would put forward, and co-operation. They are in fact willing to co-operate with their coterminous public school boards and co-operate with the government. We are all in this together.

The previous speaker was talking about problems of believability. I think it is up to all of us in this House to put forward in our own personal way whether and how this government can be believable. We have to be honest. We have to be straightforward and tell it like it is.

Let's assess where we are at this time. About last August, getting towards the anniversary of the election, many people, including the press, wanted to evaluate this government. This is from the Toronto Star. It says, "But there is evidence that, after a difficult first year, Rae has sorted out his priorities."

Success "depends on co-operation from business. One of the unanswered questions"—and I put this to members and the people of this province—"is who in the business community will step forward and work with a government that fairly and squarely won last year's election and has a mandate to govern to the mid-1990s." We are here, we are extending our hand and we are asking the same question the Toronto Star asked, "Who is willing to come with us for the benefit of this province, for the benefit of the future?"

The Globe and Mail, towards the end of July, made this comment in an editorial, "There need be no conflict between progressive, compassionate government and basic economic literacy." That is what I am telling members here today. We have to put those two things together.

I would like to give just a couple of more quotes to see if I can interest anyone.

One of my friends in the Ontario Home Builders' Association whom I have met with, Al Libfield, president, said a few months ago about our budget, "I think in the long run it will mean more jobs."

The mayor of Windsor said, "There seems to be a real willingness on the part of this province to play ball with manufacturers and also to stimulate research and development and diversification in the economy."

When I was elected at the municipal level, there was a great deal of tension between the provincial and the municipal levels over not co-operating together. I do not want to speak out of turn, but I believe that relationship is improving. It is very key that we work in partnership with the municipalities across this province, so it is our responsibility as government to try to build confidence. But it is a two-way street.

I would like to give a few quotes from the Premier, to show that it is not just myself: "Confidence is so important. Wealth creation is crucial. 'Competitiveness'—a word that we heard quite a bit about this last weekend—"is a word that makes a lot of sense to me. Prosperity, the creation of wealth, attracting investment, encouraging innovation, encouraging...entrepreneurship, change, accepting markets, making them function effectively, rewarding innovation, creating profits—these are things which have to happen in any society. ...unless these things happen, it becomes very difficult for that society to function effectively or fairly. In fact, it becomes impossible."

Those are the words of the Premier. Co-operation is important, and I would put forward that management and labour have for too long been working in two solitudes.

This is also a quote from the Premier, what he would like to see: "Let us see a business leader"—

Mr B. Murdoch: I hope it is not too long.

Ms Harrington: My friend the member for Grey, I am sure, would like to hear this.

Picture this: "When a business leader goes down to the Empire Club and says: 'Enough of this nonsense, attacking trade unions. We have got to get them involved and get them more involved, not less involved, in how we do things.'"

On the other hand, the Premier would also like to see a trade union leader go in front of an audience of workers and say: "Look, folks, we have to be concerned about wealth creation. We have to be concerned about the efficiency and productivity of our firms, because unless that happens, we simply will not be able to sustain the kind of life that we have grown used to and that we need to have in this province." Those are the realities.

In August, I believe it was on my anniversary, I went to speak to several clubs. One was the Rotary Club. Another was the landlords of the Niagara region, so I really had quite an anniversary. At the Rotary Club, after speaking to them for a few minutes, in closing I said: "I know, gentlemen, that I did not see any of you, that I recall, at my nomination meeting a year ago, but be that as it may, we are in this city together. We are in this province together and we must work together." That is the two-way street that I was talking about.

I would like to tell the House and the people of this province a little bit further. Ten days ago, under the auspices of the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology, we had our first meeting of the small business committee of our caucus. I would like to let everyone know what the mandate of this committee of parliamentary assistants is, because I believe, and I think our caucus also believes, that small business and business in Ontario is important, as I have just stated.

The mandate of this committee is to ensure "that the Ontario government has a positive, co-ordinated approach to small business," and I take that seriously. The mandate is also "to help ensure the government's agenda is implemented in a manner sensitive to the success and growth of small business in Ontario." It is also to screen "new legislation and rules to make them as responsive as possible to the realities of how small business operates."

This government is new in Ontario. It has been here a year. But I remember going 10 years ago to a federal NDP convention in Vancouver, BC. At that point, I believe there had been an NDP government there in the previous decade. When stepping off the plane in Vancouver there were lobbyists coming up to the delegates giving us pamphlets from the small business community of British Columbia saying how well it had worked with the New Democratic government in British Columbia back in the 1970s, and they were trying to influence the federal NDP convention at that time.

I would also like to throw this in for the record. I grew up in Saskatchewan, and way back then Tommy Douglas was the Premier. If members would care to look at the record of the economy of Saskatchewan back in those days, one could certainly see that there was an economy that was healthy, that there was an economy that was balanced, and that the government of Tommy Douglas looked out for all the people in that province, and that is what our government has to do as well.

The bottom line here is that we have to build confidence for the economic future of this province, but I would also like to add that at the same time we must not compromise our principles. We came here with concerns about the environment. We came here with concerns about labour reform. We came here with concerns about how energy generated in this province. We will continue to bring that baggage with us because that is what we believe in. Those are our roots.

In closing, I have one further matter. I wish to look at some of the attitude I find coming the odd time from members of the opposition, the attitude of, "Let's go back to the good old days." It seems that somewhere there were good old days we could go back to. I do not know whether it was the 1950s or the 1960s or what sort of Tory era that was, but I would like to say that I went to university in the 1960s. It was a wonderful time; it was a wonderful experience. From my point of view, everything was great in the province. Subdivisions were expanding across the towns of Ontario. We were looking towards nuclear power. There was, we hoped, a new car in every garage that was the aim of life. There was progress at any cost. "Bigger is better."

I think we have to rethink those good old days and see if that was the reality back then. It was for me; I had those privileges, the opportunity. Maybe it was people who were WASPs, white Anglo-Saxon Protestants, but that was not the reality back then for many other people. Let's deal with the reality here.

What about the disenfranchised, whether it was women, disabled people, minorities or native people? Members opposite should just think about what life was like for people back in the good old days. We do not want

would like to end by giving the members a little of what I heard last weekend at the conference we attended at the University of Toronto on the Constitution of Canada. We heard some very powerful thoughts. One of the most powerful speakers there was a person from the Assembly of First Nations, Gordon Peters. He said to us as government and as a group of people representing all of Ontario—there were 130 people there—he pleaded with saying: “We must end the denial of our existence as native people. Let’s think about that. End the denial of our existence.” I think maybe that is what we have to do. In the good old days we denied the existence of very many people in Ontario, not because we wanted to but because that was the way it was.

I would just like to finish off by telling the members a little bit more of what Gordon Peters said: “Since the Indian Act of 1924, our value as a people was rejected. We do not simply live side by side with respect, as many other people in Ontario want to. We want to live, as native people, by natural laws in harmony and we are still extending our hand with love and respect to the people of Ontario, to the people of Canada.” I hope we as a government, with the help of the opposition, can evaluate where we are going and do the very best possible job for the people of Ontario.

Mr Grandmaitre: I have a whole lot of respect for the member for Niagara Falls, but what I have just heard from her is: “This is life. This is what we’re faced with. These are the facts of life.” I accept that we have to deal with the facts of life, but I would like to remind the members that 14 months ago, when the NDP prepared its agenda for the future, this is where it failed. I am not going to chastise the members opposite for saying: “We’ve made a mistake and we’ll take a second look at our budget. We’ll take a second look at our programs.” But no, they are not going to talk about these things in the House.

Ministers are afraid to make statements, so how can we deal with these difficulties they are going through? They are asking us to work with them hand in hand. How can we do this when ministers do not even show up in the House? How can we improve the programs? How can we work with government members? The good old days are over. Members opposite are the new government. They are supposed to have new approaches. We want to know what these new approaches are. We want to work with them, but they do not have a program. All they have is a promise for the next four years that will bring down the financial—

Hon Mr Pouliot: We went home.

Mr Grandmaitre: Thank you. Another minister, the minister responsible for francophone affairs, is leaving. It is not important for him that he should resolve the problems of this province. Maybe when he gets back I will give him another lesson. I just want to remind the member that I want to work with him, but he should bring us things to work with.

Mr Stockwell: I listened to the comments of the member who just spoke, both in the House and out of the House, and I will say I have a tremendous amount of respect for her. The real concern I have with the presentation and with the statements that were made is that they are looking for some kind of olive branch from the opposition so that we may work together to build a better Ontario, etc. I think that olive branch must come from across the floor.

Some of the concerns that have been outlined in this House very pointedly have been made by the leaders of the Liberal and Conservative parties: the concern about ministers not making statements, of not being involved in any sort of decision-making, even the committee process itself, where rational and responsible recommendations that are made to pieces of legislation are dismissed. Then we hear announcements that come back to this House from the Solicitor General with respect to Sunday shopping. His position on Sunday shopping, to the previous speaker, is, “Either you accept this marginal amendment you would like and buy the whole package or it is nothing at all.”

Before the government can go around resolving the ills of the world, I think it has to start looking at itself and—I will harp on this till the day this House rises and goes to the next election—at its Agenda for People. Maybe they should analyse that Agenda for People and admit that it was farsighted—

Mr Christopherson: Hear, hear.

Mr Stockwell: I am sorry. I mean it was farfetched and impossible to fulfil. Until they do that, how can they expect anyone, from constituents, the electorate, to the opposition parties, to give them a shred of credibility when they still have this parcel outstanding without any hope of endorsing or implementing it? It is not a credible position.

Mr Perruzza: I am very pleased to be able to respond to some of the arguments made here this afternoon. It would seem from some of the comments and suggestions made by both Liberal and Conservative Party members that the NDP, in government for one year, has brought down all the ills that have ever been cast on the people of Ontario.

They quickly forget that the Conservative Party has a federal partner which has been in government in very good times, in booming times, and the Liberals also governed this province during boom periods. They heaped large amounts of tax on the people of this province and the people of this country. They committed themselves and overextended themselves to programs which this government now essentially has to honour—big commitments.

I remember a little while ago, in a by-election somewhere in Quebec, the federal Tories going in and dumping all kinds of money into the province to elect Lucien Bouchard. Lucien Bouchard turned on Mulroney and company, but that was big money to elect that member. Those were good times.

The provincial Liberals taxed everybody on everything imaginable. There was the commercial concentration tax. They devised sneaky, backdoor ways of getting into everyone's wallets, and they got into so many different kinds of programs that we now have to honour.

Mr Bradley: I was surprised that the speech by the member for Niagara Falls did not deal with a couple of items that I thought it might. First of all, I thought she might refer to the computerized axial tomography scanner that is very much needed in the Niagara Peninsula. She would know there is a lineup now of some five or six months for people who need the use of a diagnostic tool such as the CAT scanner, and I know she would be supporting this initiative that I have raised many times in this House. Whether at Niagara Falls or Welland or St Catharines, wherever the CAT scanner or CAT scanners are located, I know she would consider that to be important.

A second item that I thought might be mentioned was the $100 that used to go to those students who worked so very hard to achieve the title of Ontario scholar. I was at Lakeport Secondary School last Friday night. What had happened there was that one of the parents, matched by the members of the teaching staff, had provided the funds for the Ontario scholarship, because these people felt so badly that those students who had worked hard—this was a reward for hard work and for excellence, two things we want to see in the province of Ontario—had it pulled out from underneath them without any notice. This was something that was always proposed to the previous government, but we felt we should reward excellence and hard work on the part of those students.

The last thing I want to mention, because the Minister of Culture and Communications is here, is that I am very disappointed that TVO, having heard the disappointment of some members of the Legislature that question period was being moved from 11 o'clock or 11:30 to 12 o'clock—as usual, the chairman of TVO in his own style, or someone over there, has now ensured that question period does not start until 12:30. So those who are genuinely interested but who do not have cable TV and have to rely on Ontario's educational television network, TVO, now have to wait until 12:30. One would hope the minister would intervene to ensure that would not be the case.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Niagara Falls, you have two minutes.

Ms Harrington: Thank you very much for the opportunity to put forward my ideas and thoughts in this House. I want to reiterate the message that I was not trying to give a meaningless olive branch to the opposition, because I know that is in most cases quite useless; it is unreal is what I am saying.

The message I was trying to convey is that for the future of this province there has to be a confidence, a dealing with this government in a way that says that, yes, we are the government, yes, we are making decisions, and the business community should be dealing with us. It is as simple as that.

I also want to reiterate what the member for Brampton South originated, which is that there should be and could be reforms within the processes of this Legislature. It has probably been around for centuries, going back to the British system, and there are many traditions. Traditions are good, but we also have to look at whether they are impeding the progress of this province.

I appreciate the responses from the other members who did not get a chance to go on about cross-border shopping which is something I am very concerned about as an economic consequence in my community and across the whole province. It is something that is tied up with this whole issue of confidence as well. We have to have confidence that the way of life is worth supporting and is better than anybody else's. I do not mind people shopping over there if they have to; I understand that. I am saying we have to realize what is different about Ontario before we go spending our money over there, and realize the consequences.

Mr Cordiano: I am delighted to have this opportunity to reflect, and obviously we in this House are all reflecting on what has taken place over the last year or year and a half with respect to the new regime that now leads the province into the future. I have listened very carefully to the previous speakers talk about what took place in the last year and a half.

I was very interested in some comments that were made about the last election. Members have talked about the spirit of co-operation. I know the Premier, upon being elected, talked about changing the nature of the way the business of this House is conducted and the spirit of co-operation that must rise above all else to make this place run better. I know there are good intentions behind that, and I know most members would want nothing more.

I am sorry to say that we did not get off on a very good foot and that in fact the tone of the last election was quite a nasty one. I can remember not just the leaders of the parties discussing their disagreements vitriolically, with language that perhaps was not heard before for quite some time, but at all-candidates meetings throughout the province, the same thing was repeated over and over again. The tone was quite shocking.

Of course, politics is a tough business and a lot of members sitting opposite—

Mr Perruzza: It had to be shocking.

Mr Cordiano: It was shocking to see some of the people who were involved in the all-candidates debates and some of the things that were said, quite frankly. The level of debate had declined quite a bit. Not to be personal, I would simply say that we got off to a bad start. A lot of things being considered, that was behind us and we had to get that behind us.

But I would say to members opposite, to those who are in the governing party, that it is quite important to understand that there is a level of co-operation that is necessary not just in this House, not just among members, but throughout the entire society, and that we need everyone's co-operation, not just to make this place run, but to make the economy run, which is our priority today, which should be everybody's priority across the way there and of even one on this side of the House as well, because, my friend, what we face is a disaster, a crisis, not just a crisis of confidence but a real crisis.

Interjection.

Mr Cordiano: I heard the member squealing in the background there, but I did not quite make out what he said. I will ignore what he is saying because I want to stay on with the debate and I am sure what he is saying is unimportant and trivial that it makes no difference.

Let me just add that the members opposite may laugh at what they see as efforts by the opposition to reach out and talk about what needs to be done and the efforts we are on a day-to-day basis to actually help this government out with respect to what I think it needs in terms of support, the efforts, the ideas and the new approaches it might take. I know members in our caucus are genuinely concerned about making this government do a better job, not just bringing this government down for the next election, although we all wish that on this side of the House, and that will inevitably happen because of its own actions, not ours. Everyone understands that. Their own actions; that is what is going to happen.

But I would say that there are members in our caucus who are genuinely concerned about the plight of all our citizens and the plight of our children and their future, and the children of the members opposite too, and what is going to happen because they are governing this province. I am concerned about that. That keeps me awake at nights. I am sure there are lots of people who would agree with me.

Interjections.

Mr Cordiano: So to my friends who are yelling and screaming on the other side I would say that they should be concerned about what they do. They should be concerned and get involved and not sit there on the back benches at times quietly, at times fuming.

Interjection.

Mr Cordiano: I have plenty of time. If the member is not here, I will let him know what I think for the next hour, although I have respect for my other colleagues and I know they wish to speak this afternoon, so I will not take the rest of the time that is available to me.

I do want to say to them that our business is serious and that we have serious and fundamental differences of opinion, the kinds of differences of opinion that my friends on the other side would fail to understand because they have no comprehension of what we are talking about—not just luckily there are those on the other side who do understand those differences of opinion and can respect that we come from different, and fundamentally different, points of view. Therefore, I would think there is some hope still for the people of this province that we may come out of this quagmire, although I am not confident of that.

Let me just say that upon being elected, this government did one very important and fundamental thing that has never characterized the way in which it was going to operate. What did they say after the last election? They said: "Lo and behold, we've won. We have a majority. We have a list of promises we made to the public. Now we're going to have to examine those." In all good conscience, people reflect upon what they say and obviously need to realize that over a period of time, because we are facing hard years. A majority government impels or compels a government to examine its position periodically over and over again. No one would say that should not happen.

But what did these people across the way do? Upon being elected, they said: "Who do we have to look after? The very people who were looking to defeat the previous government are the people we need to help at this time, because they helped us win this election."

That skewed the agenda. That threw them right off the road. Since that time they have never recovered, and I am sorry to say that I do not have confidence this government will recover from that veering off the road. There has been a 13.4% increase in expenditures, and my friends a great deal had to do with the fact that millions upon millions of dollars were spent on their friends—lavishly spent on their friends. There are a lot of friends out there that they had in the last election. Unfortunately for us, the previous government failed to realize that. We made quite a few enemies and they became the NDP's friends. They made them their friends.

In that kernel of truth, what I am saying is that they changed the way in which relationships were going to be conducted around here. People could negotiate and bargain with this government, and as long as it had their support, things would be different.

I am sorry; that was not a very good start. The kind of money that was thrown at those interest groups was phenomenal. We saw a tremendous increase in spending, and to this day we have the remnants of that in a deficit that is going to exceed everyone's expectations.

That is a fearful thing, because we spoke—I know the member for Niagara Falls is very well intentioned and one of the good members of this House and does her work diligently. We served on committee together and I have a great deal of respect for her. I know she means well and I know her intentions are good. I know the things she is concerned about are the very things I am concerned about, but I need to tell them that the crisis in confidence exists because of the very strong signals that were sent out there, because of the fact that the deficit was produced—not just a deficit, but the kind of deficit that was produced, the kind of expenditures that were undertaken, billions of dollars that go to the kind of expenditure which says to people, "We have no confidence in the future, but we're going to look after you today because we simply have no confidence in the ability of you, the public, to reach forward and do your best, not just for yourselves but for your families as well, and into the future."

What we need to see is not the kind of deficits that are run up by this government, which will be run on into perpetuity, for the next four years at least, four years of deficit spending that will have exceeded all that came before it in the previous 126 years of Confederation. That is a disaster. By any standard, that is a disaster.

The fact is that for the first time since 1949, we have seen revenues decline in this province. That is an unmitigated disaster. No one is saying on that score that it is their fault, but what I fear is what the Treasurer has indicated in the past little while, Floyd of Nickel Belt, who thinks he is going to be an auctioneer, who says: "You got a nickel? I'll sell you something worth a dollar." That is the message he is sending out these days. He is going to sell the assets of this province, and everybody is laughing out there. They are saying, "We're going to have a fire sale. Let's get warmed up and get our money together, because we can go out there and buy the assets of the province for a nickel on the dollar," or some ludicrous amount like that.

It is absurd, at the worst possible time, to suggest they are going to sell off assets. Everyone knows that this is the worst time to sell assets, yet the Treasurer has indicated his intention to pare down the deficit using the province's assets. It is totally ludicrous.

It says that they simply do not understand what is required. What is worse is that they are straitjacketing themselves, because these deficits will produce an inflexibility on the part of the government to finance what is desperately needed, and that is a restructuring of the difficulties we see in our economy today.

Governments need to react and be flexible. They need to set an agenda that says, "We are not just going to talk the language of co-operation and getting people together." What we need are governments that understand the fundamental relationship between all the partners in our society, to say to people: "We are not just going to say, 'Let's sit down and talk about a partnership.' We're going to actually make you participate in what is happening in this society. We're going to create equality of opportunity because we're going to ask you—not just suggest—we're going to demand that you get involved in what is happening in our society through the real participation of people from all walks of life in our economy, and we're going to do that by developing programs which will foster that kind of co-operation, that kind of participation."

My friends opposite have simply failed to understand that. They have no idea that what is required is the kind of co-operation, the kind of participation which says to small business—and I know the previous speaker talked about the small business committee of parliamentary assistants—

Mr Wiseman: If you had it so right, how come you are over there?

Mr Cordiano: Accidents do happen once in a while.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. The honourable member for Lawrence has the floor. There are a lot of interjections which really are out of order. Please give him a chance and you will have your moment in the sun to reply to the honourable member.

Mr Cordiano: I would simply say to the member that it takes a lot more, once one is on that side of the House, than he imagines. I think that is the realization he is coming to today.

I was talking, before I was so rudely interrupted, about the small business committee of parliamentary assistants which, I would like to remind members across the way, was started under our administration. My friend and colleague the member for Guelph was at the time the chairman of that committee. He initiated that committee and got it going. We did some good things when we started that committee. We created the new ventures program. Are members listening over there? This was a real initiative by small business people who were interested in what was happening with small business. We got the new ventures program off the ground. It has been one of the most important and successful programs; a very small program but very important in getting a lot of small business entrepreneurs launched who otherwise would not have had that opportunity.

The new ventures program was the kind of thing members opposite could learn a lesson from. They could do a great deal more for small business with the money that is available, and it does not take a whole lot. They could increase the participation of people who are interested in starting their own small business. They could reach out to small business in a real way and not just an imagined one in the kind of rhetoric we hear from across the way that says, "We want your co-operation." On the one hand they are doing this with small business and on the other they are slapping them silly. The kind of impression people get from this government is, "We want your co-operation" and the Premier goes out and makes speeches, and on the other hand they talk about additional regulation for small business, which is choking them.

We know we are losing potential capital investment from small and medium-sized firms because there is this lack of confidence or a crisis in confidence. I honestly believe it is going to take a great deal of effort on the part of the government to change that. The confidence is simply not there and people are unwilling to invest. I hope that does not last too much longer because it is disastrous for our province and for our economy. The first thing we need to do is to bring back that confidence. If people have confidence in the future, they are willing to invest in plants and equipment which take them into the next five years. They need to have the confidence that this government is genuinely willing to participate with them and to listen to the concerns of the small business community, and all business, for that matter.

We heard comments earlier about restraint and the fact that this government now is talking restraint when a year ago it was not talking restraint at all. It was talking about how we need to do this and how we need to do that, and we saw the result in the last budget—$10-billion worth of initiative in additional deficit spending. The language of restraint is odd for a government that was basically elected to get things done.

I compare this first year of the government's life with what happened when we were the government for the first time between 1985 and 1986. My friends across the way participated and were supportive of the government of that day. We had an agreement, but we got a number of things done which otherwise would not have been done.

Look back at that time of co-operation. Look back at the kind of efforts that were made during that period of minority government and the kind of co-operative initiatives that were undertaken. There is no comparison with this government, no comparison whatsoever with the amount of legislation that was introduced and the initiatives of that government in minority. The Peterson government between 1985 and 1987 was incredible.

Hon Mr Pouliot: What about after 1987?

Mr Cordiano: Between 1987 and 1990, they still cannot compare to the level of effort and the initiatives we put forward. There is simply no comparison.

Mr Perruzza: You should be ashamed of yourselves.

Mr Cordiano: I was trying to be charitable. I am not going to comment on the lunatic ravings of the members in the back there, in the fourth row, because I do not want to go up to the level of the members on the other side.

Hon Mr Pouliot: He called the members lunatics, sir.

Mr Cordiano: I am being interrupted, Mr Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Transportation hears things I did not hear. The honourable member for Lawrence has the floor. He can continue. You will have the opportunity of questioning him as soon as he has completed his remarks.

Mr Cordiano: Mr Speaker, I thought I heard some loud and rather shrill voices in the background and I was turned off in terms of the kind of decorum we have in this House. The fact is I am not used to hearing those outbursts from members in the fourth row.

I just wanted to say, as I was rudely interrupted once again, that this government has basically found itself in a mess. It failed miserably in the first year to get itself going. It had what amounted to a very action-oriented agenda and it has not done a damned thing—very little. A number of major and important initiatives which were promised about in the last election, interestingly enough, were not carried out by the government. I need not go over those initiatives.

We fought three elections on auto insurance. We fought on the basis that they were going to bring in public auto insurance. We disagreed. We thought it was a foolhardy idea. We put that view forward and they won the last election. What do they do? They are sitting on their hands instead of bringing forward the agenda they won an election on. One of the things was auto insurance and they said they would restore the right of people to sue. I do not agree with that, but there were a lot of people out there who did vote for them on that basis.

Mr Perruzza: You should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr Cordiano: The government should be ashamed of itself. It cannot face itself in the mirror, having told a lot of people that it would be elected—and I remember the degrees. I remember quite well the member for Yorkview and the member for Downsview. People talked to me about their comments in the last election at all-candidates debates. It was clearly printed in their election brochures: "We want auto insurance that's government-run because we want the people of the province to have a say in what is going to happen," and on and on, on every one of those issues that they promised. They made huge promises, went around boasting that they were going to do this and that, and they are sitting on their hands.

Mr Perruzza: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I am not clear on something. Although I wanted to attend, and I am the member for Downsview, I think that the member—

The Acting Speaker: I am sorry, that is not a point of order. You will have two minutes to reply.

Mr Perruzza: Mr Speaker, the member is telling an untruth.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The honourable member for Lawrence has the floor and you do not have a point of order. I am sorry. Please resume your seat. You will have an opportunity later.

Mr Mammoliti: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The member did mention, however, that we did have all-candidates meetings. I do not recall me going to any all-candidates meetings—

The Acting Speaker: That is not a point of order. All-candidates meetings is not a point of order. If you have some comments—

Mr Mammoliti: The point is, Mr Speaker, that the member mentioned—

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. The member for Yorkview will please resume his seat. You will have two minutes to reply. He can correct his own record and you can correct yours.

Mr Cordiano: I am quite shocked that the member opposite is not clear about very many things. When he says he is not clear on one point, it is quite astounding. If he did not attend any all-candidates meetings, I would say he will be attending quite a few in the next election. I can assure him of that.

Mr Mammoliti: I hope you are there.

Mr Cordiano: I will be there any day, any time. Let me just finish off, Mr Speaker. I know my other colleagues want to have some time to speak. I do not want to take the entire afternoon.

I mention the fact that when this government came in, it was very concerned about consumers. I know this party has a great tradition of protecting consumers, not only on auto insurance but on a number of other matters. To talk about increases in hydro rates of upwards of 44% over the next three years is simply outrageous. There is no concern for those people who are on fixed incomes, who will be hard-pressed to maintain their independence in their own homes when they are going to be hit with rate increases of this kind. The members opposite should think again and think hard, because that is not consumer protection. That is consumer ripoff at its finest.

I am very concerned about that. A great number of my constituents are seniors and simply will be put out of their homes because they cannot afford the rate increases that are being talked about on the other side of the House. It will be an absolute disaster.

In conclusion, the government should reverse itself again. They should understand what they are dealing with and the period of time that they are dealing with it, understand that they need to constantly revise the game plan, because they simply did not have a game plan that made any sense. I can understand having to go back to the game plan and say, "What are we going to do this week?" They should get off that treadmill and determine what they need to do to restructure the economy in this province, because that is of fundamental importance. If they have not got that in place, they have little else that is going to follow.

They cannot run a province like this if they do not have a game plan that says, "We are going to make the economy our number one priority." They will leave a legacy that is going to be beyond comprehension. It will be a monumental disaster for our children. Now is the time to do it. They are approaching a midterm over the next year. Now is the time to think hard on those difficult decisions they are going to have to make.

They should make the economy the priority and stop thinking about how to redistribute that shrinking pie. They should understand that this pie has to grow and they will have more people involved in that process. By getting more people involved in that process they will have the co-operation and understanding of all of the people of this province, the business community included. Unless the government understands that fundamental principle, it simply will fail miserably.

The Acting Speaker: I thank the honourable member for Lawrence for his participation. Now the time has come for questions or comments.

Mr Tilson: I congratulate the member for Lawrence on his remarks. I think the highlight of his speech here this afternoon was the lack of confidence by members of the public within Ontario and outside of Ontario in the policies of this government. It has to do with investment. We have had investors come to most of our communities and talk about the lack of confidence they have, whether it be the policies on labour, finance, the whole issue of the deficit financing.

I would have thought this government would have looked at the mistakes of the federal government in the 1970s when spending was rampant and the deficit went up and up and up in the federal government. What is the government going to do when a deficit gets so high? Taxes.

People are not making money. People are going bankrupt. Companies are leaving the province. The sources of revenue are drying up. How are they possibly going to pay off this unbelievable deficit they are creating? We look at the newspapers. The financial pages every day tell us what is happening to business in this province.

Business to this government is evil, and I think the sooner it realizes that business can help the people of this province, can help the government of this province run an effective operation, the better. The government should take a look at its policies, review them and be a little more favourable towards the business people of this province.

Mr Perruzza: I would like to respond very briefly to some of the comments that were made by the member for Lawrence. They impact directly on the way government is seen and honesty in government and the confidence that the people have in their government's ability to govern effectively.

When I hear talk about budgets and when I hear talk about deficits, it is interesting to note that when we came to power, this province, instead of being in a surplus situation of some $28 million or $29 million, as was pronounced by the then Liberal Treasurer of the province, Nixon, in fact we were in a deficit situation of billions of dollars. The exact number is not quite known, but it ran somewhere between $2 billion and $3 billion.

That was a deficit, and the honourable member talked about that. He suggested here today that perhaps he did not believe his own Treasurer when he talked about this province being in a surplus situation. In fact, it was very much in a deficit situation, and those commitments continued until March when the commitments that had been made by the Liberals themselves ran up that debt to somewhere around $8 billion. The figure is not quite known. But honestly, Mr Speaker, when the member looks over here and says the member for Downsview attended an all-candidates debate, I can say that my Liberal friend, the member I ran against, did not want to attend any candidates debate and talk about the finances of this province before a good people of Downsview.

Mr Cousens: We hear members from the Liberal caucus talking about the New Democrats and really criticizing them for their failures. The member for Lawrence fails to remember the fact that many of the programs that are now being implemented and followed through by the New Democrats really originated with the Liberals and the high-spending habits of David Peterson and that large majority they once had, from 1987 on. They destroyed the level of confidence people had in politicians as a whole. They had a chance to do something for the people of Ontario. They had a time when things were very high and successful in the province, yet when they talk now it is as if they pontificate from a high mountain and have not been there themselves.

Well, they were there. When the Liberals took power they had a chance to do something and show leadership. They did not do it. They came along and increased taxes heavily. Their spending increased as well. They did not put any money away for the rainy day we are having now.

Unfortunately we have something worse on that side of the House with the New Democrats. If there is anyone who knows how to spend money they do not have, it is this group. When we have a deficit that is going to explode far beyond $9 billion—it is probably going to be $12 billion or $13 billion—let's understand that Ontario is living beyond its means. We in our society have to sit down and face up to the fact that we have to say no to certain things and control those spending habits. Maybe the ministers could begin to control the spending on parties and some of the things they are doing, but there are far bigger things they need to do than that. Those are symbolic gestures.

We in this House have a chance to show some leadership to the province on how we can bring the economy back. It is not through the high-spending habits this government has.

Mr Mammoliti: The member for Markham started out okay, but at the end of his speech he screwed things up a bit.

Nevertheless, I am here to respond to the remarks of the member for Lawrence. Frankly I have to congratulate for his consistency in babbling on as his government for almost six years. He spoke for a lengthy period, perhaps 20 or 25 minutes, and I really do not know what he said. I do not think he said anything.

He stands there and lectures us, this individual who espouses the ideals and concerns that half my constituents represent: the Italian community and what it stands for, its values. He stands here and lectures us, after he has shamelessly—with all of his government actually, not shamelessly—supported the car insurance companies. He stands there and lectures us on car insurance after he has made the rich richer? He stands there and has the audacity to lecture us? I do not know how he stares himself in the face in the morning; I really do not. In terms of 1962, so many Italian people from his riding come to him and ask, "Why did he do this to me?"

He stands there and says I did not go to all-candidates hearings. I do not know where he heard this information. I asked a few of them but the person who was running against me from his party did not have the audacity to say.

I do not know where these lectures come from, but I do think he has the right to do it. I do not think he has the right to stand here and lecture us, no right whatsoever. He should be ashamed of himself.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much. This is maximum participation we can have in questions or comments. The honourable member for Lawrence has two minutes to reply.

Mr Cordiano: I will not even attempt to respond to trivial, inconsequential and banal comments made by the speaker immediately before I stood up. I simply want to say to him that whether he attended all-candidates debates or not did not matter; quite frankly, that he won had to do with his presence than he thinks.

In any case, I want to say to my friend the member for Scarborough on the comments he made about deficit spending—that we all have lessons to learn on that, my friends. Each and every one of us has a storied past. Our parties all have deficit spending in their histories of one kind or another, so let's not talk about lectures from one side of the street to the other to the other. Let's simply talk about what the case is today.

We started off, my friends, in this province with a fiscal picture not too long ago—

Mr Perruzza: It was in the red.

Mr Cordiano: My friend the member for Downsview might think otherwise, but the fact of the matter is that they hold the reins of power. The Treasury was theirs and they could have simply reduced what was there by making some changes. The Treasurer decided not to. He decided to listen after his friends who supported him in the election. He decided to write off the SkyDome's debt immediately. Therefore, of course they have a deficit on their hands. The government is making tough decisions and we see the net result of those tough decisions. They would like to deficit-spend to the tune of $10 billion this year and over the next few years, unprecedented in the history of this province. I say to my friends that no one in the history of this province has spent as much money in deficits as they are about to over the next four years.

Mr Tilson: It is a pleasure to address the House on the subject of interim supply for the period up until December of this year. My comments, I hope, will be very brief and will deal with three areas, two affecting my riding and one of a more provincial nature, all of which of course affect the spending in this province and the whole operation of the financial position of this province.

As a new member, I discovered section 123 in the rules of this House, which enables each party, once each calendar year, to take a subject and debate it. I suppose the purpose of that is to determine whether situations can be improved, whether an opposition party, for example, can offer constructive criticism to the government to try and persuade it to change the direction in which it is going. There may be other reasons that enable issues to be brought forward in each specific committee. Our party chose the subject of the closing of registry offices and the effect that had on the economy, particularly in the rural areas of this province, and on the efficiency and the cost. The decision had been made with very little consultation by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Our party chose that subject.

Accordingly those proceedings took place in August. Delegations came to the committee and spoke on various subjects. Reeves, mayors, lawyers, surveyors, the president of the Canadian Bar Association and others came to speak on the concern they had with respect to the closing of various registry offices around the province and how it would affect those individual, generally rural communities. We proceeded with that.

Notwithstanding that those hearings were going on, the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations proceeded to close a number of registry offices even while these hearings were going on—even before these hearings were going on. Specifically, Toronto and Arthur—I think there is another one, Bowmanville; I stand to be corrected, but there was a third one—were closed while the hearings were going on, before the committee had an opportunity to express an opinion on the direction in which the ministry was going.

The point I wish to raise is relevant to the whole subject of interim supply because it involves the financial operation of this government, whether it is efficient or not, and the effect on the economy in the various municipalities in which these registry offices occur. Two of the areas, Arthur and Durham, instituted legal proceedings against the government of Ontario, mainly with respect to an injunction, hopefully to obtain a court order forcing the government not to proceed in the direction of closing the Durham and Arthur registry offices. The court proceedings proceeded, I think it was in the first week of October, before weekly court here in Toronto.

I have made these comments at the standing committee on general government and I made them as a point of personal privilege in this House. The solicitor who acted on behalf of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations to object to the application for an injunction, made three comments, which I am going to read again to this House. If these remarks are true—and they appear to be at this point unrefuted. I am pleased the minister is present in the House because I hope she will stand up in her two-minute response to refute the statements that have been made. Now is the opportunity. We asked the government members to have the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations attend before the general government committee and, for some unearthly reason, she did not appear. Well, she is here this afternoon and I will be looking forward to hearing her thoughts.

The solicitor made the following comments to the justice who was hearing the application for the injunction proceedings. Unfortunately there is no transcript of these proceedings. These remarks came from notes that were made by individuals who attended the court proceedings. The first of the remarks made by the solicitor was, "The general government committee is of no significance."

I am not a member of the general government committee, but I am my party's critic for the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I attended part of those proceedings and it made me wonder, "Why am I attending section 123 hearings when a solicitor, an employee of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, says that the general government committee is of no significance?"

It goes beyond section 123. It goes into the other hearings. The general government committee has held public hearings around this province not only on Bill 4 but also on Bill 121. Substantial time has been spent by members of the public to attend these meetings. Substantial time has been spent by members of all sides of this House in attending these public committee hearings. To say that the general government committee is of no significance is an astounding statement for a solicitor acting on behalf of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations to make.

The second comment that was made was—and again I acknowledge that I read these statements in the House when I raised my point of privilege—"The general government committee is really just a way of creating political heat."

This government has spent a considerable amount of time boasting how it consults around this province, and part of the process presumably is through the committee hearings that go around and talk on all subjects, whether it be Sunday shopping, cross-border shopping, housing, financial—any topic. That presumably is part of the committee process and the consultation process. For a solicitor acting on behalf of the ministry to say that the general government committee is really just a way of creating political heat, I do not understand that. I do not understand how a solicitor acting for the ministry could make such a statement in a court of law.

The third remark made by the solicitor, which is the most astounding of all the statements, is, "The general government committee is composed of six members of the NDP and five from the other two parties, and all the NDP members could be absolutely counted on to stick to the government's position of closure."

I understand that obviously there is party policy, but hopefully government members who attend these committees are capable of thinking for themselves. They are not trained seals. I know we make the remark in jest—not in jest; in all seriousness on many occasions—that they are trained seals, that they vote the way their masters, the ministers, tell them to vote.

But let us take the issue of the closing of registry offices. Some of the members on the government side have registry offices in their ridings. I think one example is the member for Cambridge. I believe he has a registry office in his riding in which that subject has been raised. Surely if he was sitting on the committee, he might oppose the policy of closing registry offices if it affects his riding and particularly if it affects the economy of his riding. I do not mean to single out that member. In fact, I could be wrong and it may not even be his specific riding, but there are government members who have ridings where registry offices are being closed which directly affect them.

For a solicitor to simply say that all the members of the NDP could be absolutely counted on to stick to the government's position of closure of the registry offices—why are those members even there? Are they not there to stick up for their local constituents? Are the allegations we have been making really true? Are these members really trained seals?

It goes beyond the issue of the closing of registry offices, whether it goes into housing or whether it goes into any other subject that we talk about. Hopefully, the members will be intelligent enough to vote in that specific area. The world is not going to fall apart if they vote against government policy. So why can they not think for themselves? Either that or the solicitor is wrong and these statements were not true. These statements that have been made by the solicitor have yet to be contradicted by the minister.

I found out new things as a new member of this House when I attended before the committee. It was really quite an experience. We had everything thrown at us; we had closure.

Motions were put forward which were quite logical. Were these statements made? If the statements were made, maybe we should have the solicitor come, maybe we should have the minister come. If the minister is busy—and I realize she has a busy schedule—maybe the parliamentary assistant should come. Maybe there is a whole slew of people who could come, and perhaps someone who was present in the court—unfortunately, as I say, there is no transcript—to refute these statements, because it affects not only the members of the opposition but also members of the government. It affects their personal credibility.

I made a motion that these individuals attend before the committee and clarify it, deal with it and remove this cloud that was hanging over the issue of the committee. Not only were we not allowed to debate on that subject, but it was voted down with very little discussion. In other words, the fact that closure was put on us illustrates and says that the third point is correct, and that they are trained seals.

wise, what have they got to lose by allowing us to see that subject? We might even be able to assist them. Whether or not, we might even be able to put forward constructive criticism that could assist them on this subject. The process of dealing with the public, the process of dealing with constructive criticism.

The government is trying to put forward policies. I understand the minister. She stood up in this House and explained her position on the issue of registry offices is that they are trying to save the taxpayer money. We still have to hear figures from her on the subject of what it is going to cost to close those offices, what it is going to cost to consolidate the offices.

The example I have given is the subject of the Guelph registry office. They moved the Arthur registry office to the Guelph registry office. I understand all the Guelph documents, which have not even arrived in Guelph, are going to be kept in the basement of the Guelph registry office. The documents are going to be brought up from the basement by a dumbwaiter and that will mean more staff, more cost and more inefficiency. It will be more inefficient and more time-consuming to search a title for Arthur in Guelph than when the registry office was in Arthur.

I asked about the issue of cost. Are we going to hear in a few years that perhaps we should expand the Guelph registry office or perhaps should build another registry office? On it goes. Of course, then there is the whole story of the Perth-Almonte situation. The flip-flop on that has been debated exhaustively, and that was done without consultation. That change was done without even the members of the committee, the very committee that was studying the issue of the closing of registry offices, being allowed to see it. We were not even informed.

My office, as critic for this particular portfolio, found it in the afternoon of the morning in which the minister was in Perth telling the Perth staff that that registry office was going to be closed. The ministry did not even have the courtesy to call my office, as the critic for that portfolio, to see it.

The whole process I found very strange indeed. I believe that unless the minister and other members of the government stand up and remove this cloud, it is going to clog the entire committee system. If these statements are not refuted and are said not to be true, if the minister is prepared to stand up today and say, "No, those statements weren't made and there wasn't even anything close to that," then there is something wrong with the system. We will have a great deal of difficulty asking members of the public to come and make submissions and presentations to committees.

We will have a great deal of difficulty, I will and the other members will, because members of our ridings who are going to come and make presentations to the government are going to say: "Why should we? If we are against your policy, if we cannot persuade you to change your mind immediately and put forward an amendment"—we have the solicitor for the government saying that all NDP members could be absolutely counted on to stick to the government's position—"why bother coming to the public hearings?"

There was a motion put forward by the members of the government at the standing committee on general government that essentially boiled down to the fact that the minister investigate herself. That was an astounding position to take, because it was also alleged by the individuals who were present—there was a specific reporter from the Globe and Mail who questioned the solicitor who acted on behalf of the ministry about these statements: Did the solicitor have instructions to make these submissions, because solicitors do not make statements or positions of the government without receiving instructions?

It went beyond what the solicitor said. It went to what the minister's position was. Perhaps not the minister, but someone over there in the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations gave the solicitor instructions. At least that is what the solicitor said. I think that needs to be clarified. The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations needs to stand and say, "Not only did the solicitor not make them, but I didn't even give instructions for those statements to be made," because otherwise the cloud will continue to rain.

Yes, the minister was asked to investigate herself and she wrote the committee members a very brief letter. I think it consisted of five lines. It essentially said that she reviewed what was said with the solicitor and she simply said—I am paraphrasing what was said; I am sure the minister will produce the letter and I hope she does—that she did not believe the statements were offensive. The fact is the statements were made.

Mr Mammoliti: You woke up.

Mr Tilson: I wish the member would wake up, because for us to participate in committee discussions for the rest of his term—I understand there will be no more surprise summer elections; we will hopefully be holding committee hearings—

Interjection.

Mr Tilson: Should the members of the public, the people of Ontario participate in public hearings or should they not?

I rose in this House on two occasions on a question of personal privilege and the Speaker made his rulings on both of them. They were against my request and I will respectfully accept that. His decision was that the standing committee on general government, if it felt there was some wrongdoing, would make its proper investigation, or it would come back and ask the House to proceed with some sort of investigation.

Unfortunately, the third point made by the solicitor still stands, and that is that the six members of the NDP could be absolutely counted on to stick to the government's position of closure of the registry offices and not to do anything else, any other policy.

If the government members want this to end, then they can vote it out, notwithstanding the fact that this particular topic affects members of the public in their constituencies. I do not know how the members, particularly some of the rural members of the government, are going to answer to their constituents on the subject of registry office closings.

I can assure the government that any public committee I go on, I am going to refer to these statements until the minister stands up and corrects them, says that these statements were not true, or if they were true that she is going to do something about it. If she made the statements, then we have really got a problem: a minister of the crown saying that the entire standing committee on general government is a sham. Then why meet? It is just really a way of creating political heat.

This is an issue that certainly has given me great concern, being part of that committee process on the two housing bills that have gone around this province. Is it all futile? Is this government really going to listen? Is it really going to accept suggestions that are made from members of the public and members of the opposition?

There is no question there is a lot of bantering that goes on back and forth between all sides of the House, but is this government going to accept constructive criticism even though that constructive criticism goes against its policy? Is the government prepared to do that?

It is approaching 6 o'clock. I would suggest that perhaps we adjourn the debate.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member does not have to adjourn the debate. He can continue at his leisure.

Mr Tilson: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I can only say that members of my caucus will not let this issue die. It is a subject that gives us all great concern. Although only two members of our party on the average normally attend the general government committee, on this subject there were perhaps four or five members who would attend and they, I believe, expressed their concern individually around the province.

Many of us are affected in different ways: the loss of jobs; the fact that, for example, Durham is going to be coming up shortly. Common sense tells us that when you move a registry office from a community which has had that service for 100 years, take it away completely, take away the jobs—we do not know what it is going to cost; we have had no estimates as to what it is going to cost with respect to the leases that are perhaps going to have to be written off, or the added costs of consolidating it; for example, when Durham is moved to Owen Sound, what jobs will be lost? When the answer is, "Oh well, the people in Durham can drive to Owen Sound to work," they are going to find that rather unsatisfactory.

Aside from the issue of the cost to the general public, submissions were made at public hearings as to what it is going to cost members of the public, the whole cost of searching titles, the whole cost of preparation of surveys. Aside from the possibilities of greater mistakes being made, some of the communities have individual title problems which just affect that particular community and quite often solicitors are most familiar with those specific areas. Yet this government is going to take that out and move it to another area where solicitors will be dealing with a subject that they may not be that familiar with; it may take some time.

There is the whole cost of renovations. We have repeatedly asked what the cost will be to renovate these other registry offices.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member may continue his participation in the debate when inter-supply is next debated.

The House adjourned at 1800.

Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi qu'à celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1, page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF LEGION

Mr Offer: I rise today to honour the 40th anniversary of the Malton Legion, which the Legion has recently celebrated. There was a week of fun, festivity, celebration and events, all culminating in a very special evening dinner and dance. At that time the Fitzpatrick award was presented to Sharon Chamberlain as the member who has done most for the veterans in 1991. Phil McCall was presented the associates award for doing most for the branch. The membership awards were presented to Les Taylor, Ron Potts, John Thompson and Reginald Fecteau for outstanding service to veterans. Past presidents of the branch and the ladies' auxiliary were also recognized, in addition members receiving the certificate of merit.

The Malton Legion has for many years been an important aspect and element of the Malton community. The Legion is not just the place where Remembrance Day events take place. That is important, but it is important to remember those who have made the ultimate sacrifice for the freedom we share today, for the rights we have and for the institutions embraced in a freedom that is the envy of the world.

But a Legion is not just that, and the Malton Legion is not just that. It is a group of people working 365 days a year raising dollars for a myriad of needed services. In our area, our Legion has purchased vans for the transportation of victims of cancer and cancer patients and cares for and helps others who need help. That is what the Legion is and continues to be. Congratulations to president William Hill and everyone for their most caring service to the community.

MINISTRY OF HOUSING MAILING

Mr Arnott: I have a constructive and helpful suggestion for this government of ours. I make an effort to keep my office expenses as low as possible because I know it is taxpayers' money I am spending. I have asked my staff to do the same, to keep our spending of taxpayers' money as low as possible as we work to represent the people of Wellington. I want to call upon the government to do the same, especially the Minister of Housing.

Recently the Ministry of Housing sent a seven-page memo to all Ontario Building Code holders, about 2,300 businesses in all. A copy was sent to Gerald Boyes, who is a plumbing contractor in Orton in my riding, in a heavy insulated envelope which itself costs about 30 cents and $.25 to mail. In my office we send seven-page documents in a standard envelope. They cost about two cents each instead of 30 cents and 63 cents to mail instead of $1.25. If the minister had instructed her officials to be truly conscious of cost, this mailing could have been done with a standard envelope at a cost to taxpayers of less than 50%.

The ministry wasted, by my calculation, $2,064 on this single mailing.

This is not good enough for Gerald Boyes and it is not good enough for me. Surely when the people of Ontario are being asked to tighten their belts, we must expect the government to show leadership first.

SCARBOROUGH HOUSING EDUCATION FOR NEWCOMERS COMMITTEE

Mr Owens: Today I rise to acknowledge the work of the Scarborough Housing Education for Newcomers Committee. During the last six months many agencies have come together to develop a strategy to combat racism in housing. As a coalition of housing, legal and multicultural groups who work directly with newcomers, the committee has identified a lack of resources available to these individuals in their primary languages. One of the greatest concerns of newcomers and many other residents in the city of Scarborough is to find affordable housing that has a community environment contained within.

Tomorrow, Wednesday, October 30, the Scarborough Housing Education for Newcomers Committee will be holding its first educational seminar for the Latin American community. The purpose of this forum is to educate newcomers about their rights and opportunities as residents of Ontario and to provide information about the available housing options.

The work of many people contributes to the success of an event such as this. Through the efforts of Bruce MacDougall and the executive of the Scarborough housing education committee, newcomers to Scarborough will be given the information necessary to become active participants in society and to find dignified and affordable housing within the community.

It is through the dedication and spirit of groups such as this that a vision of a healthy and caring community is promoted while attempting to undermine the racism which unfortunately still exists within this province.

CARLETON UNIVERSITY

Mr McGuinty: An institution of tremendous value to my riding, Carleton University, has recently come under fire. I want to put forward some facts about Carleton to illustrate just how valuable it is, not only to Ottawa-Carleton but also in the contribution it makes to the process of higher learning in Canada.

Carleton University had an extraordinary beginning. Without the usual support of church affiliation or provincial charter, it was formed solely in response to a need from the community and without the endowments and financial backing enjoyed by other Canadian universities.

Over the years Carleton has cultivated some key strengths. It boasts outstanding public administration and political science departments in its faculty of social science. Its school of journalism is recognized as one of the best in Canada. The Gerhard Herzberg centre for particle physics is only a sample of its excellence in scientific research. Carleton has an aerospace engineering program which is the envy of other Canadian universities.

Some of Carleton's distinguished alumni include Conrad Black, Angus Reid, Robin MacNeil of the MacNeil/Lehrer Newshour, Eric Malling, Senator Joyce Fairbairn and our own Minister of Housing, the member for Ottawa Centre.

Carleton's contribution to my community happily extends even beyond the classroom. This fall, Carleton's students raised more than $50,000 for cystic fibrosis research. In addition, Carleton's faculty operates a speakers' bureau through which faculty members volunteer their time to speak to community groups and schools.

Able headed by its president, Dr Robin Farquhar, Carleton has reached an attractive stage in its development. At 50 years of age, Carleton is old enough to have some valued traditions and young enough to be vigorously entrepreneurial.

I am certain that members of this House join me in recognizing the outstanding contribution Carleton University continues to make to higher learning in Canada.

AWARDS FOR TRAINING EXCELLENCE

Mr B. Murdoch: I am proud to advise the House that today three companies in my riding will be receiving awards for training excellence at a Celebration of Success at Georgian College in Barrie.

The awards are made possible through a partnership formed by community colleges, the Ministry of Skills Development and the private sector. This is the third year of recognition being given to employers across the province who make a deep commitment to developing training programs for their staff.

One winner from Grey is RBW Graphics, a full-service commercial printing company in Owen Sound which employs 600 people and handles more than $70 million in annual sales in Canada and the United States.

Another is Electrical Contract Ltd, also of Owen Sound. This company is one of the few leaders in the manufacturing of precious metal electrical contracts in North America and the only one which produces a full range of these products.

In-Focus Studio is a small, family-run picture studio in Durham employing full-time photographers and in-store staff.

All three employers, large and small, have demonstrated that they believe that increased productivity, improved employee morale and reduced customer concern can be achieved through comprehensive training plans which address the particular weaknesses in their own operation.

In spite of the difficult economic times, these businesses have invested in the human resources of our province. I would like to thank them and send them my heartiest congratulations.

VOLUNTEERS

Mr Wood: Volunteers are a fundamental component of every community. This is no different in Cochrane

North, where there are many small communities where people are in need of help from others.

In my home town of Kapuskasing, we have a unique situation, a well-respected person by the name of Hubert Thiffeault. He has spent 60 years of his life as a volunteer firefighter and is still part of the team. Although 78, he continues to spend his free time assisting the community in various helpful ways. I believe there is no other person in Ontario with this record of achievement as an energetic volunteer firefighter.

I want to mention this today so that the people of Ontario will be well aware of his achievement. I cannot imagine what kind of patience must have been endured by his family being awakened in the middle of the night by these emergency calls. Some of these calls involved many life-threatening situations.

My congratulations go out to Hubert Thiffeault and his family for his 60 years of service, and I wish him many more years of active duty at the Kapuskasing firehall. On the same token, I would like to express my admiration to all the people of Ontario who give their time every day to help other people in the communities where we live.

CLOSING OF BEER STORES

Mr Mahoney: As members know, there are many beer stores closing, vacant stores all around the province. The government sits and does nothing while Brewers' Retail adds to these closures by rather unceremoniously announcing the closing of 31 stores. In fact, in Niagara-on-the-Lake there will no longer be a store available for the consumer; they have just shut it down.

In Toronto an interesting sign in one of the windows of a closed Brewers' Retail store reads: "Regretfully, this store will no longer be open for business. The management and staff thank you for your loyal patronage." That is a awfully nice way to express a thank you, by simply closing down that community store.

Perhaps on the highway as we enter into the province of Ontario the government will put up a sign that says "This province is closed for business and the NDP would like to thank you for your patronage in the past."

This is clearly the thin edge of the wedge. This is clearly an example of this government fiddling and doing nothing but simply sit back and allow cross-border shopping to ravage an industry. It is affecting 300 jobs immediately. Ernie Reed, president of Local 326 of the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, says he is worried that all outlets will get the axe once the beer industry is thrown wide open in 1992 and United States companies will have the same access to local markets.

Ernie is upset, the NDP does nothing and the stores continue to close as we slowly and painfully go out of business.

EXOTIC SPECIES

Mr McLean: My statement is for the Minister of Natural Resources. He will no doubt recall that the standing committee on resources development held public hearing during the week of January 28, 1991, to explore the implications of invasions of exotic animal and plant species as the zebra mussel and purple loosestrife, for Ontario's ecosystems and natural resource base.

A number of scientific experts, resource users and interest groups presented their viewpoints and made written submissions to the committee. When presenting this report to the Legislature on May 29, 1991, the member for Welland-Thorold said, "I also have great anticipation that the government will pay attention to the report and that the Minister of Natural Resources will review its recommendations and give effect to these recommendations, they are sound."

I agree with the member for Welland-Thorold. The 30 recommendations contained in the report are sound. They are also critical if we are to develop strategies and policy alternatives aimed at controlling and preventing the spread of zebra mussels and purple loosestrife in this province.

The minister has had the report in his possession since May 29 and he has not announced the implementation of any of the 30 recommendations. I suspect his plan is to sit on it, the same as he has sat on the Algonquin Provincial Park management plan. I hope he does not. I hope he implements them.

The minister has studied this issue to death. The time will come for him to take action and put the threat of the spread of zebra mussels and purple loosestrife to death.

CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

Mr Drainville: I would like to take this opportunity, in the spirit of non-partisanship, to mention last night's meeting here in this chamber between the federal special committee on a renewed Canada, that is, the House of Commons and Senate committee, and the select committee on Ontario in Confederation.

This was a very important meeting because it afforded an opportunity to speak about those issues that are very important to the future of this country. It was a wide-ranging discussion and I think at the end of it we felt we had an opportunity to listen very carefully to people who represented interests from across the country.

Also, I want to give thanks to this House, to you, Mr Speaker, to the Sergeant at Arms, the House leaders, the dining room staff, parliamentary broadcasting, security and the cleaning staff, all of whom had to work overtime to ensure the very important meeting that happened here in this chamber took place.

I am very proud to be a member of this House and proud also to work with a number of people from all sides of the House who are dealing with this very important issue about the future of a dynamic Canada.

CARLETON UNIVERSITY

Mr McGuinty: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Earlier I referred to some of the illustrious and distinguished alumni from Carleton University. On the basis of information I have just received, I would like to add two more names. Those names are your own and that of the Minister of Natural Resources, the member for Algoma, also distinguished graduates of that university.

The Speaker: As far as the Speaker is concerned, I am not sure about the "distinguished," but I certainly appreciate your kind comments in correcting the record.

VISITOR

The Speaker: Members may wish to welcome to the chamber this afternoon a former member of the House from Windsor-Riverside seated in the members' gallery east, Mr Fred Burr.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

WABASEEMOONG FIRST NATION

Hon Mr Wildman: I rise today to make an announcement concerning a new chapter in the history of Ontario's relationship with the Wabaseemoong First Nation of north-western Ontario. This first nation was formerly known as the Islington First Nation of Whitedog.

Before I begin, I would like to welcome to our chamber some distinguished guests from the first nation community at Whitedog who are in the gallery today: Chief Roy McDonald, John Paishk, Councillor Issac Mandamin and Councillor Marvin MacDonald.

A short time ago, Chief Roy McDonald of the first nation and I signed a memorandum of understanding which will set the stage for the negotiation of a co-management agreement for the first nation's traditional land use area. The areas to be negotiated will include natural resources, land use and economic issues important to the future health and self-sufficiency of the Wabaseemoong people.

The memorandum and the agreement we will negotiate are an example of the Ontario government's commitment to the first nations. Ultimately we hope to see first nations with a role in management over land and natural resources and a greater say in their own destiny.

The recent history of the people of this community has been difficult. In the late 1950s, flooding caused by hydro dam construction forced the relocation of the reserve community of One Man Lake and resulted in the serious and widespread destruction of the people's traditional homelands and way of life. Chief McDonald himself had to move as result of the flooding. In the 1970s, mercury pollution poisoned the traditional fishing areas of the Islington people and led to further social and economic hardship and disruption. The combined impact of these events has been immense. The Wabaseemoong people have experienced profound disruptions in their livelihoods and traditional way of life.

The memorandum of understanding builds on the comprehensive agreement signed in 1983 with the first nation. The 1983 agreement was intended to deal with many of the concerns of the Wabaseemoong people, but some of the terms of the agreement were unfilled. We are committed to fulfilling them so that the Wabaseemoong people can move forward.

The first step will be the establishment of a core negotiating committee composed of two representatives from the province, three representatives from the first nation, one member of the community at large and an independent chair who will be appointed by the committee.

The resource advisory committee will lead and co-ordinate the overall negotiations. Specific issues will be addressed by four subcommittees or working groups. They will concentrate on major issues such as traditional land use and natural resources, hydro development, economic development and social services.

The resource advisory committee will have the responsibility to ensure that the first nation and the surrounding community are kept informed of the progress of the negotiations and the issues being discussed. This will include consultation and information-sharing with all the key groups that have an interest in the negotiations.

The memorandum by itself will not bring an abrupt end to the problems facing the families and members of the Wabaseemoong First Nation. It is a promise that gives hope of resolution of those issues. I believe these actions represent an opportunity to achieve meaningful results that will benefit everyone living in the community and in the region of Kenora. This is a great opportunity, and I look forward to working with the first nation on behalf of the people of Ontario and the people of Kenora so we can live and develop together in harmony.

WABASEEMOONG FIRST NATION

Mrs McLeod: On behalf of our caucus, I welcome the fact that this statement has been made in the Legislature so we can all be aware of the initiatives the government is taking in this area. I am well aware there is another statement being made in a similar geographic area of the province, which we are anxious to hear details of at some later point.

I welcome the announcement the minister has made today and welcome the presence of members of the Wabaseemoong First Nation here today. I know this is an achievement for them as well, because it represents very diligent efforts over many years to pursue the concerns of the members of the band. I personally congratulate them for having brought it to this state today and wish them well in the progress in the negotiations to come.

Quite clearly, as one of the ones who was party to the negotiations for the first co-management stewardship agreement in the province with the Teme-Augama Anishnabai band, and a signatory to that agreement, I concur that there is merit in pursuing co-management agreements with our first nations people. I believed at that time this was a precedent that could be carried forward in other areas of the province with other first nations, and I continue to believe this is the case.

I would also like to recognize that the background to this particular set of negotiations has already been done in many ways, because there has been a number of areas in which an effort has been made to involve the members of this first nation band in very directly affecting their economic situation and directing their social services as well.

The minister, in his background material, has given some indication of the achievements that have already been made. There have been very many practical initiatives that have been successfully undertaken by the members of this band and those kinds of practical initiatives really must be continued, because that is the route to independence for the first nations people.

I would also recognize and respect the commitment this minister has made to making progress on long-standing issues with the first nations people. Because we share his commitment and want to encourage that progress to result in real achievements, I would like to raise three specific concerns.

The first concern I have with the press release that has been made today is that there is not really the recognition that these are very sensitive negotiations for the first nations people and also for other, non-native people living in the area. I look forward to some indication of what the composition of the working groups will be and exactly how that involvement of others who live in the area and share a concern for the land resource and its use will take place.

The second concern I would raise is to recognize that the minister has now undertaken a number of negotiations with first nations people in different areas of the province. He is quite well aware that these are very complex negotiations and require a great deal of time and human resources to be able to carry the negotiations to completion.

I trust the minister recognizes the sheer complexity of the negotiations he is undertaking and is prepared to put in place the resources that are needed to carry the negotiations through. I think it would be extremely unfortunate if this government were to raise the expectations of the first nations people that there will be negotiations under way only to find that the resources are not there to lead to anything other than frustration and the inability to achieve the goals.

The third concern I would raise is the question of whether or not there is a clear pattern for the best approach to carrying out negotiations with the first nations. Let's recognize that in the Treaty 9 area, which is immediately adjacent to the Treaty 3 area with which this negotiation will be carried out, negotiations are being carried out with the treaty council. I know that in turn is creating some questions that the first nations people are working through in terms of the relationship of the band councils with the treaty council as these negotiations proceed.

It would seem to me that in this case the decision has been made to negotiate not with the treaty council but with the individual band. It may be possible that in some cases this is the best way to carry out the negotiations. In other cases it is better to go ahead with the treaty council. But it would raise the question of whether there is a pattern and whether this issue has been given very careful thought because, again, I think we have to respect the sensitivity of the political and working relationships of the first nations themselves.

Having raised those three specific concerns, I would again like to congratulate both the first nations band and the government for taking their discussions to this next stage, and sincerely wish them good luck and good progress in the negotiations that are to come.

since I have some 20 seconds left of the time our us has, I would just like to recognize a somewhat ed issue, the fact that this minister has been meeting in apacity as Minister of Natural Resources with repre- tives of the forest industry. I have expressed some ern that it has taken so long to meet directly with sentatives of a sector which has been so severely sed. We are anxious to hear what plans may come those meetings to deal with the problems of this par- ar sector, a concern for the members of this first nation p as well as for all northern communities.

Mr Eves: I am pleased to respond on behalf of our y to the statement made by the Minister of Natural ources and minister responsible for native affairs in the se this afternoon.

We too acknowledge the hardships that have been d by this particular band. Going back over recent his- as the minister's statement outlines, we think of the s, 1970s, 1980s, and now of course we are into the s. They have faced many hardships, including loss of supply and loss of their economic base. I think it is important that their concerns, issues and problems are essed in this appropriate manner.

might also say that I understand it was the band's ession to include a representative of the community the public at large on this resource advisory commit- Perhaps there is some education in here for the minis- himself, because it seems to me that the band has eloped a better communication process than the minis- as been showing. That is sort of a backhanded compli- t, I guess. I think it is important that the band gnizes the fact that indeed the community at large has e considered as part of the advisory group if we are g to effectively and meaningfully address the concerns is particular band that need to be addressed.

I also would like to thank the minister for the unique roach he has taken with respect to the memorandum of nderstanding and the resource advisory committee and subcommittees he has set up under the auspices of his istry. I think that needs to be said.

Having dealt with the minister responsible for native airs, I was quite startled that the Minister of Northern elopment did not rise today in the Legislature to an- nounce her new strategic consultation and action now h program, which I understand she announced by way press conference yesterday. As usual, despite the pro- ations and promises of the government House leader these things would not be done by way of press re- e and press conference any more and would be done ministerial statement in the House, I note once again has not been done with a very important announce- at with respect to northern Ontario.

SALARY OF ONTARIO HYDRO CHAIRMAN

Mr Harris: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I ight I would take this particular time to raise a point of ilege concerning a matter that was raised in ministerial ements when I was away.

The Minister of Energy is not here today and I do not like raising this when he is not here, but since he im- pugned statements attributed to me when I was not here, I do not feel so difficult about it at all. This is my first opportunity to bring it forward for the record.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. This is a response. I am sorry, but the response time is for responses to statements made today.

Mr Harris: That is why I said this is a point of privilege. I thought this was a good time to rise on a point of privilege rather than during question period or taking other time.

The Speaker: As a point of privilege, all right.

Mr Harris: On Thursday, the Minister of Energy said this: "Further, I want to say to the leader of the third party"—he also referred to the member for Renfrew North, but he can speak for himself—"that the allegations they made in this House about Mr Eliesen's character...were completely incorrect."

I was not here when the Minister of Energy made this statement, but I have checked very carefully my record in the House on Hansard and any reports outside the House and not once have I found any reference to my talking, as leader of the third party, about Mr Eliesen's character.

I talked about what others said of his ability to perform the job. I am appalled that the government thinks it is good policy to double his salary to $260,000 when most experts know that he is not qualified to do the job, but not once have I ever talked about Mr Eliesen's character. I know nothing of his character.

I assume the best about one's character and I resent the minister asking me to retract something that apparently he says I said somewhere. I challenge him to come forward with any statement where I have made reference to Mr Eliesen's character. I plead guilty to referring to opinions of experts that he is unqualified to have his salary doubled to $260,000, but not to character references.

The Speaker: To the leader of the third party, I appreciate the point of privilege which he raised. Unfortunately, he was not present in the chamber at the time the minister made the remarks and the minister is not present at the time of his first available opportunity to respond. It places the Speaker in a very awkward position since it appears to be a difference of opinion with respect to a situation which arose in the House. However I will certainly be pleased to take a look at the comments and to report to the leader of the third party later, and indeed perhaps the minister, upon his first opportunity, will be able to respond to him.

Mr Elston: Perhaps the Speaker could ask the minis- ter and the leader of the third party to come to his office and he can straighten this out between them, if that would be a good suggestion.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HOSPITAL FINANCING

Mr Elston: I have a question for the Minister of Health. Last week the Toronto Hospital announced the layoff of some 250 people, including the equivalent of 140 full-time nurse layoffs. Since October 1, some 217 bed closures have been announced. Layoffs are the result of "ministry underfunding for the ONA settlement and the pay equity announcement." This is attributed to Dr Hudson from the Toronto Hospital.

When the jobs are cut, patients have to pay the price. Why are nurses being laid off to pay for their settlement, and why is the minister putting mainly these women out of work during this time of recession in this province?

Hon Ms Lankin: I think the issue of hospital care across this province is an important one for us all to address. I have been spending a lot of time meeting with district health councils and hospitals across the province. In fact, there are many communities that have taken on the task of co-operative planning with respect to the appropriate level of services.

One of the things we have to be very careful of is not to pose the issue in such a way as to say that good health care equates to the number of hospital beds in a community. The kind of illness treatment system we have is one of the important factors that we have to look at. But many blue ribbon committees, Premier's health councils, district health councils and local community health clinics have said that where we need to invest our money is in the other determinants of health, those things that lie outside the traditional illness treatment system.

One of things we have to look at is how we are spending our money currently and whether it is appropriate. There are certainly estimations that there are too many acute care beds in the system. Here in Metropolitan Toronto that case has been raised. I have asked that those people who have that opinion sit down with the hospital and start to work this through, and I think we have to do this in a rational, managed way.

The Speaker: Could the minister conclude her response, please?

Hon Ms Lankin: Certainly, Mr Speaker.

I do not think that responding in a sense of panic before we have all the plans finalized is helpful, although I do think we have to work together to make sure the plan is a rational one.

Mr Elston: This is an interesting response from a representative of a party that has always prided itself on universality in providing health care to the needy patients in the province. It surprises me that this person would be in the minister's chair at a time when health care comes under a very adverse set of rationing criteria. She has been chopping hospital services at a time when people are seeing the need for those services more than ever and, at the same time, she has failed to bring in any statement about the types of standards which are required to provide the care for the people in this province. Can the minister tell us what the standards are and what alternative ways she has put in place to accommodate the decrease in service that is represented by the cutback in beds?

Hon Ms Lankin: The problem I have with the member opposite is that his question is unrelated to the long preamble. I am going to take a moment to address the preamble first because I think, quite frankly, we need to be careful in terms of what is being said across the province.

We have not cut back on hospital funding; 9.5% has been transferred this year. It is over $600 million.

With respect to services in hospitals, we are asking local district health councils and hospitals across regional jurisdictions to sit down and to plan for the necessary level of services. I am being told by the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto and by the district health council that there are too many acute care beds in the system. I do not think it should all come out of one hospital. I think we need to look at a co-operative planning process to manage that out.

The shift to community is equally important. The member opposite knows that we are committed to that kind of reform.

Mr Speaker, I see that you want me to wrap up the answer, but as the Leader of the Opposition raises a number of issues, they deserve a response. With respect to the issue of rationing and medicare, I think what we are doing is trying to save medicare in this province and in the country. There is the issue of where we head from here in terms of planning and community support, and I was pleased to speak more on that in the supplemental question.

Mr Elston: That is really outrageous. The minister expects the people of the province to believe that there are no cutbacks happening in hospitals across this province when we have seen women and men in front of the Legislature just yesterday indicating that they had lost their jobs. They are not providing service in this province, and the minister stands there and says there is no loss of service. The minister is becoming another one of those storytellers, a little like the member for Nickel Belt. Who in the world is going to believe her?

Why does she not really admit to us that the only thing she is currently doing in health care is slashing services to protect the ministry's budget and the Treasurer's budget? Otherwise, we would have had a rational plan before the cuts all occurred, we would have had a set of criteria and we would have seen the minister's long-term care plan. Why does she not admit it? The minister is slashing first and praying that something negative does not happen.

Hon Ms Lankin: I disagree with absolutely everything the member just said. I have a few more comments that I will make directly to him, but given that I know he has three more questions coming up, maybe I will save them until towards the end.

In terms of who says what in this Legislature and the record on these issues, I think it is important that we review this.

On the question of jobs, at the hospital specifically mentioned, at this point in time the layoffs are being predicted. I have directed that the hospital sit down with the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto and with the district health council and look at the effective delivery of services. I have directed that the hospital meet with the employees. The employees, for example, have made some serious allegations. I have asked the chief executive officer of that hospital to respond directly to those allegations. We are not just slashing. We are not just not putting a program in place.

Additionally, we are meeting with a joint management committee, with the Ontario Hospital Association and with a broader hospital funding review program. We have involved all the key partners in that discussion. The OHA and others know that we are trying to do this in a rational manner. May I say that we have had a number of years in which the rhetoric of reform has been strong. We are trying to make it happen in tough fiscal times.

Mr Elston: I cannot believe that. They give the nurses a raise and then cut them loose, put them on the unemployment line. I give up.

I have another question of this minister. Yesterday, the minister told the press that she was serious about shifting health care funding from large institutions to community clinics, day surgery and home care. Would the minister explain why, in this internal document, home care is listed as one of the lines that represents program cuts to meet the needs of the $60-million saving that the Treasurer told the minister to find?

Hon Ms Lankin: Mr Speaker, when I hear this member say he gives up, let me tell you, I give up. For this member to talk about hospital beds when he went across the province and promised thousands of hospital beds at a time when there were already too many in the system, and then to turn to his follower as the minister from his party to go back and try to make some sense of those promises, I am going to take that from this particular member.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. I am not going to give up trying to keep order in this place. It would be very helpful if all members could just remain a bit calm so that the Speaker can hear the response.

Hon Ms Lankin: With respect to the shift of moneys towards community-based and home care that the member mentions, as he knows we have made announcements with respect to the amount of moneys that will be forthcoming for long-term care redirection. On the issue he raises with respect to this year, we are clearly experiencing pressures in this area above what was budgeted for. We are trying to find out if there is a way to manage within the budget area. There may not be. I think the home services are a very important area to continue to support.

Mr Elston: This is very interesting. This document refers to "Measures to Manage In-Year Expenditure Pressures." It lists all the things she is going to do, including an area where the minister, in answer to my first question, said she was going to put her emphasis to deal with the backlog in hospital services. She said it was going to be in community health and home care, and here at the bottom it says, "Discussions will be undertaken with providers to moderate growth pressures within the home care program." What that really means is that we are into rationing home care and community health.

In addition to that, these people are sacrificing nursing jobs. People are being laid off. They are cutting hospital services. They are freezing pharmacy fees. Then they go all the way down and answer that they are going to put emphasis on community care. Lo and behold, after saying that current benefits under the assistive devices program will not be expanded in 1991-92 to meet the disabled community, they say, "By the way, we're going to make sure we ration any increase in home care services."

The minister cannot have it both ways. If she is chopping hospital services and she is not going to provide the care in the home care area, how is she going to look after the people who need help?

Hon Ms Lankin: The member's use of words is amazing and inflammatory. The document does not say "ration home care." I have not seen the actual paper he is looking at, but if I am familiar with the document, what it talks about is a whole list of areas within the ministry and our budget that are currently under pressure. We have been instructed and are working with treasury board to try to manage our budget. In some areas we will have trouble doing that. We are undertaking program reviews in other areas to try to loosen money to cover areas where there are pressures. It is a normal process that every government is going to have to do in every year, particularly in tight fiscal times. For the member across to turn that into saying it is rationing as opposed to saying it is effective management of the system is quite bizarre.

Mr Elston: Let's just read a little bit from this document then. It says, "Measures to Manage In-Year Expenditure Pressures":

"Reimbursements for lab tests will be reduced to moderate cost pressure. Negotiations with other practitioners will mean that changes in their fee structures will be constrained," unlike with doctors. "Electrolysis will be discontinued," which is something they have already announced. "Alternate payment agreements will be introduced," to tighten their fist on those services.

"Fees for oxygen services for people who are disabled will be restructured. The existing list of drugs under the plan will not be expanded in 1991 and current drug prices will be maintained in 1991-92." There is a freeze on drugs that are being made available for people who need them. This means to me the minister is going to be rationing their access to those. "Over-the-counter drugs are currently under review with a target date for completion of the study by December," more coming in terms of taking those off the list.

"The existing dispensing fee of Ontario drug benefit plan will be frozen now. The current benefits under assistive devices program will not expand," and the disabled will not get any assistance from her ministry and from the minister responsible for disability issues. "Discussions will be undertaken to moderate growth pressures," which in the parlance inside her ministry really means, "We ain't going to meet the demands by the people out in the community."

The Speaker: And your question.

Mr Elston: The question is, how can the minister expect us to believe she is not in full-sail, rationing health care in this province under the guise of a story begun and told full well by the man from Nickel Belt, she being a willing accomplice in this.

Hon Ms Lankin: My experience in this place gets more and more absurd as I listen to this over there. Quite frankly, the things this member raises are steps I have already announced. I have talked to the press about them. Quite frankly, it is the first time this system is being managed and it is about time. Let's talk about them. Let's talk about lab fees. We have seen in the private laboratory sector a growth in utilization at the same time as there has been a growth in automation in the use of technology. There are lower unit costs. That has never been addressed. We have moved on that and we are doing a review with them.

With respect to pharmacy, I have heard members all across the other side of the floor talk to us about the need to bring down the cost of dispensing fees for the public out there. We have done something about it, and we are going to save money for the Ontario drug benefit plan at the same time.

With respect to alternative payments, he says we are going to squeeze the system tighter. I saw the member sitting beside him, the former minister, nod her head and agree. It is absolutely the right way to go, to move to expand alternative payment plans for physicians.

With respect to oxygen restructuring—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. If members would stop trying to outshout one another, then I could hear the response.

1420

Hon Ms Lankin: Let me address the last couple of remarks that were raised by the member opposite. With respect to restructuring the payment of benefit of oxygen, we are ensuring that people are getting access to that. What we have done is negotiate a better rate with the providers of the system. What was happening under the management of the system under the previous government was one rate under the ODB, a high rate, and another rate under the Community and Social Services. We have rationalized and brought it together as an effective service for people. It means we are getting a better dollar value for what we are providing.

With respect to the assistive devices program, currently we have a program review going on. The Treasurer has already announced that and it is in full consultation with people in the community. We are not taking back services. We are looking at ways of improving the equity and equitable access to services in this area.

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Lankin: In conclusion, we are engaged in an exercise to preserve medicare, to have cost-effective delivery of high-quality services. I think we are going in exactly the right way and I totally disagree with the comments raised by the member opposite.

LABOUR LEGISLATION

Mr Harris: I must say I am having difficulty keeping up with the new terminology. There are no more unemployed; they are unwaged now. There are no more bed closures, no more rationing; it is managing beds of the system. As we understand the new language of the socialists, maybe we will be able to understand what it is.

However, my question is to the Minister of Labour. An Environics poll released this morning by the Council of Ontario Construction Associations confirms what we have been telling him for some months, that his labour proposals will hurt business, erode competitiveness and cost jobs. In this survey, for union members surveyed, over two-thirds of one union members believe there would be less business investment in Ontario if unions had a larger say in running the industry. This is what the union membership says.

With nearly half a million jobs and millions of dollars of investment at stake, what possible reason can the minister give for proceeding with even one of his planned labour union proposals.

Hon Mr Mackenzie: My ministry has received a large number of submissions over the past several months and this input into the process is appreciated. I want to emphasize that we want a real discussion based on issues we are considering. I also want to emphasize that we want constructive dialogue, not scare tactics. We will issue our discussion paper in the next few weeks and then we will proceed with the consultation process.

Mr Harris: Let me deal with a couple of specific proposals that concern a lot of people. First, 89% of the union members surveyed agree that the choice of union or non-union representation in the workplace should be decided by secret ballot. The second one I want to mention is that 86% of union members surveyed agree that picketing should be confined to the workplace where the strike is taking progress.

In view of the fact that 89% of union members in one case and 86% in another believe there should be a secret ballot and believe picketing should be confined to the workplace, what is it that the minister and Bob White and the Premier think they know better than their own union members about how union-management strike action relations should take place? Why are they proceeding in a direction opposite to what about 90% of union members in this province want?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: As I thought I had told the honourable member, we want constructive dialogue, not fear-mongering. We will issue our discussion paper early in November and we are planning an extensive consultation process.

Mr Harris: I believe this is constructive input, because this is from union members by secret ballot. This is not à la Bob White saying what they want; this is direct asking them in a survey what they want.

This government reminds me of the mother who, when her son marched along in a parade, said, "Oh look, everyone's out of step except my Bobby." That is what the mother said as the parade went by. It is time for the three Bobby brothers to wake up to the reality that they are out of step with the rest of Ontario, including the union members, including members of their own party. Even ND porters and union members believe the three-Bob on proposals will damage jobs, will damage investment will damage the economy.

Given that even his own supporters believe he is going the wrong direction, will the minister change his disastrous course now and state categorically today that he is withdrawing all his labour union proposals and let unions and businesses get on with the challenges that are real and require them to sit down and work co-operatively together?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: As I have already told the members we need constructive dialogue, not scare tactics. We will soon be proceeding with a consultation process and will listen to all the groups that come before us during the consultation process.

LANDFILL SITES

Mr Cousens: I would like to give something to the minister of garbage, her own little corsage to wear—it has buttons and hypodermics and packaging, a rubber nipple and a few other things—just because I am thinking of her so much and so are the people of Peel and other areas around the province. Maybe when she wears it, she will be thinking more of what her job should be.

On September 24, I asked the minister if the Premier would meet with the region of Peel regarding the region's position to the expansion of the Britannia landfill site. By her own admission, the minister agreed there is a mounting short-term garbage crisis in the greater Toronto area and that Britannia is not expanded and no alternative plans are developed there will be a serious problem in Peel.

I ask the minister once more, when will she and her government make an attempt to co-operatively resolve the Britannia landfill issue?

Hon Mrs Grier: Let me start by thanking the member for the corsage and by saying that I appreciate the sacrifice of whichever member of his caucus gave up his soother.

With respect to the Britannia landfill site, let me assure the member that it is my wish to work in co-operation with the region of Peel as much as possible. The order I issued to the region of Peel asked for community involvement. We have had a series of meetings with them to discuss the studies that are required, and I very much hope that when those studies are completed we can work co-operatively with Peel to implement the continued use of the site.

Mr Cousens: We picked the soother out of the minister's garbage pail and returned it to her. I hope she will wear it. She should have some fun around here, because she is causing so much damage.

The minister is concerned, as she stated yesterday, with public participation in the search for new landfill sites by the Interim Waste Authority, so I find it alarming that she would include section 20 in her newly introduced Waste Management Act. This provision allows cabinet to determine which act has precedence when a conflict occurs with other legislation, such as the Planning Act or the Municipal Act. In other words, if municipalities seek legislative protection against this government's warped waste management agenda, cabinet will simply overrule.

Can the minister assure this House that any decisions on new landfill recognize the legislative right of municipalities to at least have some input into the process?

Hon Mrs Grier: I am more than happy to assure the member and all members of this House that the search for the long-term sites being conducted by the Interim Waste Authority will be a process that is more consultative, more certain and more clear than the waste management planning exercise that has been undertaken by any other authority in the past. That was the commitment I made when I indicated last November the direction in which we were going with respect to the GTA waste, and I am delighted that the criteria for site selection and the legislation that I introduced last week both indicate very clearly the process to be followed and the requirements under which the search will be conducted.

Mr Cousens: They are very empty words when in fact the minister has not even met with the representative from Keele, when she has gone ahead and had the expansion of Keele Valley and Britannia without a full environmental assessment, and when she is doing things totally contrary to promises she made earlier. Now the minister is making other promises. I am not going to ask her this question, because I know the answer. Who is going to believe what she is saying today? I just cannot accept it.

In the minister's response yesterday to the leader of our party—

An hon member: Who's that?

Mr Cousens: The honourable member for Nipissing is that, and a very outstanding job he is doing. He asked a question yesterday of the Minister of the Environment, and she informed the House that in looking for new sites there will be a full environmental assessment. That is the first time she has said it since before the election, but now she is saying it. Yet in Bill 143 there are three paragraphs which deal with what an environmental assessment is not required for. It is not required to contain certain things, so this certainly does not appear to be a full matter as far as what the minister is going to do is concerned. I do not believe she is going to have that, especially since she has sections in the bill that are going to preclude it.

Will the minister please clarify her position? Will there or will there not be a full environmental assessment on new waste disposal sites?

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order, the member for Oriole.

Hon Mrs Grier: Let me start by pointing out that in his first question the member talked about the immediate crisis and the short-term plans for Britannia and Keele Valley. In his second question he talked about the long-term-site search and the strategy of this government. In his third question he again talked about the long term, but he persists in confusing the immediate and emergency steps with the long-term search.

Let me assure the member that the legislation I introduced last week calls for an environmental assessment—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Will the minister take her seat. It would certainly make it much easier for the Speaker, and I suspect for other members, if we could try one question at a time—

Mr Mahoney: How about one answer at a time?

The Speaker: —without interruption, to which we would then hear one response at a time. The member for Mississauga West, just relax, and with your co-operation we will get to the response.

Hon Mrs Grier: This member and many others within the House have brought to my attention, as have I to the attention of my ministry, the frustration felt by many proponents of landfill sites and of waste management master plans because of the uncertainties of the process. For that reason, the Interim Waste Authority, which is seeking the long-term sites—I am not and neither is my ministry; that is the agency doing the long-term planning—is, through the legislation, not required to consider those non-environmental alternatives such as incineration and transport to northern Ontario which this government, as part of its waste management planning strategy, has eliminated.

Instead of spending many months and millions of dollars in doing consultant studies for an option the government has already ruled out, the environmental assessment will take into account the alternatives of the 3Rs and of landfill and will search for environmentally sound landfill sites to take the greater Toronto area into the next century.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. One moment.

Mr Mahoney: I assume this is question period. There should be some answers.

The Speaker: Question period will function better when only one voice at a time can be heard. When the member for Mississauga West has come to order, then his colleague the member for Lawrence can place a question.

PORNOGRAPHY

Mr Cordiano: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. The minister would be aware of Project P. Project P is a joint OPP-Metropolitan Toronto Police anti-pornography agency which has seized thousands of videotapes and charged individual video store owners with possessing and selling obscene material. However, all of the tapes in question have already been reviewed and cleared by the Ontario Film Review Board.

There is obviously a conflict between the film review board, which is approving films for viewing according to its guidelines, and the police, who seem to disregard the board's approval of these videos. To say that confusion exists is an understatement.

It is the minister's responsibility, as part of her mandate, to protect citizens in this province by clearly providing an answer for what is pornographic and what is not. Is it the minister's intention to take up that responsibility now?

Hon Ms Churley: In fact, it is not my responsibility to define what obscenity is or what pornography is. As explained before, it is the role of the federal courts to define what obscenity is.

The role of the film review board is very clear: It is to classify films according to the Theatres Act, which is what it does. It follows its guidelines. It communicates actively with communities and tries to keep the standards of communities. It is not the board's role to define obscenity.

It does, however, pay attention to court decisions. As I have said before, that area of law right now is in some confusion. There have been different court decisions that have come down. We are waiting as well for those court decisions to help resolve this situation.

Mr Cordiano: Six months ago this minister stood in this House and said she was going to look into this matter and review it very quickly. Of course, nothing happened in that time and six months have gone by. In the meantime, charges continue to be laid and private citizens keep getting caught in the middle between the film review board and the police.

Does the minister attend cabinet meetings? Does she talk to her colleague the Solicitor General, who is sitting in the House today? Has she reviewed this matter with him? If she has not, I suggest the minister sit down with her colleague the Solicitor General, discuss the matter and make it clearer as to what standards will be set so that the public out there knows what will be obscene and people will be better informed as to when charges might be laid by the police. There is total, massive confusion out there, and the minister's responsibility is to make sure that confusion stops.

Hon Ms Churley: Perhaps I should try to explain again the role of myself and the film review board, because it does not seem to be clear. The member is taking the wrong approach and is wrong in his statements about what my role in this is. I do not have any say in what actions the police take, and I have no say in defining what obscenity is. I have taken action. I have met with the film review board. We have discussed categories. We have discussed court decisions. We have discussed the film review board guidelines in terms of—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Ms Churley: This is a very important point that I would think at least the member who asked the question would like to hear. The film review board does have very clear guidelines, as does this government, around the kind of obviously objectionable material, which is violence against women and children and that sort of thing. It is never classified by the film review board and will continue not to be classified by the film review board. If those kinds of films are getting out there, it is being done illegally.

ANTI-RECESSION PROGRAM

Mr Harris: My question is of the Treasurer. Last April he told us that the reason for the $10-billion deficit was to create 70,000 jobs in the province. At that time I asked him where these jobs could be found. Were they in the manufacturing sector? Were they in the construction sector? Were they in the service sector? Could he break for us so we could measure after a period of time whether his budget was having any success?

It has now been six months to the day since he brought in that disastrous budget. Many in this province have identified hundreds of thousands of jobs that the overall rate and atmosphere that his budget created have cost the opportunity and the uncertainty in the future and jobs they have cost us. Today, six months later, could the Treasurer give me an answer to the question that he did not answer at the time he brought down the budget? Could he tell us where these 70,000 jobs are? Are they in the construction sector or the service sector or the manufacturing sector? In fact, could he perhaps identify for me one specific job of the 70,000 jobs? Could he tell me what it is and where he is working?

Hon Mr Laughren: I have learned in this business not to take too much credit for things that we accomplish, but the people of this province will judge. I do not think I did it alone. I think the leader of the third party must be, by his policies, created jobs for fund-raisers in the third party in order to pay off his substantial debt, and I commend him for that. That is obviously a necessary and a good thing to do.

Mr Elston: Oh, nasty.

Hon Mr Laughren: It is not nasty; it is just replying in kind. I think what we said in the budget was that the measures we took would create and/or protect about 20,000 jobs in this province, and we are proud of that record. Also, when we introduced what we called our anti-recession package, that very directly created 14,000 jobs, with the local government component, we think it will have created almost 20,000 jobs in capital-intensive works across the province.

I ask the member of the third party to check with municipalities in his own area as to the degree to which our anti-recession package did indeed create jobs, not just in North Bay, of course—that too—but all across the province. We are the one government in this country that did not roll over and play dead when the recession hit us as hard as it did. We are proud of the action we took to protect working people.

Mr Harris: The Treasurer could not, at the time he brought down the budget, really identify these 70,000 jobs. We know we have lost several hundred thousand jobs as a result of the budget and other uncertainties that his policies have created in the marketplace.

The member for Scarborough-Agincourt asked, I believe in estimates or in committee, for a breakdown by sector of the new jobs created in the budget. An October memo from the ministry says: "Treasury does not provide a forecast for employment growth by sector." I do not know why it does not. I guess they do not want to measure whether their budget was successful or not.

I asked the Treasurer if he could identify one person, one job. I hoped he could identify the 70,000, but he has not identified one for me, one individual who is working as a result of his $10-billion deficit. I think the point is that: Six months later, we are at this anniversary. We are obviously still in the depths of a recession. We have fewer people working now than we did when he brought in this monstrous $10-billion deficit. Will the Treasurer admit today that his budgetary plan has failed? Would he not agree with that on this dismal six-month anniversary and agree to bring down a new economic plan in order to get Ontarians back to work?

Hon Mr Laughren: Sometimes the contradictions by the members of the Tory party in this assembly are truly mind-boggling. The leader of the third party one minute implies that we should have laid off thousands of civil servants in the province in order to reduce the deficit, implies that we should have cut spending all across the province. He is going to have to explain to me how, if we had not taken the actions we did in the budget, unemployment would not be higher than it is now. As a matter of fact, the unemployment rate has dropped this year. We believe we are coming out of the recession. All the experts tell us that, not just the Ontario government experts.

I meet with business people all across this province week after week, and I do not believe in pointing figures, but do members know what they tell me first? "What can you do about the high value of the Canadian dollar?" I say, "I do hope you've spoken to Mr Harris."

EMERGENCY TELEPHONE SERVICE

Mr Huget: My question is to the Solicitor General. Many constituents in my area are very concerned. The member for Leeds-Grenville stated yesterday in this House that the Ministry of the Solicitor General has cancelled the 911 consultation service it provided to municipalities. I must say this came as quite a surprise to me and to constituents in my area, because several municipalities in our area are presently being helped by the ministry to bring 911 service to them. Is the member for Leeds-Grenville correct? Is it true the Solicitor General has cancelled the 911 consultancy service?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I thank the member for the opportunity because it allows me to correct some rather inaccurate statements that have been made. I fear that the statements by the member for Leeds-Grenville and the press release he issued may have caused some rather undue concern in parts of this province. I would like to inform the honourable member for Sarnia that the statements of the member for Leeds-Grenville are totally incorrect. The fact of the matter is that we have not cancelled the 911 consultancy service. This service is at present working with some 25 municipalities across this province, 75% of the population of this province is now covered by 911 and more municipalities are coming on line all the time.

Mr Huget: Many constituents and municipalities in my area will be happy to hear the minister's response. I would also like to know what other initiatives he has to help communities that do not have 911 service to obtain it.

Hon Mr Pilkey: There are a number of things my ministry is doing to reduce the—

The Speaker: I ask the members to come to order. When the members have come to order, then the Speaker will be able to hear the response to the question placed. Fortunately it is not the Speaker's job to determine the value of questions or the intent of questions, but the Speaker has a responsibility to hear them. That is what I am attempting to do.

Mr Jackson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The question in this House is that when a minister is unable to answer the question, he is given an opportunity to rise in the House and give a response. That courtesy was not extended by the minister. He chose to use a method we are not used to using in this House. If that has created some disorder in the House, I would ask the Speaker to examine that the minister was asked a question yesterday. He was unable to answer it. He had an opportunity to respond in the House and he has denied another member an opportunity for rebuttal. That is the parliamentary tradition we inherited from the British monarchy and it is the one we should keep in this House today.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Minister, take your seat for a moment. The member for Burlington South raised—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. When raising a point of order, it is not helpful to then create disorder. The member for Burlington South rose on a point of order. While I do not believe there is anything out of order, I would be pleased to take a look at Hansard. In the meantime, the minister rightfully has the floor to respond to a question asked earlier.

Hon Mr Pilkey: At least the member for Leeds-Grenville need not feel lonely in the error of his comment yesterday, because he is joined today by the member for Burlington South, who is equally wrong and equally inaccurate. He suggested to you, Mr Speaker, that the minister, namely, myself, yesterday was unable to respond to the question. He is in error. I responded to the question. I responded accurately. Hansard will so show. I indicated that this item, along with others, is being considered with respect to the 1992 fiscal budget and was under consideration with all other items. I knew the answer. I gave the answer. The answer is a fact. His suggestion that I did not know the answer is equally wrong.

To the point at hand—

The Speaker: Briefly.

Hon Mr Pilkey: —to the member for Sarnia, there are a number of things my ministry is doing to reduce the initial startup costs. We are working with Bell Canada on the design and testing of small, less expensive telephone switching that will assist rural communities. Quite frankly, these initiatives will help rural communities to get 911 services if they desire and wish them.

Mr Runciman: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I think I have the right to respond. The minister suggested—clearly stated as a matter of fact—that I had not informed the House correctly yesterday. I had not suggested that 911 be—

The Speaker: Order.

PROSTITUTION

Mr Ruprecht: I have a real question for the Solicitor General on red light districts. The Solicitor General will certainly know and be concerned about the statements that have been made by his colleague the NDP mayoralty candidate, Jack Layton, about red light districts. The mayoralty candidate is calling for zones of tolerance, or red light districts, where street prostitutes would be able and totally free to carry on their trade and sell sex openly. Is the Solicitor General considering at present a policy that such red light districts or zones of tolerance would be established?

Hon Mr Pilkey: The laws relating to persons engaged in prostitution are contained in the Criminal Code of Canada, and until such time as the legislation is amended, the police have a responsibility and a duty to enforce that law. The level of enforcement is the responsibility of the local police agency.

Mr Ruprecht: That certainly was not the question. I am asking him today, if Mr Layton is elected as mayor and really begins to implement this strategy of red light policies, is the Solicitor General prepared to instruct Metro police officers to refrain from enforcing the Criminal Code charges for soliciting in those zones?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I do not have time to deal with hypothetical questions. We are spending our time dealing with real issues.

DRUG BENEFITS

Mr Jackson: I have a real issue of concern to seniors and I would like to ask the Minister of Health a question. It is only recently, I am advised as of October 10, that pharmacists, and we can only assume physicians as well, in this province were advised of a long list of drugs that will no longer be covered as other interim benefits under the Ontario drug benefit plan. This extensive list appears to adversely effect seniors as a target group in the decision that was made by her ministry.

Effective this Friday, the following drugs—I just use these three examples for the minister—Trental, which is a vasoactive drug that contributes to the flexibility of red blood cells, will cost senior citizens $75 a month; Persantine, which is a specialized blood thinner required after heart valve surgery, will cost seniors $53 a month, and heparin, a decision which is puzzling a lot of people this October, the month of breast cancer awareness, Nolvadex, which is a breast cancer drug treatment with no substitution, costs $80.33 per month. Women on social assistance are going to have to come up with this $80 in order to maintain their drug, and we are led to believe there are no substitutions.

Knowing the Lowy report and faced with the range of options she has, which could include reducing the incidence of drug fraud, reducing the average number of claims per patient, reducing the overprescribing patterns of Ontario physicians, why is it she simply chose to eliminate these special other interim benefits from the ODB? Why she chose that route instead of these other options to reduce her expenses?

Hon Ms Lankin: The other options the member talks of are routes we are pursuing as well. I need to get back to him on a couple of points, because I think he has incorrectly mixed up some of the drugs from the formulary and the non-formulary list. I know it gets confusing. There were some drugs—he mentions Trental. I believe I recognize that name to be one of them—they were delisted from the formulary, which is quite different than the other interim benefits he is talking about.

In the case of the drugs that have been delisted from the formulary, it is because there is a suitable alternative at a cheaper cost. It is because the Drug Quality and Therapeutics Committee has reviewed it and feels that it is not of therapeutic value and should not be on there or that it is potentially toxic. In all those situations, let me say that if a doctor feels that is the only drug that would be of assistance to a patient, there is always the section 8 special authorization to pursue.

With respect to his question about pursuing database or doctors' prescription patterns, we are meeting with the Ontario Medical Association. The joint management committee that was established as a result of the negotiations has been on every issue, from both of those perspectives, as one of the first items for discussion on the agenda. We are also undertaking a comprehensive reform review at this time of the Ontario drug benefit program. I hope we are looking at the areas the member raised.

Mr Jackson: Without there being any dispute about the drugs in question, they all represent an additional cost to Ontario citizens who previously were eligible for them and who are no longer receiving them.

My point in raising it is that when we check with the Ontario Pharmacists' Association and the Ontario College of Pharmacists, we find there has been no contact from her ministry with respect to examining these abuses and misuses of this drug benefit system. The truth is that pharmacists know the prescribing patterns of physicians and the drug utilization of their customers. The minister would be aware of the practice of double doctoring that has been occurring in this province, where drug addicts and those who would profit from the resale of drugs are able to go to a pharmacy with a prescription and obtain morphine, Meperol 3, Percodan, Valium, etc. A whole series of drugs are involved in this underground.

Given that the weekly billings to her ministry from pharmacists all across this province include the name of the patient, social assistance benefit number, drug identification, the quantity and day prescribed and the doctor's name, the minister already has a system in place. She does not need a large committee. She can now look at cases of drug abuse, misuse and abuse. These drugs, in some instances, are finding their way into schoolyards—

The Speaker: And the question?

Mr Jackson: —in our communities. I simply ask the minister, when faced with the option of catching cases of drug abuse in the system or cutting medically necessary benefits, why she has chosen to cut benefits? I will ask the minister again. I have already established from the former Minister of Health that there has been no consultation about this cutting and that is what I want—

The Speaker: The question, please.

Mr Jackson: —I want the minister to assure this House that she is looking at the cases of fraud in the ODB and not simply cutting at the expense of seniors, women with breast cancer and other types of medically necessary treatments in this province.

Hon Ms Lankin: I intend to take a bit of time to respond to this because I think serious allegations are being made.

First of all, with respect to the drugs the member raises, I think he has some confusion with respect to what we have done. The Drug Quality and Therapeutics Committee is the very specialized group that brings together people from the community and the pharmaceutical and medical community to review and make serious recommendations with respect to maintaining or placing drugs on the drug formulary. Their support for dropping drugs like Trental is confirmed and they were involved in that process.

With respect to his allegations that seniors will not be able to access these drug benefits if they are ODB eligible, let me again correct him. If in fact a doctor feels this is the only drug that would be of assistance and there is no suitable alternative on the formulary, there is the section 8 special authorization that will still allow a person to be covered. That has been the procedure in the past and that will continue. Quite frankly, he is wrong in his allegations on that.

May I just say to the member on that point that I have sent a letter to all MPPs trying to detail all this to assist them. If it is of further assistance, then I will in fact—

Interjection.

Hon Ms Lankin: If the member could just stay quiet for a moment I will offer him a complete briefing if it would be of assistance to him. However, let me come to his second point which is with respect to the—

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Lankin: I am sorry, Mr Speaker. The member took about two minutes to place the question and I feel I need to be able to address that. I will try to do it very quickly.

The second part of his question was with respect to the issue of fraud and whether we are doing anything around that. I have said to him very clearly and directly that we are meeting with the OMA to try to review that issue and at this point there is not the ability to track it. We intend to follow it through and do that. I think we are absolutely committed to follow up on all aspects of this.

Interjections.

The Speaker: I ask the House to come to order. I am certainly aware of the fact that the minister by her lengthy response prevented one of her own colleagues from the government side from placing a question. It would be very helpful in the future if detailed answers could be provided on the order paper, or simply respond to the member that a detailed response will be in the mail. It is important for us to try to maintain a short amount of time for each of the questions and the responses. The time for oral questions has expired.

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEEDURE

Mr Mahoney: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: You recognize that there is increasing difficulty in your maintaining order and I would like to refer to what I think is causing the problem and ask you to review it. It is right out of our rules, sir. It says, "Whenever the Speaker is of the opinion that a motion offered to the House is contrary to the rules and privileges of Parliament," you may rule on it. Then I look under privileges, "Privileges are the rights enjoyed by the House collectively and by the members of the House individually conferred by the Legislative Assembly Act."

Mr Speaker, I suggest that when you take into account the privileges of the members and when we see those privileges being violated, you look at yesterday's Hansard. The question was asked about the cancellation of the 911 consultancy service by the honourable member of the Conservative Party and the minister went on—I have reviewed it—and did not answer anything near the question. He said "that if this does become a formal decision, there would be alternative information available to those municipalities and regions that would have an interest in pursuing the development of the 911 service."

The member for Leeds-Grenville then went on to outline his concern about reports in the ministry about cutbacks of dollars in Orillia that would reduce 911, outlined specific examples, and simply asked the minister to confirm whether this was true. It seems to me, under the privileges extended to all members, that we could expect some kind of answer. If the answer is not available, then the minister could say he does not have the answer and request your permission to either stand it down or come back to the House at a later date, which is allowed.

Page 24 of our rules of procedure says:

"If in the opinion of the minister or the Speaker the question requires a lengthy answer, either the minister or the Speaker may require it to be placed on the Orders and Notices paper as a written inquiry of the ministry. The minister may take an oral question as notice to be answered orally on a future sessional day but where any reserved answer requires a lengthy statement, the statement shall be given under 'Statements by the Ministry and Responses.'"

This minister went on in his answer yesterday to give a totally irrelevant answer. He then went on in response to a very detailed analysis by the member for Leeds-Grenville where he outlined specific data. He outlined what was happening and he chose to say that—the answer he gave is ridiculous. It did not address the question in any way whatsoever. The rules, in my interpretation, are quite clear. It allows you to ask the minister, or the minister to choose, to answer at a future sessional day or to put it in some form or notice or to come back with it to this Legislature. As long as the government ministers are going to continue giving non-answers to questions being posed—the evidence is very clear and the retribution from your office is very clear in the orders you are not going to get order in this House and I think that's wrong.

I ask you to review the point of order I have raised, to look over the answer by the Solicitor General and to perhaps give some direction to either the House leader, the Premier or somebody over there, that if they do not know the answer they try to buffoon their way through question period. They should tell us they do not know it, get back to us with the answer and start giving us some reasonable answers.

I point out that whether we agree or not, the Minister of Health went to some extent to answer the question and you would notice how we were all quietly listening attentively to her answer. I suggest that if more members over there would follow the lead of that minister, maybe there would be more decorum in this place. You are not going to get us to settle down until these people start being responsible in answering our questions. I ask you to review that as a point of order and report back to this House.

Mr Eves: On the same point of order, Mr Speaker: I want to add further that I consider the question asked today of the Solicitor General by the member for Simcoe to be nothing more than a sham, giving the Solicitor General an opportunity to respond to a question he obviously did not know the answer to yesterday.

The member for Leeds-Grenville rose on a point of personal privilege to correct the record, because at no time yesterday did he ever say, as the Solicitor General accused him in the House this afternoon of saying, that 911 was cancelled. At no time did he ever say that. He suggested, as was pointed out by the honourable member, that the Solicitor General's ministry was considering cancelling the consultative program for municipalities under the 911 program and he admitted that this afternoon.

He totally misrepresented what the member for Leeds-Grenville said yesterday. He did not have the decency or the common courtesy to withdraw that comment and you, Mr Speaker, let the minister answer the point of personal privilege. That is your job, sir. You want order? Do something about—

Hon Mr Pilkey: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: As calmly as I can, may I join my fellow colleagues on the opposite side of the House in also requesting you to review my response in Hansard yesterday? I know that you will find that the question was answered directly and correctly and that you will put to an end all this verbosity that quite frankly is in error, if you so check Hansard.

Mrs Caplan: On the same point of order, Mr Speaker: I think the discussion is extremely relevant because you, on a number of occasions, have called attention to decorum during question period. I know that on a number of occasions when asking a question you, Mr Speaker, and I think quite properly, have noted that members sometimes go on a little long, and I have been guilty of perhaps a question that is too long during question period. The reason for that, as you know, is wanting to have as much information in the preamble so that the question will be understood by those people who are watching question period.

The concern we have is when we see the kind of display where a minister stands up the day after a question has been asked and then responds to a point of privilege. It goes away from the time in question period for further questions and also creates a kind of impression that would suggest members of the opposition are in fact not getting answers to their questions because they are not asking the questions properly. To have the member for Sarnia ask it in the way he did was quite inflammatory to all of us on the opposition benches. For the Speaker to allow the minister to respond to the point of privilege from an opposition member and then turn and answer the question from the member of his own caucus I think was quite improper under our rules of procedure.

Further, I point out to the Speaker at this time that while he has been very good at calling time on members of the opposition who perhaps are going along with lengthy questions, he has not been as clear in the calling of time on ministers in their responses. I think if the Speaker checked the time of some of the answers, he would find he has not been quite as balanced as I know he would want to be and should be. That also poses some frustrations because we have a number of questions that simply do not go on.

We all know the leaders are given some flexibility. I believe that if you watch the responses from the ministers, the Speaker, what you will find is that, beyond the first two members' questions, the answers from the ministers are simply running out the clock. As a member of the official opposition who wants to see important questions of the day get raised in this House in a proper and appropriate manner, I ask that you pay full attention to the length of the responses and call the government ministers when they are going on at length.

Mr Mahoney: Mr Speaker—

The Speaker: Is this further to the original point?

Mr Mahoney: It is. It is more in the area of the rules than whether or not the minister answered the question. I have the Hansard here. If anybody wants to accept that as an answer, that is fine, but that is hardly something I think the Speaker can necessarily rule on and I am not sure it is appropriate that he does that.

What I do think is appropriate, though, is that if you look under the headline "V. Privilege," on page 14 of our rules, it says, "21(a) Privileges are the rights enjoyed by the House collectively and by the members of the House individually conferred by the Legislative Assembly Act and other statutes, or"—and this is my point, an important point, I feel—"by practice, precedent, usage and custom."

The practice, the precedent and the custom of this place is that when a minister does not know the answer, the minister says so and says he will get back to the questioner with the information on a future day. Then the minister has an option. He either comes back into this place and gives the answer—

Interjection.

Mr Mahoney: Well, you obviously did not know the answer or you would not have set up a question by one of your lackeys so you could give the answer today that you wanted to give yesterday but failed to give.

The Speaker: Would the member for Mississauga West direct his remarks to me.

Mr Mahoney: I am sorry, Mr Speaker. My point is that the precedent and the practice has been violated by this minister. Instead of coming into this House and saying, "Yesterday in answer to a question I made an error and I would like to correct the record," or "Yesterday some statements were made that I am not happy about and I would like to make a minister's statement," which clearly is the precedent and the practice and the custom of this Legislature, he does what is not precedent, practice or custom and asks somebody in his caucus to lob him a question so that he can assail the questioner from the day before, who has no opportunity either to ask a further question or to rebut a statement by the minister.

Mr Speaker, if you want decorum in this House, get these people to start behaving like parliamentarians and stop acting like a bunch of yahoos.

The Speaker: To the member for Mississauga West, I will be pleased to take a look at the points you have raised.

I might respond to the member for Oriole, though she is not in the chamber at the present time. I can assure her that I keep a close eye on the time. Indeed, members on the government side will say they are cut short of time as members from the opposition will say they are cut short of time. In fact, the amount of time I allow for questions is regardless of position. Whether it is a leader or any other member of a caucus, he gets approximately the same amount of time for placing his question and supplementaries.

Some of what the member for Mississauga West raises with respect to courtesies which are extended in the House might best be handled through the House leaders. Indeed I encourage them to do that.

I will take a look at the matters, as I have mentioned. When the member speaks of precedents, part of the precedents of this chamber has been, over a long period of time, that certain courtesies are extended in the House and that generally they have been reached by agreement of the three parties as to when statements in response to questions asked earlier will be made to the assembly. But I will review this and get back to you as quickly as I can.

Hon Mr Cooke: Mr Speaker, I would like to point out on this point which has been raised that I am more than willing and the government is more than willing to take your suggestion that the House leaders should be sitting down and talking about these procedures as well as rule changes. On September 16, as well as the following week and October 3 and every week since, I as House leader for the government have invited the opposition House leaders to participate in a discussion of the rules. But to this point the opposition parties have refused to sit down and negotiate rule changes.

Mr Elston: On that, I am absolutely offended by the government House leader trying to make this into some kind of cause to change the rules of the House because he is in charge of a caucus that will not comply with the current rules. They will not have the Premier in here to answer questions. They send him out, if he even attends at all, after half an hour; he is unavailable to answer questions. They send the ministers away into the ridings, out away from this place so we cannot reply to their announcements.

His standing here today is part of the contrivance of the New Democratic Party to erode the integrity of the process for which I was elected some 10 years ago or more. I cannot stand for that man to take his place and reply to a point of order which has nothing to do with his rule change agenda.

I have suffered their silliness just about long enough. They have not come to us in any kind of parliamentary tradition to allow us to examine the public business with any evenhandedness. They sent the police when there were documents out. These people are at their best when they are most draconian. They are doing things that have never been done in this House before, not by any of the preceding governments. What is more, they are setting a trap for all interested democrats which will be sprung at a moment of their choosing so they can be more draconian than any other administration in any other part of the parliamentary world.

I cannot tolerate that, I will not stand for that and I will not be intimidated, nor should the public service be intimidated, by the stuff that man represents as government House leader.

Mr Bradley: I was not about to enter the debate on this point, but I will, because there has been discussion of House leaders and what House leaders should and should not be doing. It is indeed true that the government House leader, now that he is in government—not when he was sitting in opposition—suddenly believes the rules of the Legislature are not to his satisfaction. When he was in opposition the rules seemed to suit him quite nicely. He utilized the rules to his own advantage, and that was the way it was in opposition. It may not have been something the previous government thought was conducive to the nice working of the House; nevertheless, we worked under those rules.

But now, because the government cannot get its way on every possible occasion in this House, the government wants to change the rules. When the House is, as the member for Victoria-Haliburton would say, indecorous or when there is a question about a committee that does appointments to government, everything now gets tied to the fact that if we would only change the rules, this could all be solved. If we would change the rules, we could have the Premier in here every day. If we would change the rules, we would have statements made in the House. If we would change the rules, there would not be a dust-up in the House every day.

We in the opposition happen to feel that the rules, which were negotiated mutually among the three parties represented in this Legislature just a couple of years ago, are quite fine, thank you, and that if the government were to operate its agenda in an appropriate fashion, we would not have the problems we have today.

Mr Mahoney: Mr Speaker—

The Speaker: Is it on the same point?

Mr Mahoney: No.

The Speaker: A new point of order.

Mr Mahoney: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: would like to address a comment you made, Mr Speaker, when you said that the whole issue of length of time a decorum could be referred to the House leaders. With respect, sir, that is not what the book says.

Interjection.

Mr Mahoney: Yes, that is what I heard, that you wanted it referred to the House leaders for them to come up with some agreement. If that is not what you mean, will stand corrected on that. Rule 32(a) very clearly says:

“Questions on matters of urgent public importance may be addressed to the ministers of the Crown but the Speaker shall”—not “may”—“disallow any question which he or she does not consider urgent or of public importance. If in the opinion of the minister or the Speaker”—not the House leader; there is no mention of the House leader—“the question requires a lengthy answer, either the minister or the Speaker may require it to be placed on the Orders and Notices paper as a written inquiry of the ministry. The minister may take an oral question as notice to be answered orally on a future sessional day but where any reserved answer requires a lengthy statement, the statement shall be given under ‘Statements by the Ministry and Responses.’”

There is no mention in here of the responsibility of any of the House leaders in relation to how this place runs. I think the responsibility of the House leaders is to somehow come to agreement on the order of business, not the method under the rules and procedures of the Parliament, sir. That is your job and yours alone. I respectfully ask you to review that and to review my complaint, because I for one would like to see business done in this place with some decorum and get some responsible answers from this government.

Mr Scott: Mr Speaker, I am going to make a practical suggestion to you, if you will accept it, as I hope you will. The difficulties the House has had, and that you have had trying to control it, are pretty well obvious by now. There has been a lot of talk among my colleagues and others outside the House about the circumstances in which the House finds itself and how we might address this. There have been some wags who have said, “As the government is going to be thrown out in three years, why worry now?” That is not really the point. It is important that some way of conducting the business be found.

Now many of the things that have happened may be, as you yourself have said in your rulings, things that are beyond your control. But in light of that, I am going to seriously suggest to you that you should convene a meeting of representatives of the House. At least one of the House leaders is so generally unacceptable to the three parties that he alone will not be able to solve this problem. You should convene a meeting of representative members of the House to see if you can deal with a number of things.

The first thing to be dealt with is the absence of statements. Every member in this House who has served for more than this term understands exactly what has happened. The government has decided that it only gets into trouble when the Legislature is in session and that the government rule is unattractive to it. Rather than changing it, they are simply going to ignore statements and make them in public where they cannot be effectively criticized because as soon as they make their speech they hop in their limo and get back to the comfort of the building.

The first thing that has to be done is that we have to persuade the government to do what all governments in Ontario and in Ottawa have historically done; that is, make important statements in the House where they can be heard by all members of the Legislature and criticized here. I can assure you, Mr Speaker, that if that alone were accomplished, much of the heat and anxiety would be lost.

The second thing, and I understand this is technically outside your control, though I think there is a ruling pending on it, is that it has got to be understood by this government, and I hope a conference will be arranged to achieve that you simply cannot send the police after opposition members to investigate how opposition members access to information.

Mr Speaker, I understand the rule about your precincts and how difficult it is for you to control that. But the government of the day has to understand not only that it is against all parliamentary tradition to send the Solicitor General's police around to threaten and to harass, as was the case in the case of my colleague the member for Halton Region, but also that if it is going to do that as a matter of government policy, the House is going to be unruly.

There are other things. The length of questions has been raised today, the unsatisfactory nature of responses and the effort to set up questions to allow the minister to respond. All those things are important, but this government has to understand sooner or later that there is a tradition here. It is a tradition that they upheld valiantly for decades in this House. It was part of the best tradition of the NDP in Ontario to uphold the importance of Parliament in our system. They have to understand that to abandon statements without even an attempt to change the rule, to send the police around after opposition members and to threaten them when they do their duty and all that sort of effort is not only completely outside the traditions of Parliament but leads directly to the kind of difficulty you are confronting in this exercise, Mr Speaker.

I would suggest to you that the thing to do—do not refer it to the House leaders. The government House leader has shown that he is not interested in doing anything but making sure the government has its way. Convene a meeting of representative members of the Legislature under your direction to consider how these matters can be dealt with so the parliamentary traditions of Ontario can be restored and then maintained.

Mr Stockwell: Mr Speaker, just quickly, I think you have a very important role to fill in this Legislature and it is a role that is going to come under a little more scrutiny and a little closer review.

If you listened carefully to the comments of the government House leader, he suggested that he gave an offering to each House member from the opposition parties to come to a meeting to investigate and discuss rule changes. That may be an open-ended request, it may be a meeting that should take place, I am not sure, but the point I would like to make is that it seems to me in this Legislature we have some very clear and distinct rules.

I think any fairminded individual watching this or involved in this would agree that the rules are not being enforced. Ministers are making statements outside this House. I do not know how long it has been since the Premier has been here. Questions are not being answered. The time today with the Solicitor General was a painful and obvious problem that we in opposition have had.

Mr Speaker, you respond almost unanimously every single time with, "There is little, if anything, the Speaker can do." I think there are some things you can do. If you are going to get control in this operation, in this House, you had better not agree that the House leaders meet so they may change the rules, because that is not the solution. The solution is for you to meet with the government House leader and the government and ask them to follow the rules they had a hand in writing over these many years.

Mrs McLeod: On the same point of order, Mr Speaker: I take very seriously the proceedings of this House and I would not rise on this point of order if I felt it was in any way frivolous. I have become increasingly concerned, as my colleagues have, about the violation of reasonable access to information for the members of this assembly. I believe the increasing practice of this government to make statements on new government programs exclusively outside of this House and not to share that information with the members of this assembly is a violation of the privileges of members of this assembly and their right to access to information.

I understand the Minister of Northern Development and Mines is in Kenora today making an important announcement about a major transportation initiative for northern Ontario. If the Minister of Transportation had been aware of this announcement, it would have been possible for him to make a simultaneous announcement here in the House. In that way, all members of this Legislative Assembly and in fact people across Ontario would have had access to information about government initiatives, and that applies to members of the government as it does to members of the opposition.

Mr Speaker, I would ask you to review very seriously the concerns that are being raised and deal with them as an issue of the violation of the privileges of the members of the assembly and their right to information.

Mr Callahan: Just very briefly on one point that was touched on, the question of investigation of members and the attempt to silence them when documents were made available to them, I would submit that the very essence of Parliament and the very reason we have privilege in this House is because free speech in this chamber is absolutely necessary to maintain the democracy that the people of Ontario deserve. I would submit this is one issue that really gives me grave concern. The fact that the threat of prosecution, investigation or intimidation can be made against a member of this House flies in the face of the free speech that was maintained throughout the history of parliamentary democracy.

I would certainly ask Your Honour to look at that at the same time that you look at this, because if that threat is going to continue, then the net result will be—and I do not say this pejoratively or deliberately on the part of the government—that the public, who are entitled to full disclosure—certainly we give them full disclosure under the Members' Conflict of Interest Act—will be denied that full disclosure because of this threat and this concern. I would ask you to really look at that. That is very destructive. It is eating away at the very purpose of this House, the very purpose of being able to speak freely in this chamber.

Mr Eves: On a point of personal privilege, Mr Speaker: I would like to apologize to you for the tone and abruptness of my remarks earlier, because I do not believe this is conduct becoming a parliamentarian either. But it is awfully frustrating sometimes to sit here and listen to what I at least perceive to be questions being asked by backbench government members that are no more than a self-serving propping up of ministers who perhaps did not come off as well as the government would have liked in question period yesterday.

The only comment I really wanted to make is that I would have thought it was more appropriate for the Speaker to have answered the point of personal privilege from the member for Leeds-Grenville than the Solicitor General to have answered that point of personal privilege. That was the only point I was trying to make, and I would like to withdraw the remarks I made directed towards you earlier.

The Speaker: Indeed I appreciate the comments of the member for Parry Sound, because I know the member for Parry Sound. He has always had a respect for the chamber and for the parliamentary traditions.

I might respond to the member for Mississauga West. Indeed when I spoke earlier of courtesies, it was in fact related to many of the items raised by the member for Etobicoke West, items that are not out of order but as a courtesy. For example, ministers may make statements in the House; they are not obliged to. I have on a previous occasion spoken about that matter. Indeed the member may recall that I encouraged government ministers to make statements in the House.

To the member for Fort William, again I appreciate the concerns she raised and brought to my attention.

To the member for Brampton South, that matter has been dealt with in part, and there will be more to speak of with respect to that.

To the member for St George-St David, who raises perhaps the more essential item with respect to decorum and order in the House, I will indeed convene a meeting of members of the assembly. It would be my hope that representatives from all three parties would be able to co-operate with each other and with the Speaker in trying to establish a sense of order and decorum in this chamber so that we can conduct the public business.

I will convene that meeting as quickly as possible. Obviously it relies upon the co-operation of all three parties. Without that co-operation, I doubt very much that we will be able to do the public business properly, and without that co-operation, I doubt very much that any Speaker can maintain the kind of order and decorum that is required in this chamber.

Mr Phillips: I would also like to add another element you might look at as you are considering this, Mr Speaker. My recollection is fairly clear that several weeks ago when we expressed our immense concern about the fact that government ministers were making announcements outside the House, the government House leader gave the opposition an undertaking, his own personal word, I believe, that it would stop. It has not. By my own count there have been at least six major announcements made outside this House in the last two weeks—not here—without any opportunity for us in opposition to respond.

I have a role to play in Ontario to ensure that government policies are subjected to scrutiny and where possible improved. I took the government House leader at his word and he has broken that word. That is a very significant move by the government House leader, Mr Speaker. If you wonder why things get hot in here, that is an example of why for many of us anger is rising. Credibility and trust are very difficult things to establish and very difficult things to maintain. I would just say to the government House leader, he is losing it very quickly on behalf of the members on this side of the House.

Mr Mahoney: Mr Speaker, I am sorry to prolong this. I truly am, but I am a little concerned that perhaps you missed my point. What I have attempted to do is to deal with you on points of order from the standing orders. I am sure you can get somewhat frustrated when points of order are raised on all sides of the House and they are just simply points of complaint. I am trying to tie them in to specific articles within this document which we supposedly run this place by.

It is fine to suggest that perhaps a minister can respond to a point of privilege or that someone can rise on a particular issue. I accept the fact that this government is not experienced in the ways of being the government from the point of view of operating under the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly. However, it is some 14 months, and the House leader clearly is an experienced member of this Legislature, as are a number of the senior members of the cabinet. They should understand the rules.

I can accept the fact that a member like the Solicitor General, who is relatively new in this place, might err or might not fully comply. We can understand that on this side of the House and we are prepared perhaps to forgive certain indiscretions or inability to abide by the standing rules.

What I am having a great deal of difficulty with, as are my colleagues, is that this House leader, who is quite experienced, threatens us with changing the rules in here if we insist on asking that the current rules be followed. That is exactly what he did. He did it by implication, suggesting perhaps we could get together and discuss decorum, but I think the record would show he added a further element, "We could discuss decorum and perhaps changing of the rules." I am paraphrasing, but something of that nature.

That sends a clear signal to my House leader and to anyone who understands the procedures around here that the honourable gentleman is threatening us with changing the rules, which would in some way stifle the ability of the opposition members to perform their sworn duty, which is to oppose, either constructively or otherwise, and debate and put forward alternatives to government policy.

Sir, they are not allowing us to do that. You have heard several complaints from members here about statements being made in other parts of the province, in the hallway outside the east lobby, in press scrums or in some form of statement or press release about items that are of extreme concern and importance to the people in this province. They have little respect, it would appear, for the roles and responsibilities of opposition members because they continually refuse to put forward their government program in its place. That is one of the things that concerns us.

I was not in the House yesterday when the member for Leeds-Grenville asked his question about the potential cancellation of a 911 consultative service in the Orillia community and other parts. He cited, as I recall from reading Hansard, dollar amounts that were being withdrawn. The minister rose to his feet and said that it was possible that the program was being cancelled and that it might be necessary to review it, and that the municipalities would have the option of calling in to the ministry to discuss it. He did not deny it.

He then rose in response to a lob question today from one of his own colleagues, obviously a prearranged agreement between the backbencher and the minister—"Please, Backbencher, ask me a question so I can set the record straight on the unsatisfactory answer I gave yesterday to the member for Leeds-Grenville."

Having said that happened—that perhaps is an opinion on my part—that is why I refer directly to this document, the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly, because I could not expect the Speaker to rule on an opinion of mine or an opinion of any member in this House, but rather to rule on whether or not a member of the cabinet is operating under the standing orders in a proper fashion.

Very clearly the standing orders give the Speaker the authority and give the minister the option to either make a ministerial statement if he wishes to announce something—that a 911 service is indeed not being cancelled—could seem to be what he was trying to say in his answer yesterday. I suppose Instant Hansard will prove whether or not that is what he said, but that is what I understood him to say.

Why did he not stand up before question period, instead of taking four, five or 10 minutes between the question and the answer and the lob and the hooting and the jollering back and forth, whatever time period it was. If it is two minutes, it is too much for him to stand up and make a statement. It is really ministerial statement material that he should announce to this Legislature and to the people in Orillia and to the member for Leeds-Grenville and to everyone in Ontario that his ministry is not cancelling it and that he wants to make clear the answer to the question yesterday, if indeed there was some confusion.

It would seem to me that he must have felt there was some confusion or he would not have asked the honourable member on his back bench to ask him a question to then allow him to stand up and give another answer to what, in essence, was the same question. I think it is totally out of order and I clearly have pointed out where in this document it outlines your responsibility.

I would also say, on a new point, that on page 8 under standing order 23(i), it says that a member shall not impute "false or unavowed motives to another member." I think the minister, in his answer, said the reason he wanted to give the answer to the setup question was that he did not want the impression to be left that the member for Leeds-Grenville had supposedly given some false impression to the public out there. Again I am paraphrasing it and Hansard will correct that.

Hon Mr Cooke: Put out a press release. The member for Leeds-Grenville did.

Mr Mahoney: Even if he did, he is imputing false motives. The minister did not answer the question. The government House leader should read Hansard from yesterday. The minister did not stand in his place and say, "No, it is not being cancelled." He stood up and he went on—

Interjection.

Mr Mahoney: No, it is not a debate; it is about the point that the minister has imputed motives to the member for Leeds-Grenville, a point made by his House leader, and I hope not ignored by the House leader of the government. The government is not following procedure. Clearly it lays out in section 29 that the procedures of the House are as follows—

The Speaker: Would the member take his seat.

Mr Mahoney: I apologize, but I think this is critically important.

The Speaker: It is very important and you have brought this matter to my attention in a variety of ways, which I appreciate. Indeed, as I mentioned, I will be reviewing the matter. There is not much more that we can say at this moment, but I do appreciate the detailed way in which you have brought this to my attention.

Mr Mahoney: With respect, sir, you attempted to answer me on my point in your response. I thought I raised a number of very critical points in relation to the operation of this place: the fact that the House leader of the government has no respect for the opposition's role, the fact that the minister has responded inappropriately and the fact that the clear outline is in the rules of procedure, the standing orders, that give you the authority to make decisions on this.

Mr Speaker, I just want to ensure that you not give me a 10-second answer, with respect. That is what I received from you and you are stating that you were responding to comments by other members. I think I have raised a number of very critical points in this regard and it may take you some time. But I would ask you, and I know you will, to take the time to read Hansard tomorrow and to analyse the points I have made and come back with a full report. I would appreciate that.

The Speaker: To the member for Mississauga West, indeed that is what I mentioned some time ago and I am more than pleased to do that. I will take a look at all the events as they have unfolded and I will be reporting back.

RELEASE OF ANTON KIKAS

Mr Mahoney: I have a petition with 4,068 signatures from teachers, students, parents, priests and nuns of Croatian parishes in Mississauga, Toronto, Oakville and Hamilton, as well as other parishioners. This petition has been sent to the Prime Minister, Mr Brian Mulroney, and it has also been asked of me to present it on behalf of the people who have signed it. It says:

"We, the undersigned, are petitioning for the immediate and unconditional release of Mr Anton Kikas from the Yugoslavian military detention and to be released to Croatian officials."

I endorse this petition and add my signature thereto.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

Mr Cleary: I rise today in the House to table a petition that reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"The Ministry of Education has made evolutionism a compulsory core unit of senior OAC (previously grade 13) history and science. Since evolutionism and creationism are completed acts in the past, neither can be proven or disproven. In fairness to all parents and students, equal time should be given in presenting the underlying assumptions of each. Through the two-model approach, the skills of critical thinking such as recognition of bias, awareness of society's influence on one's bias and the awareness of assumptions can allow students to examine their own belief system and better appreciate an opposing view. These skills should be incorporated into all textbooks approved in circular 14, dealing with the question of origins."

I have affixed my signature to this petition, and it is signed by 21 constituents of the ridings of Cornwall and S-D-G & East Grenville.

NURSING HOMES

Mrs Sullivan: I have a petition which reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned, request that the government of Ontario immediately rectify the inequity in funding between nursing homes and homes for the aged. We strongly support the Ontario Nursing Home Association in its efforts to provide better care for residents of nursing homes through increased funding."

I have affixed my signature to this petition.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for interim supply for the period commencing November 1991, and ending December 31, 1991.

The Speaker: I believe that when we left off, the member for Dufferin-Peel had the floor.

Mr Tilson: I had left off on the subject dealing with the whole questioning of our committee procedure in the House. Before I begin to sum up on that point I would like to briefly mention several other points that I know some members have spoken on and some members will speak on in the moments ahead.

The first issue, of course, is the whole subject of the deficit. The last we heard the deficit was something slightly under $10 billion. I think the government has a obligation to give us more information on that. It was very suspicious when the Treasurer made an announcement some weeks ago that he was concerned with the recession and that there would be some cuts. There really were not that many cuts, considering the increase in the bureaucracy in this province, considering the increase in hiring for the civil service in this province, considering the increase in programs, considering the increase in the expenditures in this province, considering the bankruptcies, considering the unemployment, considering the amount of expenditures that have increased with respect to social services and considering the decrease in revenue that must be occurring in this province.

Obviously, if there are more and more businesses going out of business, more and more individuals going bankrupt, more and more businesses leaving the province for whatever reason—you can point the finger to whom ever you wish—the revenue must be down.

The question is, what is the real financial position of this province? I would hope that information would come to us before this motion is finally voted on. If we are allowing the government to spend more money, exactly what is the financial position? My guess is it is closer to $12 billion or $13 billion. If I am wrong, then let's hear the figures because those have yet to come to us.

When we look at the whole effect, we are now in the process of debating the series of revenue bills that will give the government the money it will be obtaining from the budget last spring, whether it be an increase in gasoline, an increase in tobacco, an increase in alcohol, aside from the other increases in the other bills we will be debating. We know that with the revenues—whether tobacco, alcohol, gasoline—everything is down. Business is down around the province, so common sense tells that the revenue coming into this province is down substantially.

If it is down substantially, what is the real deficit? When we look at the revenues being down and the social services being up, there is no substantial cutting of programs. If anything, there is an increase in the programs.

you have to do is look at the last portfolio for which I was a critic, and that was the Ministry of Housing: a substantial increase in the staff of the Ministry of Housing and a substantial increase of the civil service in the Ministry of Labour. I sat for an afternoon on the estimates of the Ministry of Labour and obviously the staffing has increased substantially.

I think we need to know that information before we vote on this motion. That is one of the subjects that has not been mentioned in the past and will be, I am sure, mentioned by other speakers.

On this whole subject we have been having, the whole procedure of this place, the whole procedure of the government, the operation, as a new member I must confess it is difficult to know the operation of how this House runs when I see the strange things going on that I do not, quite frankly, understand. In fact, business seems to be more and more carried on in the hallways of this House as opposed to in this House.

I do not understand new policies and statements being announced, whether up in the north or out in the east or out in the west or out in the hallways. Why are they not being introduced in this House? Why can this House not have an opportunity to respond to those statements before anyone votes? What is wrong with that?

It is as if it is a government in hiding. We do not know the number of ministers who seem to be absent on a day-to-day basis. The fact has been commented on that the premier seems to attend the House less and less. I realize, particularly this week, that there have been important engagements for him to be involved in, but it does seem to be a government in hiding. They will not tell us what they are doing. They will not tell us what their policies are, unless we read about it in the press.

Mr Huget: This is a tape replay.

Mr Tilson: Facts are facts. This is what we have been talking about the last number of weeks.

10

An hon member: Oh, please.

Mr Tilson: I must say I find it rather difficult when a member says, "Oh, please." I will return to the subject which I was originally debating on and which I was discussing yesterday, the issue of the closing of registry offices.

The closing of the Perth registry office is being announced as the standing committee on general government is debating that subject proceeds. Members on that committee had no idea it was going on. A member from the ministry is down in Perth informing the staff that their office is going to be closed. There are only two critics from the two parties. We were not informed about that until the afternoon, a very strange operation when you start realizing that this government wants to proceed.

I would like to sum up very briefly my concern about the operation of the committee structure, because it gets to the general operation of this House, and I am going to repeat the statements that have been made by representatives of the government. I mentioned them yesterday; I am going to mention them again very briefly today.

I understand that the way this system operates, when we are in this House with major bills, the government has to vote as one. There are always exceptions to the rules, and I understand of course that with private members' bills and other resolutions that are conducted once a week, there are generally free votes, and there are other occasions when there are free votes, when we are able to express our real opinions and do not necessarily have to follow the party line. Whether we are NDP, Conservative or Liberal, we are able to do that, with very little criticism.

My understanding is that this practice has been followed in the committee system, particularly when hearing members of the public and talking on very pertinent issues. Whether it is financial, housing, the closing of registry offices, if these matters affect a member's riding, no matter what party he or she is, whether it is the party in power or the party in opposition, the member is free to vote. To vote against a policy of the government in committee is not going to bring down the government; it is going to express the fact that the members are free souls, that they have the ability to vote freely on specific matters. In a committee, that is done.

I can say generally that the only other committee I have had some experience with is the standing committee on public accounts, and I have observed that this sort of thing does not go on; you do not necessarily vote along party lines. That has occurred, but in many of these committees it seems to be on the increase, particularly with this government, and is more prevalent particularly in the standing committee on general government, which I spent some time on in the last year.

I would like again just to refer to the dilemma and ask members if they can offer their suggestions to me, because these statements have gone unchallenged. Statements have been made by a solicitor acting on behalf of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations in a court of law involving an application for an injunction to stop the government from closing the Arthur registry office before the general government committee had made its report to the House on that subject. There was a request made for an application for an adjournment. There was an application made that the injunction proceed.

The lawyer making submissions made the following three statements, which I will repeat to the House: (1) "The general committee is of no significance"; (2) "The general committee is really just a way of creating political heat"; (3) "The general committee is composed of six members of the NDP and five from the other two parties and all the NDP members could be absolutely counted on to stick to the government's position of closure," referring to the closure of registry offices around this province.

Even if we ignored the first two points, the point that the standing committee on general government is of no significance and the point that it is just a way of creating political heat, the third point is the most devastating of all three points. It means that the government members, no matter what we do in those committees, whether it be amendments or matters that specifically involve their own ridings and their own constituents, are going to vote the way their government policy says. It does not matter whether it goes against the people in their riding; they are going to do as they are told.

I repeat, it is not going to bring down the government for government members to vote against their own party in committee. It probably means very little. It is an astounding fact that if I am going to spend the rest of my term with this government, with the whole committee structure, this is the way the system is going to operate, that we know if any remote item comes up against government policy, government members are going to vote against it.

Where is the consultation they boast about? It certainly is not in the general government committee, and I suspect that is going to be the pattern throughout all the committees as we proceed in the weeks, months and years ahead. I for one will find it very difficult indeed to ask people from my riding and specialists from various fields to come and address committees to assist us and assist the government to formulate policy. I will find that very difficult because it does not matter what the members of the public say: I repeat, the NDP members can be absolutely counted on to stick to the government's position.

More frightening than that is that this solicitor said before the court that she had instructions from the minister to make those comments, so the minister is part of this. Of course, we asked that the minister come to the committee and address us about whether these comments had indeed been made and, if they had been made, what she was going to do about it. Members of our party asked in a resolution which was supported by the Liberal members of the committee that the solicitor come. We were talking about her: Did she make these statements or did she not? We asked that the people come who made the comments to me in letter form, which I am referring to this House, so that we could have a full hearing, because this attacks the very committee system, the public system, which we have. Do we have an open government or do we not. If we do not, what is the minister going to do about it?

That was defeated. The committee did not wish to deal with it further. I then proceeded to raise a point of personal privilege in this House, and the Speaker ruled that the matter must be decided upon by the committee. I then proceeded back to the committee, and the majority six NDP members even cut me off in debate. They moved that the question be put, and that was the end of it. I could not even debate the subject in the committee. Not only were they not prepared to listen to the observations, but they would not even allow me to debate the subject. I have to come here to this House to discuss it.

I then came back to this House and I rose again on another point of privilege. I said the majority members are doing the very thing this solicitor said; that is, the government members could be absolutely counted on to stick to the government's position. Again, the Speaker said that unless the committee asks that this matter be reviewed, we are not going to review it. Well, the committee is not going to ask because the government members guarantee the government's position. In other words, the statements have been backed up. The actions of the government are speaking in this House.

There was a motion, as I indicated, which did come forward and was passed by the government, that the minister essentially investigate herself and her actions. It was a most remarkable motion and it carried, of course. The minister was asked to speak to the solicitor and, I suppose, to herself, because it involves her. It was a most remarkable position for the government to take.

In fairness to the minister, she did respond. I do not have the letter with me, but it was a very short letter of four or five lines and essentially it did not deny that the statements were made. It simply said the statements were not offensive and that is the end of the matter.

When we question today this government proceeding and making expenditures, aside from all the matters that have arisen today and in the days and weeks previously on statements and the government sending the police off to question members of the opposition, this is another issue that hangs over our heads; that is, the whole committee process and the participation of the public of this province in making submissions and comments to the government.

I hope that in the time that is allowed members of the government will address this subject, because it gives me great concern. I intend to participate in the committee process in some form as we proceed in the months and years ahead. I hope the government can assure me in some way that it will be listening to the public, that it will not be doing as this solicitor says, that is, voting no matter what the policy is that it pass. They are not going to allow the government policy, at least in committee, to be overturned or challenged, so hopefully it will become a government whose members listen and do not simply do as their masters say, whoever they may be.

Those are my comments with respect to one of the concerns I have that has developed in the last few weeks with respect to the committee process. I wish to speak on several matters that involve my riding, and one is the subject of education.

We now have two systems of education in Ontario, one for separate schools and one for public schools. My riding, Dufferin-Peel, does not have a secondary school as far as the separate school system is concerned. All the students travel to Brampton and attend Notre Dame secondary school in Brampton, which is not that old a school.

The member for Brampton North would be more informed. It is a problem that has developed in my riding and is affecting his riding because it is causing overcrowding. Notre Dame secondary school was constructed to accommodate 1,374 students. Those are the figures I have. All the separate secondary students from my riding go to this school.

Funding was announced and there had been communication with the previous Liberal government to develop a secondary school in my riding. It was originally going to be called Northern Secondary School and is now intended to be named after the late chairman of the board, Robert F. Hall. It will be called the Robert F. Hall Catholic School and will be in Caledon East.

The whole funding was discussed when the Liberal government was in office. The board was given the pression the funding would be available by 1992. Now appears that it is not going to be ready until 1994. I understand it will take approximately two years to complete the construction of the school. The site is available, services are available, but the funding is not.

In my riding that means that there will be students travelling on buses for a minimum of half an hour or three quarters of an hour, one way, to a separate school in Brampton, from as far away as Mono township, which is the northern part of my riding, to the Brampton area. The problem, as I see it, is the effect on the quality of secondary education in my riding and indeed how it will affect the quality of education at Notre Dame, which is in my riding. I am a member for Brampton North's riding, because there is already overcrowding.

There are 2,000 students currently crammed into the school, which is relatively new. There are portables all over the place. It is quite a remarkable sight. I question the health issue. I am sure it is adequate or the health authorities would not be allowing it, but it does concern me as far as the issue of overcrowding and the quality of education is concerned in my riding. This is, of all times, when we have not only the issue of education in my riding, but the issue of stimulating the economy in my riding. I am speaking specifically of Caledon and Caledon East, which is where the school would be built.

At the earliest, it seems the school will not be available until 1996. I can tell members that to spend half to three quarters of an hour one way on a bus to go from Mono township to Brampton and then return again is very difficult. For some unearthly reason, this government has decided to delay the funding until 1994. It is strange, particularly when the Premier, as I understand it, made a commitment during the last election to reduce the number of portables in Peel region. He made this commitment in his campaign. Obviously this has not been met and is not going to be met. It may be met just before the next election, which is slightly suspicious, but certainly it is going to be 1996 before we see a new school, the new Robert F. Kennedy Catholic School in Caledon East, unless the government changes its policy. I hope the Ministry of Education will consider its commitment.

Keeping in mind the whole subject of Brampton and the southern part of my riding, which is one of the fastest-growing areas in this province—I quite frankly have no idea what the enrolment projections are for the area surrounding Notre Dame. Perhaps the member for Brampton North would have more information on that. I do know that the population in my riding, in Caledon, is going to continue to increase and that these students will not be receiving the quality of education that other students in other parts of the province will be receiving.

There is a very great concern about the whole cost of education, specifically in Caledon and around this province, on the property owner, the taxpayer. Specifically in Caledon, they are paying these tremendous amounts of taxes but they do not have a secondary school. The students have to go to Brampton to receive their secondary education, and that in turn causes overcrowding at Notre Dame. We therefore have a problem in Caledon which has overflowed into Brampton North.

This is a subject that has been frustrating for members of the public in my riding, that with the high taxes the people are spending in Caledon, their children are not going to be receiving the quality of education they deserve and should have. Why can they not receive the education that other children around the province are receiving? There is no school, no school whatsoever.

The second issue, and the final issue in my riding with respect to funding, is Dufferin county, which consists of the northern part of my riding, of which the major city is Orangeville. It has been proposed over the last number of years to construct a new museum. A great amount of time of course has been spent in funding other areas, specifically athletic ventures, but there has been very little time spent on the arts, on preserving our past.

There has been a small group of people in Dufferin county who have been working very hard to maintain Dufferin county's rural heritage. The building that has been proposed—I have seen the plans—will be situated on the northeast corner of Airport Road and Highway 89. It represents a bank barn with an observation deck and a silo, located on five acres of high ground with a view over the countryside. It has an area of 25,000 square feet, which includes 5,000 square feet for archives. It is proposed that it will have atmospheric lighting and security controls meeting museum standards.

There is presently a museum in Dufferin county. Ironically, it sits in the old, original registry office. I am not sure of the dimensions, but it is a very small building. The rest of the historical artefacts are stored, but members of the public find it very difficult to see the heritage of Dufferin county in the museum we have. Dufferin county clearly needs a central heritage complex that will allow us to collect and exhibit and protect artefacts from our past according to the stringent guidelines required for humidity, temperature, light and security. We are into difficult times. All of these things are required to preserve our past.

We need to expand our focus to include natural history. We need to establish an archives for document preservation and to service researchers. We have none of that now. We need to provide a safe place for artefacts before they are lost. The fear in many rural areas, and certainly in Dufferin county, is that the artefacts we do have are going to be lost for ever unless quick action is taken.

I think we need to know what is going on at other institutions. It is proposed that there would be a showcase that would provide and show exhibits from other institutions. Certainly, as has occurred in many other areas around this province, it is planned to have a facility such as is needed for collecting, preserving and cataloguing archival and study material, and to make it available to researchers and educators.

This program has been going on for a number of years, and submissions have been made to both the federal government and the province. It is at this point that I wish to express my concern during this debate on interim supply. The project is estimated to cost $4.5 million. Dufferin county is slated to contribute $1.5 million, with the province and the federal government paying the rest. Funding has been requested from both the federal and provincial governments. The province's position to date has been that it will not take a position until the federal government makes a commitment. It encourages the program, but it is saying, "We won't provide any funding." It will not show any leadership unless the federal government makes a commitment.

Mr Marchese: That is not true.

Mr Tilson: Well, that is the information that has come to us from the former minister's staff. He has made a comment that it is not true, but that is the information I have, that the provincial ministry says until the federal government makes a commitment, it will not provide it.

Why can this government not show some leadership in this area? Obviously the project cannot take place unless the federal government makes its commitment, but why are we getting into the chicken and egg situation? It is badly needed. Our past is important to us. I am sure that in all of our ridings we look at our past, whether it be in the large municipality or out in the country, the rural areas. Our past is important. Artefacts are disappearing, and unless we have a central area to restore these items, to catalogue them, to keep them under proper conditions, they will be gone and lost for ever.

We do not appear to be going anywhere on this subject because of the inaction of this government. I would hope the ministry would take a second look and make the commitment, acknowledging that it thinks it is a good idea.

The government has acknowledged that it is a good idea to have a museum such as this. It has looked at the plans, as I understand it, and has agreed with it, but hopefully it would take a position and not necessarily make it conditional upon the federal government making a commitment, because that simply will not happen. Obviously there are going to have to be resources from all governments.

Those are my comments with respect to this debate. As I say, I have indicated two specific areas from my riding that give me some concern.

There are other areas which I have briefly referred to, but the whole area that I would question and that I challenge the members of this government to comment on in their two-minute responses is whether we are going to have a public committee system. Is it going to be possible for members of the public to come and make submissions to this government, knowing that it could change its mind, or are we simply going to have, to use the expression, a number of trained seals on the government side voting the way their government's policy tells them to?

I hope that does not happen, but that appears to be the indication—the unchallenged remarks by a solicitor from this government; that appears to be its position.

Mr Conway: I would like to catch my breath, first of all. My friend from Dufferin-Peel wound up his remarks just a little before I had expected he would.

Interim supply always provides a good opportunity for members of the Legislature to review any particular concerns or grievances they might have. I have often cited that old maxim of parliamentary government that there shall be no supply without a redress of grievance. On that theme, thought I might say a few things this afternoon. I do not want to go on too long, but I have a number of things that would like to cover and I have to believe that there will be other members who will want to join this debate.

I want to start by commenting a little bit about the state of the House, because it is quite clear that the House is in a fractious mood. There are days when it is in a positive uproar. Now, this House has been in an uproar before. I must say it has had the reputation over the years as being perhaps the most colourful and uproarious of the several legislatures in Canada.

One always reminds oneself of earlier occasions. I can remember the first few days I was in here, 16 years ago, and my friend the then member for Grey-Bruce used to put on fairly colourful displays as a parliamentary figure.

I think it is fair to say that the House is in an anxious mood these days because the government has embarked upon a new policy with respect to House business. Again, I want to say that the present government is not the first government to do this, to decide in the course of a mandate that the way in which it relates to the Legislature needs to change.

I am struck by the fact that the government appears to have taken on to itself and on to the public payroll a number of communications consultants. There is someone named John Piper. I do not know this fellow Piper, but he has quite a reputation, I gather, around Metropolitan Toronto school circles as a fairly tough-minded, hard-knuckled New Democrat, and those of us who have had some encounter with that breed of cat know just how stimulating an encounter that can be.

What I do know about Mr Piper is that prior to joining the current government, he was communications adviser to the royal family of Saudi Arabia. I was just struck by a clipping I saw not too many months ago from the Toronto Star where Mr Piper was providing communications advice to the Saudis on their visit to Toronto, where they did some very good and worthy things, according to this article by Bob Brent of the Toronto Star. I want to just quote a few paragraphs from this Toronto Star article of earlier this summer.

"Inside, the 55-year-old prince, his throne an ordinary armchair under flowing white drapes, was encircled by a 30-member entourage which sat cross-legged on pillows. Meanwhile, members of the media waited outside, observing the Saudi custom that the prince enter the building first. The number of reporters was equalled roughly by the Hill and Knowlton employees, supplemented by Mounties, who controlled the event with a tight precision.

" 'This is not a news conference,' organizer John Piper told reporters sharply, making it clear that they could not address the prince. 'This is a news announcement.' "

It is quite clear that Mr Piper has been affected by his encounter with Saudi royalty, and he appears to have been attracted to the new government by virtue of his successful manipulation of these kinds of press announcements the public in Toronto, in this case on behalf of the royal household, but apparently—

Ms Gigantes: What have you got against them?

Mr Conway: The member for Ottawa Centre opines that, "What have I got against that?" She has had an opportunity to engage in this debate, and I am sure she will not want to take up the cudgels for her Saudi friends or for John Piper or whomever, as time permits.

I say very seriously that the Rae government, after 13 months in office, has succumbed, rather quickly I should think, to a tendency that has characterized other administrations, and that is that one has to have a more clearly defined, a more hard-boiled attitude of managing the Legislature, and more importantly, managing the press that attaches to the business that is conducted either here or in the name of Her Majesty's provincial government in Ontario.

We have heard from a number of people that it is certainly not the intention of the government to make any announcements in this place, not too many announcements any rate. I have seen with my own eyes some internal government memoranda in the last few weeks which I was tempted to bring in, but I thought no, it would probably make the lives of some people inside the government very difficult and I did not choose to do that. But the strategy is quite clear. I saw two memoranda which outlined absolutely clearly what the government is about. It is absolutely clear as well where this is originating, and again I would say it is not the first time—

Hon Ms Gigantes: Tell us. Let us in on it.

Mr Conway: The member may not have seen it, but the directors of communication throughout the government have both seen it and heard it, and I suspect in a few cases, most importantly, they have felt it.

Of course the government, duly elected, is entitled to do whatever it wishes. We are rather surprised that the strategy of Ted Jolliffe and Donald MacDonald and Stephen Lewis would have succumbed to this tactic, because as some members on this side of the Speaker's dais have observed, the promise of many years of social democracy in this Legislature would have left people with the distinct impression that it was just an old Tory way, and perhaps even those Liberals, on their occasion in government, might have succumbed to the temptation as well, but that the New Democratic way was a better way.

I myself attended this summer at some legislative hearings the like of which I have never encountered before. I do not know who these people at Alpha Communications are, but I suspect they are doing very well in these recessionary times by dint of a seamless web of Bob Rae government contracts. It was just something to behold. I am sure there is a nice sheet out there that says these are amateurs and facilitators, but anybody with half a brain and one eye would have seen and understood what was going on. It was, I think, the most pathetic performance I have observed over the years, and I myself have engaged in some stage management, but not with this degree of ineffectiveness. It was absolutely unbelievable what they were about.

I suspect there are honourable members opposite in the government caucus who honestly believe this is consultation. At any rate, it is all part of a piece. We see the Premier's attendance in this Legislature. I am not keeping score, but I would say, on the basis of what I have observed in the last few weeks, that the Premier is now, in terms of his attitude and attendance in this House, worse than anything I have seen since the middle days of the Davis government, but this is just unheard of. When I think of what Stephen Lewis would do with a Premier who has behaved like this Premier has in the last four weeks, there are not words and concepts and sufficient passion in any language of my acquaintance to do justice to what Stephen Lewis or Ian Deans would do. There would be a meltdown that would be quite something to behold.

Mr Sutherland: He's with the royals.

Mr Conway: He was certainly with the royals for the last couple of days, and it is pretty hard to miss the fact that he is with the royals. I remember reading Lord Tweedsmuir's papers about the royal tour of 1939 and about just how tired everyone got, from Franklin Roosevelt to the private secretary to the Queen of England, at how impossible it was to separate Mackenzie King from George VI. You could not do it. That wormy little Prime Minister was just there; the proud rebel's grandson was in every shot. Apparently the royal household went to some considerable extent to separate that very efficient party politician, Mackenzie King, from George VI and his beautiful and resplendent Queen, but nothing worked. As I look at the news these days, I think we have a thin version of Mackenzie King. He is in every photo shot. It is something to behold.

Hon Mr Laughren: Not true. He wasn't, Sean.

Mr Conway: Oh, listen now. I seem to have touched a nerve.

Mrs Marland: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I think we do not have a quorum present. I would like you to verify that. We have some important statements being made and less than a quorum.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Mr Conway: I just want to make the point that the Premier and his staff have clearly worked out a strategy they are going to manipulate to the greatest extent they can. I can imagine this character Piper advising this but I know Ross McClellan rather well. There was a day when I would have also imagined that Ross McClellan would have had cardiac arrest at the mere suggestion of such a policy, and to imagine that McClellan is back there engaged in this little business just tells me that humankind has a measure of frailty and flexibility that we should simply observe. I observe that McClellan reduced to being part of this game is also interesting to me as someone who has watched the NDP over a considerable number of years.

At any rate, the Premier has decided what he is about. I am simply going to observe again that this strategy will come. It may work but it will be, I suspect, at the very end most a pyrrhic victory. After three weeks of its evidence in this session, one can clearly see that the temperature of the chamber is rising and that does not bode well for the government.

The Premier has a considerable retinue these days as well. He not only has Mr Piper but he has managed, as my friend the member for St Catharines has been quick to point out on a number of occasions, to draw to his bosom Gerry McAuliffe. That is not an inconsiderable achievement.

To think that Gerry McAuliffe is now earning his $100,000 advising the government about how to manipulate the press and how to abuse the Legislature. Gosh, maybe Gerry is even up there advising whomever on how, when and where to send the Ontario Provincial Police. The thought that Gerry McAuliffe is now part of this pantheon of social democracy, doing all these wonderful things, makes me realize that it is a brave new world in which we now find ourselves; that Gerry, John Piper and Ross McClellan are now what the 19th century would call the wire pullers, working their little magic way through the day in their rather interesting concept of the public good.

I am also going to observe again that restraint has been talked about. I never cease to be amazed at how many people I know who are good New Democrats from British Columbia through to Newfoundland; people I now meet who tell me about the executive positions they hold in the Ontario public service. I do not want to embarrass some of these people. I have met some of them in the most interesting places. I am sitting there thinking, "How are things in Newfoundland?" until the former member of Parliament says to me: "Newfoundland? I am really enjoying Toronto." "Oh, what are you doing?" "I am working for the people." Again I am not complaining so much as observing.

I saw some very interesting data about who is where in the cabinet office and the Premier's office. I have to tell members that if there is a growth industry around Toronto these days, it has to be the Premier's office and the cabinet office.

I am thinking about an order paper question but I suspect the wire pullers will quickly figure out a way to cloud the truth of what is going on. Some of the materials I saw suggest to me that a good reporter working for one of the larger, better-financed news organizations might want to take a close look at the growth of the size and payrolls in the Premier's office and the cabinet office because we do not only have the John Pipers and the Gerry McAuliffes. I saw a group of communications people attached to either the Premier's office or the cabinet office that went on for pages. I was very interested to see that this growth had been as significant as it had over a short period of time.

My friends opposite will be not surprised if there is a certain scepticism on this side of the House as to just how serious the Rae government is about restraint being the order of the day for all of us in the Ontario public service.

I want to repeat that this strategy of manipulation and related activities that keep the Premier away, that make announcements elsewhere—and I thought the Attorney General outdid all the expectations of this policy by having some person standing just outside the door the other day, literally outside the door, handing out an announcement with significant news around the rape shield question, thought that was about as discourteous an act as I can remember in some considerable time. I have said that and am not going to repeat unduly this afternoon.

If I can reduce the din of the series of conversation over here to my left, I would like to talk about another issue that has been very much canvassed in recent days in this Legislature, the whole question of the OPP being asked to investigate members of the opposition. I want to quickly recall for two members' attention what happened in one case. There were a number of cases, but the case—

Interjections.

Mr Conway: It is a little difficult. There is a rising din in my ear that I find—

The Deputy Speaker: I am inclined to agree. Perhaps you could lower the tone of your voice or, if you want to conduct a conversation, I would suggest you do it outside.

Mr Conway: In early June my colleague the member for Hamilton Centre came into possession of a cabinet document from the Ministry of the Environment having to do with the Toronto garbage crisis that set out a number of alternatives as to how the new government was going to deal with this.

She came into possession of that information and apparently used that information in a question, or in the House in some fashion, as did my colleague the former member for Brant-Haldimand, the then Leader of the Opposition. Shortly thereafter, in her constituency office in Halton region, she was interviewed by a detective inspector of the Ontario Provincial Police who indicated there was some very real concern around this and she should be aware of the fact that, when she asked the question, this investigation could lead to a criminal charge. She was not discouraged from retaining counsel.

I want to ask all members again, particularly New Democrats—I brought a few books and I am going to recall something most members will not know anything about. That issue is important to me because 10 years ago one of the most distinguished and effective members of this Legislature, Jack Stokes, the Minister of Transportation's predecessor, long-term member for Nipigon and former Speaker of this Legislature, brought to this chamber the story of one Donald MacAlpine. Most members will not know about that, but the Minister of Health will know because the Ontario Public Service Employees Union played, I think, a very creditable role in that. I commend today, as I did then, the efforts of Mr Stokes, other members of the NDP and certainly members of OPSEU.

Very briefly, the story of Donald MacAlpine was the story of a young forester working for the Ontario government in the Nipigon area of northwestern Ontario who was directed by his supervisors in the Ministry of Natural Resources to make available to Buchanan Lumber timber in the Black Bay area that was either otherwise allocated or simply not there. As I say, the details of this are very nicely covered in Jamie Swift's book, Cut and Run.

I will never forget the incredibly passionate campaign the NDP led in this Legislature and in the courts of this ince on behalf of this young professional forester who the whistle on his superiors because he said his ethics professional forester would not allow him to fabricate. He was not going to be corrupted by anyone, particularly someone higher up more susceptible to political pressure so that timber allocations that should not be made could be made. My point is that the NDP in 1981-82 led a valiant and, in the end, successful campaign because could not tolerate a young forester who had come forward and who was threatened with any amount of recrimination, including the loss of his job essentially, by the government.

Hon Ms Lankin: He was fired.

Mr Conway: He was fired, as the Minister of Health said. They said, rightly so, this was harassment that was completely intolerable. I agree with them now, as I agreed with them then.

I say to the member from Sudbury, who seems to be so much engaged in this, that I want her to think back to the MacAlpine case and I want her to think about what it would feel like if, as a member in the discharge of her duties, she were met one day in her constituency office by a detective inspector sent by Bill Davis or David Peterson. I can tell members what would happen. The chandeliers would shatter, the carpet would curl and Hansard would be aflame with the kind of indignation my friend in Cochrane can summon on a good day. No business could be done until heads rolled.

I want to say to the Attorney General, who is still the Attorney General, that we have seen this not once but on two or three other occasions. We have seen it with respect to a Ministry of Labour document, we have seen it with respect to a Treasury document and we have seen it with respect to a Ministry of the Environment document. They all smile and smile across the way, but I say that if the NDP is a party of double standards, they will take seriously what my friends the members for Halton Centre and Scarborough-Agincourt and others have said.

I can imagine what happened here; I can well imagine what happened in this respect. As the member for Halton Centre, I think it was, said, the OPP were not just out on a call one day and happened by her office in Halton. The former member for Brant-Haldimand and the now leader of the Liberal Party, the member for Bruce, were also visible. This was not fortuitous. It was not accidental. It was carefully orchestrated by someone in the government.

Hon Ms Lankin: No, not necessarily.

Mr Conway: She points, like Cicero, an accusative finger. I want to tell my friends opposite that they are responsible for what happened in this case. It has not happened once. If it were an isolated case I would say well done, good, but as I say, I think I know something about what happened.

I just want to put them on notice because, unlike some of my colleagues, I am a very forgiving fellow and a very understanding member of this Legislature. But on this subject they had better understand that if they are going to be true to the traditions of their party, it had better not happen again. This is beginning to appear to be, and may in fact be, a policy of harassment, one that has been contrived by some of their hired hands who have some pretty clear records in terms of their past with respect to managing the public agenda. I do not know. All I know is that on three separate occasions now something has taken place which I do not recall too much of ever before; namely, the OPP has been out visiting members of the opposition who have happened to come by government materials.

Again I say to some of the new members, if that were the case, Stephen Lewis would never have been let in here. Day after effective day he stood up here with one disclosure after another.

Mr Curling: Morty Shulman.

Mr Conway: Morty Shulman is a perfect example. The NDP were pathfinders in the use of purloined government documents. That they should now be the party sending out the OPP to visit my colleague the member for Halton Centre shows a very different kind of New Democratic Party than I have been accustomed to.

I simply want to say to them that it had better stop. I am sure the Attorney General, as the chief law officer for the government and the people of Ontario, would want to take a leadership role in ensuring that whoever it was inside the government who gave these orders understands that they are not very appropriate on the basis of what I have seen; and not just one order, but as far as I can judge, at least three separate orders in three separate cases.

The New Democrats have been up to some other interesting things. I was struck the other day by my friend the member for Essex South, who raised the whole question of the Red Hill Creek Expressway. Again, just a brief observation: Who among us will forget that day a few months ago, almost a year ago I guess it is now, when, newly minted, the NDP stood there and said: "We have a very important announcement for the Hamilton-Niagara area, and that is that the $70 million that has been spent and reviewed around the Red Hill Creek Expressway is not going to proceed. It is not going to proceed because we have made a moral decision and our morality tells us that it is a wrong decision."

Again, I did not happen to agree with the decision then, but I can understand how my friends opposite made the decision. It is no secret to any of us that there was strong opposition in the NDP, and I gather it was very strong among the members in the Hamilton area: "Elect us and we will stop this." They in fact did that.

They did it, I thought, in a rather clumsy fashion. We saw that the NDP members of the Hamilton city council were taken for a walk through the valley a few days before the decision. They talked to the then Minister of Transportation, among others, about the birds and the trees and the weather—and the bees, I guess—but they did not talk about the decision that was about to be made.

That is a wonderful kind of Nixonian quality: "I was downstairs in the parlour. I had no idea what was going on upstairs and I will not have it said that my integrity is to be impugned. We went for a walk and I want you to understand we did not talk about what the cabinet was going to decide a day or two later."

We are all honourable members. We have to believe what each other says. In another place I think that would be called the politics of the credibility gap. At any rate, a moral decision was made, for reasons that were then understood and at least announced. That was the morality decision of 1990. We now have what appears to be an amendment, because there is mayoralty decision to be made in Hamilton in November of this year.

Hon Ms Lankin: Morality and mayoralty.

Mr Conway: Yes, that is right: from morality to mayoralty.

Mr Curling: I think they got confused there.

Mr Conway: I know it is hard on a Tuesday afternoon. What do we now see? We see that the NDP's morality appears to be weakening. We all heard the Minister of Transportation here the other day. Certainly if members have been reading the Hamilton Spectator and listening to the Hamilton media, it is very clear that the government's morality is somewhat discounted.

Hon Ms Gigantes: You are such a gossip-monger.

Mr Conway: I may be a gossip-monger, but I remember the member for Ottawa Centre in her days as the CBC major-domo in Ottawa. May I say this? If I am to be called a gossip-monger, then no higher praise can be offered me by the member for Ottawa Centre.

Hon Ms Gigantes: I didn't get so well paid for it.

Mr Conway: I have looked at the CBC pay rates and they certainly stand very well with respect to my rate, but the government rate must be better. Why else would the award-winning Gerry McAuliffe sell his soul for that mess of pottage? Gerry McAuliffe, the award-winning gumshoe from the Globe and Mail and from the CBC, who for a quarter of a century hounded and held accountable the Robarts government, the Davis government, the Miller government and the Peterson government like few legislators paid to do so in the House, without notice collapses into a puddle of, I do not know what, and sells out for I guess something other than a mess of pottage.

I want to come back to the point about the Red Hill Creek Expressway. It was a moral decision last year; it is now a political decision because the NDP caucus in Hamilton is feeling the heat. They want to be mayor. They want to be not just the gang of four; they want to be the gang of more, to control that council. Now they find that this albatross, their moral decision, has come back to haunt them and we have a situation that is quite interesting because, I repeat, last year's morality is something else in the fall of 1991.

I was interested to see that my dear friend Jack Layton is engaged in a very interesting battle here in Toronto. He is now calling out those non-partisans like Judy Rebick to speak in the broad public interest, you understand, to perhaps decide certain issues in the Toronto mayoralty.

Speaking about interesting things the government is up to, the other day the Minister of Citizenship—she is not here this afternoon—gave a speech here in Toronto. I was not there, so my comments are going to be based on press reports, but I am sure a lot of members were struck as was on the weekend to hear—I heard it on the radio, I think, on Sunday—that the Minister of Citizenship for the Ontario government decided and proclaimed at some meeting in Toronto that Jacques Cartier and Samuel de Champlain were racist. I thought that was interesting and I see some press reports that speak to that.

Hon Ms Lankin: Columbus too, I think.

Mr Conway: I was not thinking about Columbus.

Hon Ms Lankin: I think the news reports said Columbus.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): If I may interject, I would ask the member to speak through the Chair, please.

Mr Conway: Yes, but there is a din over there, Mr Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I appreciate that and it is true. If members would refrain from interjections, it will help the member.

Mr Conway: At any rate, the latest pronouncement of the Minister of Citizenship would suggest that Jacques Cartier and Samuel de Champlain were racist, and she goes on to say some rather interesting things here about racism in Canada over the centuries. I was driving down on Sunday listening to this and I thought to myself, I wonder what she would say about one of my favourite Canadian politicians, one of the founders of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, J. S. Woodsworth, I think one of the most remarkable people ever to serve in public life in Canada.

In 1909, J. S. Woodsworth wrote a book called The Strangers Within Our Gates. It is a wonderful book dealing with the immigration issues of the turn of the century. In it he says some really interesting things. He talks about Galicians, a category of central Europeans at the time. He talks about Mormons in an equally interesting fashion. My question for the Minister of Citizenship is somewhat rhetorical: Is she planning to have a retroactive court martial and trial of J. S. Woodsworth? Perhaps in this age of political correctness, it may happen.

To be told that people living 400 and 500 years ago had different views and different values than we do today is to be told the obvious. That there is racism today, that there always has been, I think is a sad reality. Governments, organizations and individuals over the years have tried to mitigate that evil influence in humankind, but I repeat, I wonder if the member for High Park, the Minister of Citizenship, is planning to make a speech about the racism and ethnocentricity of James Shaver Woodsworth, founder of the CCF in Canada.

Hon Mr Hampton: Ah, come on.

Mr Conway: Someone says, "Ah, come on." I am simply responding to some pronouncements that have been made by leading members of the Ontario government.

repeat, there are few if any politicians for whom I have a higher regard than J. S. Woodsworth. I only regret this kind of socialist has almost vanished from this world. We saw one of them here today. I was delighted to see Fred Burr back, because Fred Burr in my acquaintance was a J. S. Woodsworth socialist, but I tell members that they are truly a diminished if not an almost extinct kind of socialist.

There are just a couple of other observations I would like to pursue. One has to do, interestingly, with my friend the member for Dufferin-Peel's observations around the land registry policy of the government. Now that, I have to say, Mr Speaker, is a sight to behold. It is tough. I want to thank the minister. She phoned me at home in the middle of the day the announcement was made with respect to Lanark county. I very much appreciated that. I told her that then, and I will tell her again now in her absence.

Mr Tilson: I did not get a phone call.

Mr Conway: The member for Dufferin-Peel did not get a phone call, but I did and I was pleased.

I do not want to go on unduly, but what we had in that regard was something quite interesting, because the government is having some difficulty around consultation and consistency. It is not totally unusual, because they are a group of good people. We all learn by experience. I have had my experience over the years and certainly know something of the trial-by-error method of education. What I saw in Lanark a couple of weeks ago was really something. I simply want to make the point that in Lanark county they truly think this government does not know what it is doing.

I do not want to get into the very important point the member for Dufferin-Peel has made with respect to what the government lawyer went to court to say. I can believe what happened. I am absolutely confident that everything he told me is true. I will go one step further—I think we all sort of disagreed on this in the committee—I quite imagine he made that without the minister ever knowing he thought it, meant it or was about to deliver it; my experience with government lawyers being what it is, I say to the Attorney General.

Interjection.

Mr Conway: Very good people, I want to tell you. I do not mean to denigrate the lawyers.

The Acting Speaker: Again, I would ask the member to direct remarks through the Chair.

Mr Conway: You and I are going to have a big problem, Mr Speaker. I am going to really contain my Irish temper this afternoon, but I repeat, you and I are on the verge of a very big problem. Maybe it is that there is just too much Celtic blood in both of us, but if you want this kind of policy, which as I say, through scores of speakers in this place, I do not really remember anyone applying your particular kind of Waterloo county vigour, you are the referee. I have dealt with referees of varying quality over the years, so I know the rules of the game.

I simply want to make the point that in Lanark county there is certainly a great deal of confusion around what happened. What happened was very simple: The government had decided on a course of action. It did not seem to know there was a brand-new land registry office in Almonte, opened just 8 or 10 months before the announcement was made. Their new policy was that there could only be one land registry office per county. Almonte had to go. Perth was going to stay open. That was it.

Then, as the member who preceded me observed, on the morning of the general government committee's deliberation on this question, there arrived in Perth, the county seat in Lanark, a delegation, and we had a very significant development in government policy, namely, Almonte was going to stay open and Perth was going to close.

I just want to say to my very engaged friend, the member for Essex-Kent, that the Perth Courier of Wednesday, October 16, 1991, did not miss the point. It had a little editorial. "No Consultation, Nothing" is the headline. I am just going to read two paragraphs:

"When Marilyn Churley, minister of consumer affairs, announced Thursday that the Ontario government had decided to close the registry office in Perth and move it to Almonte, everyone was taken by complete surprise." The editorial then goes on to talk about the fact that this truly came out of the blue.

Quoting again from the editorial in the Perth Courier of Wednesday, October 16:

"There is a certain irony here, as the New Democratic Party built its platform on consultation, but it more than fell short on its commitment in this particular case. Not only did the government not consult those concerned, they are notifying all concerned a mere 14 days before the entire office closes in Perth," an office, by the way, that has four years of lease yet to run.

I just want to make the point that there is no little bit of confusion and bewilderment and concern in Almonte around this particular decision. The law society of south Lanark has written and the member for Lanark-Refuge has, I know, addressed a number of those concerns.

But it was really something to see, so spectacular a reversal on the morning, almost at the 11th hour and 59th minute of these discussions, one that just simply came out of the blue and has left people in north Lanark very happy and in south Lanark no little bit confused. I suppose more than anything else, they are trying to figure out what the government is up to. They are not having much success.

I tell them of course: "Well, you know, consistency is really the hobgoblin of small minds. Flexibility is the new buzzword." What have we seen on auto insurance? What have we seen on retail store hours? What have we seen on garbage?

My friend the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, the Minister of the Environment, has been engaged in a calisthenics that is positively breathtaking. We all remember the speeches last year before the election and the moral commitments given by the New Democratic Party.

Whether it was in Marmora, whether it was in Whitevale, whether it was in Britannia, the NDP was moral. It was pure. They were better than those Grits and those terrible Tories. "Elect us and you will get a new day." A very significant cornerstone of that new morality was the environmental commitment of the Minister of the Environment, the Premier and those other estimable characters who were going to make up the NDP candidates list.

What are we seeing now? Effectively the government's garbage policy in Toronto is exported out of the country. I never thought, quite frankly, that the New Democrats, who have been viciously opposed to continentalism, would embrace a continental garbage policy as their way out of their moral commitments made in the electoral campaign of 1990. But that is what we have. That is exactly what we have.

We have a policy where, quite frankly, the government is exporting Toronto trash to New York and anyplace else—

Mrs Sullivan: Ohio and Michigan.

Mr Conway: —Ohio and Michigan—where they will have it, where they will burn it, and of course where the emissions will blow across Elgin county and Essex county and all of those other pure parts of Ontario. But that is effectively the policy, let there be no confusion about it.

The poor old Minister of the Environment comes in here day after painful day trying to figure out a way to solve the conundrum of being so moral and so categorically so. So people in Almonte, Perth and Lanark county should not be overly upset when they look at a rather mundane policy, namely, land registry services, being characterized by confusion, contradiction and inconsistency, when I submit to them that when one looks at the big-ticket items—auto insurance being my favourite, because if there is a Holy Grail for the New Democrats in Ontario, surely it has to be that. If they can turn tail on auto insurance, then land registry issues are a mere trifle.

I want to make a very mundane observation about a government service that has the attention of a lot of people in my constituency. It has to do with the registrar general's office. It is a mess, I am sorry to report. It is a dreadful mess and it has been a mess for months. I do not normally use the time of the House to—

Hon Ms Gigantes: It has been a mess for years.

Mr Conway: Mr Speaker, your very excitable colleague the member for Ottawa Centre wants to say something. I think she did say something.

All I can tell the members and my friend the member for Ottawa Centre is that the good people of Renfrew pay a lot of taxes, and they are willing to pay those taxes because they know they are supposed to get services: health services, social services, legal services and, yes, birth certificates and marriage certificates. It puzzles people living in Eganville and Chalk River and Pembroke and Beachburg when a government with a $52-billion budget and 90,000 full-time equivalent staff cannot deliver birth certificates and marriage certificates.

Mr Grandmaitre: They cash their cheques.

Mr Conway: Oh, the member for Ottawa East is right, they do admit that the cheques get cashed almost immediately upon their arrival in Toronto. That is no problem. But weeks and months pass—

Interjection.

Mr Conway: I am being deadly serious, and I suspect that my good friend, the minister of lands and forests, the member for Algoma, will be very sensitive to this because he has built a very good reputation over the years of providing 24-hour service on things like—

Hon Mr Hampton: Have you been here that long? Have you heard of the lands and forests?

The Acting Speaker: Order. The honourable Attorney General will refrain from interjection.

Mr Conway: I just want to make the point that in my constituency ordinary citizens are upset by the score. The ministerial association is upset. I just got a letter from the Roman Catholic diocese of Pembroke, and I have never received a letter from those good people in quite those tones. I am not going to read it because it is a very excitable letter, and I think my good friend the monsignor would not want to be quoted in this place.

He is sitting there as an administrator for a diocese that is both in Ontario and Quebec and he is having to tell priests from Quebec that they cannot marry friends in Ontario because they cannot get a temporary registration. I just takes for ever.

I have got lawyers writing to me. I have got constituency staff who are very quiet, efficient, tolerant people. When I go home on a Saturday, that is all they want to talk to me about. "What is going on? Can't you do something?" I know I am not the only one. I can well imagine—

Mr Bisson: Suffering from the system you put in place.

Mr Conway: My friend opposite says the system is suffering. Well, perhaps it is. I only make the point in a very plaintive way that if all of us are in a business where we tax for tens of billions of bucks and we cannot deliver birth certificates and marriage certificates and we cannot register my good friend from Gooderham who may want to come to Pontiac county, Quebec, and marry a good friend, then we should fold our tent and go away.

I make the point. I implore my good friends, the senior members of the Treasury bench, to do whatever they can to return that business to normal. For decades around here it has been one of the most efficient businesses we have ever operated. I have never had this problem before, but in the last six to 12 months it has become a very serious problem affecting the lives of a lot of ordinary people.

Just a few other subjects, a couple of which will be totally new I know to my friends opposite: One of them is Hydro policy. I just want to make a couple of—pardon me?

Mr Christopherson: Feel free to express yourself on that issue.

Mr Conway: I just might say a few things.

Mr Wiseman: We would not want to hold you back.

Mr Conway: Some people could hold me back, but the member would not be one of them.

I just want to say this. I have appreciated the developments that we have seen in the last five or six weeks with respect to the new government's Hydro policy. It is coming slowly and much more remains to be done, it seems to me.

have now got an agreement that the bill, which has moved second reading, will go out over the Christmas recess, the intersession period, for extensive public hearings, and we will come back and review that testimony and proceed with the bill through the final stages.

I want to simply say to my friends opposite that I hope, just in caucus but in cabinet, they have learned a lesson. I do not know what happened, but I know that these things can occur from time to time. But if there is a government policy that is important and absolutely central to the economic and social wellbeing of Ontario, it is surely Hydro policy that is contained in Bill 118.

That policy, since its introduction, has been characterized by contention, confusion, contradiction now and then. I have said on a number of previous occasions what the government wants with respect to Hydro policy is to have a more open and a more accountable relationship for the gargantuan public corporation, and particularly its relationships with the government, the Legislature and the people of Ontario. That, I think, is a highly commendable objective and one I support absolutely.

But we have seen some things in the last couple of weeks that I think really diminish public support for this government's ability to deliver on that promise. I want to simply review a couple of aspects. The whole question of the role of Mr Eliesen, the new chairman and chief executive officer, is one I have previously canvassed on a number of occasions, and I do not think it needs to be reviewed to any great extent this afternoon. But I was really struck when the Minister of Energy—who this day is about to hold a press conference in my constituency, I was told by his office in Pembroke just a few hours ago—came in here the other day and say: "Well, now, I've got some news. We're not going to be paying the chairman the $400,000 we thought, but we'll now be paying him $260,000."

Interjection.

Mr Conway: I am just simply summarizing the data that we have it.

Interjection.

Mr Conway: The members opposite are all welcome to get into this debate. I am sure there is another perspective. I just want to say to my friends opposite that they brought that bill forward through the committee stage at cabinet. It was brought presumably to a full cabinet meeting at least on one occasion, the imprimatur of the Treasury bench, the cabinet, was put on it and then it was brought in here in early June, so surely they had a discussion around its core principles.

I just make the point that in the first month of legislative scrutiny, they have backed down on the directive that was absolutely unbelievable and sweeping, a major principle of that bill, and I think they have moved in the right direction. My first question remains: How the hell did it ever get there in the first place? How did that happen?

Second, I will admit not to the same degree of importance but optically of significance, is the whole question of who hires and who sets the salary of the chairman and chief executive officer. If I were advancing a policy that said I was going to make this a more open and accountable relationship, it seems to me I would not change that policy backwards to delegate that responsibility down to the board.

The other day we saw the minister bring back a second amendment. As a government, it now has announced its plan to take back that responsibility, and as a cabinet it is going to set that salary and most of the terms and conditions of the employment of the chairman and CEO. I congratulate them because it is the right decision, but I ask again, how is it that those two ingredients were ever allowed in that bill in the first place, since it was their policy to be open and accountable, presumably more open and more accountable than previous governments had been in that connection?

I make a final point on this. When the minister made his announcement the other day, I thought he deserved some credit. I went out into the hall. He had just had a scrum and he said: "On the salary question, it wasn't my decision. It wasn't the decision of the cabinet. It was entirely a matter of the munificence and the public-spiritedness of Marc Eliesen." I thought to myself, is this not an interesting development?

Before I get into that little story, I should add that it was stated by the Minister of Energy in a scrum, not in the House, that Mr Eliesen would be receiving the $260,000 salary effective last Thursday, I think it was. Interesting.

In this House I was told by no lesser person than the Premier himself: "Oh, not to worry. We're going to refer these salary issues to the Ontario Energy Board. They're going to review it and the legislative committee is going to review it, and you can be assured, Mr Conway," he said here and elsewhere, "that Mr Eliesen will just be getting a deputy minister's salary until that point," namely the passage of the bill and the completion of the OEB review, which seemed to me not an unreasonable position.

I heard that from the font of all knowledge, Gerry McAuliffe's mouthpiece, the Premier himself, and then was told by a lesser light, the Minister of Energy, "Oh no, the Premier had it all wrong." The OEB might be having a review, the legislative committee might be having a review, but the salary had been decided, apparently definitively, on the basis of Mr Eliesen's munificence, on the basis of Mr Eliesen's civic-mindedness.

I just want to tell the members opposite, who are good people, who work hard and have a tough job, I hope they think a little bit about what this Hydro policy looks like. If I ever heard a transparent abdication of ministerial responsibility, it is this statement: "Oh, no, we didn't decide. Mr Eliesen, on his own volition, made this decision."

What does that tell us about the future of openness and accountability? I just simply say this has been a tortured and tortuous affair in just the first three months, and by my reckoning we have eight to 10 months yet to go. I really do look forward to that day in May or June of next year when we come back here to talk about the next phase of this endlessly fascinating NDP Hydro policy.

I want to talk a little bit about and conclude with some observations around the budgetary policy of the government, because clearly no supply motion can be complete without some kind of brief commentary at this point with respect to how the government is performing, in so far as its budget plan is concerned.

Here again I say to my friends in the chamber that we seem to be riding quite a bronco. We seem to be gyrating from profligacy to restraint. Last year, newly minted, the Rae government could not do enough. Yes, there was a vague understanding that there was a recession out there.

Hon Ms Gigantes: We had a $30-million surplus to work with last year.

Mr Wiseman: It was $300 million.

The Acting Speaker: Again, I am going to ask the Minister of Housing to refrain from interjecting. There has been considerable noise from the government benches that on occasion has made it difficult for me to hear the member speaking. I would appreciate everyone's co-operation.

Mr Conway: I have to say, in a fairminded way, that the member for Ottawa Centre is right in her observation. Those terrible Grits left a Treasury that was a little more empty than had been indicated. I accept full responsibility for that. I have to tell my friend the member for Ottawa Centre that I suspect if some of that previous generation of wire pullers and manipulators had figured out that the recession was going to hit as hard and as deeply as it did, we might not have had a certain event around September 6. But she is absolutely right in indicating that the Treasury was more bare. It was not just bare, as a result of a very serious recession; it was not a happy budgetary situation that the new government encountered.

I thought it interesting a year ago that my good friend the member for Nickel Belt, on many occasions, went to some considerable pains to say: "You know, it really wasn't Nixon's fault. There was no clear evidence that this recession was as savage as it turned out to be. The projections just nosedived in that second quarter, and by the time we got into the third quarter it was even worse." I think the NDP engaged in some interesting bookkeeping around its first budget. I was particularly interested to see what it did about writing off some of the bad debts, so-called Stadium Corp debts. They seem to want to dine out on that account more than once. They wrote it off last year, but according to their latest speeches they want to resurrect it and write it off a second and a third time. I suppose it is not unusual for the business of politics.

But I am serious. When the NDP took office, it was quite clear that it was a new day. They had a number of commitments they felt they had to make, and I have said, with some degree of sharpness in my voice, that the New Democratic Party seems to be very keen to settle accounts with its friends in the common front from the electoral campaign.

When I look at this year just passed, October 1, 1990, to October 1, 1991, some people have done better than others with the NDP. I am going to observe one more time that its friends from the common front in the electoral contest of 1990, the doctors, the teachers and the public servants, who were very famous in that electoral campaign—I will never forget the sight of that group of people—dispassionate, disinterested souls, each one—how they embraced the New Democratic Party.

It appears to have been a worthwhile embrace. A year later the doctors, the public servants and the teachers have not done too badly. They have done better than the ordinary citizens working in my part of eastern Ontario. I am not, of course, here to lay any particular criticism on teachers, the doctors and the public servants. You take what you can get. I just had that feeling that the boomerang on the Treasury bench was somewhat weakened in its resolve in so far as dealing with its friends from the common front was concerned. I can only judge by results and the doctors and public servants and teachers have, in comparative terms, done not too badly at the end of year one. I think that simply ought to be observed.

Spending year over year—that is, the first year of the NDP budgetary plan—is up 13.4%. The wage bill for the Ontario public service is up 14.5% in one of the worst recessionary periods in 50 years.

Mr Runciman: Of course, you added 8,000 civil servants. That doesn't matter.

Mr Conway: Well, my friend from Leeds-Grenville has engaged the debate. I have to tell him that the Brockville Recorder was interesting the other day. I see that Frank Miller went to Brockville to toast the prize catch of the 1981 electoral contest, and they made a fetching couple, Frank Miller and the member for Leeds-Grenville. Boy, they were a fetching pair in the Brockville Recorder, a felicitous example of progressive conservatism. I can just imagine being down and out in Elizabethtown and facing unemployment and the prospect of not much food in the larder, and on a cold November day embracing the member for Leeds-Grenville. That would be my idea of an encounter of some particular kind.

At any rate, I want to come back to what the government did in its first year. There was a lot of spending. There was not very much restraint, and I do not expect social democrats to be very restraining. I see that in the end even in Sweden it is all over. Even the Swedes have reached a point—

Mr Bisson: It took 60 years.

Mr Conway: It took 60 years; the member is absolutely right. But it was quite a bounce when it came. My point is that in the first year we had a lot of pretty good spending. Then of course comes Honey Harbour and the Premier has an encounter himself. He has encountered something someplace. He might have encountered the ghost of the member for Welland-Thorold in some corner in York South; I do not know. But he gets to Honey Harbour and restraint is the order of the day. He made some very interesting comments at Honey Harbour and in the subsequent weeks of September.

We then get a salary freeze on members, and I say to that, "Hurray." We get a salary freeze for 1% of the Ontario public service, and I say, "Hurray." Then we get nothing on the rest of the public service. We do not get any of the even optical signs that some of those perks of power are going to be constrained.

Perhaps it was unwise, but do members know what I expected to see? I expected to see the Chairman of Management Board bring on a silver platter about 150 American Express cards and just lay them before the table and "This proves we really are serious. We as cabinet ministers and as deputy ministers are going to start buying our own lunches, maybe even our own dinners."

Mrs Sullivan: Drinks?

Mr Conway: No, there is a new policy on drinks and congratulate the Attorney General for his initiative. I just want to take the member for Perth out for a coffee to explain to her how it works. If it is a prestigious coffee, it will be a very different kind of luncheon. At any rate, I am waiting for the government, which is so committed to restraint, to bring forward some sign that the government is perhaps going to be reined in a bit. I see from the comments on the Attorney General that the hour may almost be at hand.

Hon Mr Hampton: I was wondering if you'd volunteer to give us your expense forms.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The cross-floor interjections between the member and the Attorney General are contributing to the debate.

Mr Conway: I will be very happy to. There is not a very Democrat with whom I would not be prepared to compare my expenses; in fact, I would welcome the opportunity. Sixteen years have taught me one thing: that if there is an oxymoron, it is "NDP restraint." It is a contradiction in terms. Fred Burr, oh yes. The kind of socialism Fred Burr represents is an old order. That is the Stanley Howles/J. S. Woodsworth tradition, and I do not think I could compete with that; I belong to a different generation. I am not with that bunch of profligates? Any day, anywhere, I am one of them. I am prepared to take a lot of lectures, but I will take a lecture on restraint, particularly in-house restraint, and in the NDP stretches my Christian charity to a near breaking point.

I do not say that in any kind of mean-spirited way, because I have to say that if ever there was a failure in this respect as government House leader, it was me. When I look back about what I tried to do down there and what that did to my reputation—if ever I had two wasted years, it was my experience of going down there and encountering that kind of opposition. I learned things from the NDP about how to spend public money that I did not think even existed in human nature. But I am getting off the subject.

Ms S. Murdock: No kidding.

Mr Conway: I want to say to my friend the member for Sudbury: No kidding. I will repeat that for her benefit: No kidding. The NDP, on internal parliamentary restraint: No kidding.

There will come a day when the ebb and flow of electoral politics will wash this government from office. It may be five years, it may be three years, it may be 10 years, it may be 20 years, but I want to be there the day they render the seals of office. I want to walk through that process and see what will have happened to some of those internal accounts, because I do not think there is an optim-etrist working in Creation who could fit me with spectacles suitable enough for that experience.

We saw the statement, the mid-course correction, of the Treasurer two weeks ago on the subject of restraint. I have said before that the government did not do very much. In fact, it did very little. I noticed in the second-quarter statement issued last week that we had some interesting information. A couple of things caught my eye. The deficit is up by $20 million. Corporate tax revenues are off by $70 million.

But when I look at the operating deficit, I see that the current outlook suggests that the operating deficit is now off by $172 million from the budget plan. That has been made up by a very interesting squeeze on the capital account, $158 million, so it looks like the consolidated deficit then is just off by some $14 million as a result of that. But anyone who knows anything knows you can only play that game for a few quarters. I suspect that the third- and fourth-quarter numbers are going to be as interesting this year as they were last year, and if they are, I think the Treasurer is going to be coming back with some very interesting news.

I do make the point that a lot of people I represent, including a lot of people who I suspect voted for the NDP, expected that when the Treasurer stood in his place here a couple of weeks ago, we were going to see more real decision-making around restraint for this fiscal year than we saw. What we saw was a transfer of most of the pain into another fiscal year, and I repeat, when you look at that pain and realize that they are also putting off some of the capital expenditures to which they have committed themselves, the budgetary plan for 1992-93 gets more interesting as we speak.

I simply want to make the other observation that in my travels around eastern Ontario particularly, I do not sense that we are experiencing very much of a recovery. What I sense is that we have got what one wag has called the dead cat bounce, that there is not very much activity of a positive kind.

Last Friday afternoon in my constituency I invited 15 small business people in the west Renfrew county area to have lunch with me in Barry's Bay, just to talk about what they were feeling and what they were experiencing. These are good people all involved in small business in a typically rural part of eastern Ontario. I just want to report that I have never encountered a group which felt as beleaguered and as wanting in confidence about the economy as that group on that occasion.

Their concerns were not new. They are very upset about what they see as just out-of-control government spending at all levels. They have a sense that a lot of good programs that are well intentioned are not very well designed and they rain on the wrong part of the garden, if I can use that analogy, but a very real sense that the recession is not ending.

In that part of the province we have farmers and sawmillers and loggers. I am sure my friends opposite, like the member for Rainy River and others, will know that the resource economy in this province is hurting like I have never seen it hurt before. Hundreds of people are losing their jobs every month, and we know only too well that the winter of 1991-92 does not suggest very much recovery for those sectors of the resource economy which are so vital to so many communities in northern, eastern and southwestern Ontario, where in many cases the mine or the mill is the only game in town.

I simply want to say that against the backdrop of this crisis in confidence, against the growing evidence that the hurt is real and palpable—it is now touching people who have not been touched by this kind of economic dislocation ever before in their lives. The bankruptcy numbers that are turned out every month indicate just how many people, individually and corporately, are being affected.

I suppose if there is one message that I bring from that luncheon meeting on Friday of last week, it is, “Do people understand?” “Do members of the government and members of the opposition,” my luncheon guest said last Friday, “really understand just how deep the hurt is, how widespread the pain that is now being felt?” That question was a real question.

There has been a suggestion in some quarters that politicians are insulated and isolated from that. I like to believe it is not true, but I think as we head into this winter, we are going to have to understand that there is going to be an expectation of leadership from not just the government but all members of the Legislature.

I thought there was a very interesting article in that connection the other day in the Toronto Star. I am not going to read it, but I would certainly recommend it to my friends in the Legislature. It is by George Fallis, who is the chair of the department of economics at York University. It is in the Toronto Star of October 28. The heading of the article is “‘Us Against Them’ Mentality is Hurting the NDP’s Effort to Govern.”

I thought it was a very interesting article, not so much because it dealt with the NDP, but largely I suppose because it asked people in public office to understand that some of the old ways, the old nostrums of not just social democracy but the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party, are irrelevant to the current realities, and we had better understand that. I will just read one paragraph:

I thought that was a very interesting observation. I sense that he may be right, and we had better all understand that we are going to be judged by a different standard. The boomers look at these deficits and they are concerned in a way their parents perhaps were not concerned 15 or 20 years ago. I do not know about my friend from Ottawa, but I am struck by the number of people in the age category of 30 to 50 who will raise with me the concern around the deficit, and they are not prepared to tolerate levels of deficit we have lived with in the last 10 or 15 years. Public policy, irrespective of whether it is generated by social democrats or Liberals or Conservatives, is I think going to have to take that into account.

I want to repeat one line of this I think very excellent article, “Ontarians will pay the taxes for high-quality public services and social protection if the government provides the services efficiently, pragmatically and with fiscal responsibility.”

That leads me back to my rather mundane observations around marriage certificates and birth certificates. It sounds like a trifle, but to go home on a Saturday, with the problems we deal with here all week, and to meet somebody whose frustration has come to focus on: “Explain this to me, Mr Conway. Why has it taken three months to get a birth certificate, and I’m no further ahead now than I was three months ago?”

We may have our internal reasons about system difficulties, but the public expects that we are going to be able to deliver these services. I know the government, led by the ministers of Community and Social Services and Health—I cannot remember who now has the responsibility for long-term care. The public is going to expect that we are going to provide new services and maintain some traditional services for the elderly, but they are going to expect that we are going to deliver those perhaps rather differently than we have in the past, and more efficiently because we cannot and must not imagine that we can take as we have over the last 10 or 15 years. We have lost that option and I think it is going to mean a significant change to the way we do business here.

My constituents in Renfrew county want me to say to this government that they expect that it is going to behave as a social democratic government. They know they are not a Conservative government. They know they are not even a Liberal government. They are not unhappy, quite frankly, that they have abandoned some of their cockamammy electoral commitments. They look at their energy policy and their Hydro policy and just shake their heads at why they persist in a policy that for people in rural Ontario seems so iniquitous and so unfair.

A lot of my constituents would be very happy if this government rethought its energy policy, but they expect the Rae government is going to get serious with restraint. They would applaud the measures of a couple of weeks ago, but they would expect that restraint discipline to be much more pervasive throughout the operations of government. They expect that next year the year-over-year growth in the wage bill in the public service will be nowhere near 14.5%. They will expect the government is going to work not just with its friends in organized labour but that it is going to get serious about consulting with ordinary citizens who are not unionized, who are involved in small business, medium-sized business or, yes, even big business.

Just a few weeks ago we heard from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business about its growing frustration around what consultation means with this government. My friend the member for Halton Centre will have to help me here, but I think John Bulloch went out o meeting and said, "One may as well consult with the NDP government."

Mrs Sullivan: One meeting or 200.

Mr Conway: One meeting or 200: It does not appear like a difference.

I got a letter the other day from the agricultural group concerned about resources and the environment. It was headed by Mr Jeff Wilson, chairman of AGCare, Agricultural Groups Concerned About Resources and the Environment. I am not going to read the letter.

Interjection.

Mr Conway: I do not know who these people are. The member for Huron might be right. It may not be very accurate, but what it says about their frustration around consultation reminds me of what the CFIB is saying. It reminds me of the Perth Courier editorial. Just sitting around and listening to people across the table does not mean for consultation. Consultation does not, on the other hand, mean that you have to agree with everything people say. But clearly people expect there is going to be some meaningful in those dialogues and in that discourse.

When we hear of some of the new initiatives, when my friends out there putting their hard-earned money at risk to get employment and to start a new business hear about the government's plans with respect to amending labour relations policy they just become catatonic. They are much more likely to withdraw from making any investment in this province than anything else.

I say to my friends opposite what has been said by so many people before: If we are going to have those jobs, if we are going to have the wealth, both old and new, that we need to maintain the kind of social safety net we all need, we have to generate that wealth. That means people have to put their capital in the market, put it at risk in a way that, quite frankly, not too many are doing at present.

I am going to conclude my remarks by saying that 13 years have passed. We have seen a great deal from this government. We have seen a lot of turning. We have seen a lot of blinking. We have seen everything from morality to cynicism in politics. I will not try to get that word out of my mouth again. I think the initiation is over. This government is going to be judged now by what it does, by how it performs in a contemporary environment, whereas the good professor from York University has rightly observed, people are going to judge not just members of the Legislature, but members of the government by a new standard. That standard is going to be how efficiently, pragmatically and effectively the government can deliver those services we need, not just in the social policy area but in the economic development field within the context of fiscal responsibility. Before we grant interim supply to the ravenous appetite of this government, I thought we should observe some of these happenings in our Ontario.

Mrs Sullivan: I want to comment on some of the remarks presented by the member. They certainly are pertinent to the supply debate which is, of course, surrounding fiscal policy and which is an expression in itself of the economic and social policy of this government.

I am hearing from my constituents, and the member has alluded to this kind of reaction, that in fact we are seeing a confused, muddled government, making decisions and then backtracking on them; bringing forward issues that have not been completely explored through the consultative process; creating, itself, uncertainty which is leading to a flight of capital.

If we have to be concerned about anything in this time of economic distress in Ontario, as well as in the rest of Canada—the member has clearly pointed it out—it is where the new capital investment, expansion and wealth creation are going to occur and how the activities and the signals provided by the provincial government are going to contribute to the increase in capital investment.

We all know what has happened, of course, and the member has underlined it. Confidence in Ontario has seriously deteriorated through the actions of this government, whether energy policy through the Ontario Hydro bill, environmental policy and the uncertainties created by the Minister of the Environment and her various announcements, or economic policies and the continuing levels of debt and deficit we will see for the rest of the term of this government. These are all issues which are very serious matters and are going to affect the ongoing economic and social health of Ontario.

Mr Arnott: I am very pleased to respond with a couple of points with respect to the comments of the member for Renfrew North. I missed the first part of the speech but I heard the tail-end of it.

I would like to pick up on one suggestion he made about Mr Jeff Wilson who wrote to the Premier, I believe, with concerns on behalf of his group known as AGCare. I know Jeff quite well; he is a resident of my riding. He represents, through AGCare, literally thousands of Ontario farmers on the environmental issues. The government has to start listening to this group and has to start understanding what it is saying, and real consultation is going to be the order of the day. It does not exist at the present time.

I seem to recall when I was in my position as executive assistant to the former member for Wellington that the member for Wellington had to bring this question on behalf of AGCare to the House a couple of years ago when the former Minister of the Environment, the member for St Catharines, refused to meet with AGCare with respect to the concerns it had about the environment. It went on for quite a lengthy period of time in the past and I would like to bring that to the member's attention at this time.

Hon Mr Hampton: I usually do not get in on these two-minute contributions, but the member's speech brought back memories for me. You see, Mr Speaker, he spoke at length about profligate spending and money proliferating everywhere and so on.

I guess I want to put it in the form of a question. I have not been here for 16 years like the member for Renfrew North. I have only been here for four. But in my short history here I remember the previous government brought to the House a plan that created chairs of committees, vice-chairs, whips and deputy whips, deputy speakers and associate deputy speakers, and all these things had a fairly hefty pay increase associated with them.

In fact when we sat down, I remember looking at it and saying to myself, "When you add up the number of cabinet members and all these extra positions, every member in the Liberal caucus is going to get a substantial pay increase over what every other member of the House gets." I thought to myself, "Now this member lectures us on lining pockets." All I say is how quickly the perspective changes.

The Acting Speaker: This may be an appropriate time to close the proceedings for today. Would you wish to respond before we close for the day?

Mr Conway: I think the procedure is we normally conclude these. That is the way it has been done. I want to say very quickly to my friend the Attorney General, I will not answer his question in a public way. I tell him that he should talk to David Reville and get the details, because I do not want to embarrass my good friend the Attorney General. He raises a very interesting point and I will give him a list of people if he wants to talk to those individuals about where a lot of that pressure came from. But Mr Reville is better able to provide for the education of the Attorney General in this regard.

I also want to make a point, that my friend from Wellington made the observation that the AGCare people have had the problem of getting in to see the Minister of the Environment for some time. That may be the case. I was just struck by what they said in their letter as to how they thought the consultation process was skewed against them. That may or may not be a fair charge, but it fits into the piece. As I say, I did not raise it in isolation. When I look at other elements of this piece, it starts to look like some thing of a pattern.

In conclusion, particularly to my friends in the cabinet that I come back to my first point. I know the game in which they are now engaged as far as news management and management of the Legislature is concerned. They can do whatever they want. It is a very risky business. It is a game that other governments have played, generally with not much success, and they will ignore and manipulate the Legislature in so overt a fashion at their peril. Occasional like interim supply remind me that Robert Kennedy was right: There are ways of dealing with this kind of transparent manipulation.

The Acting Speaker: I want to thank all members for their co-operation in allowing the member for Renfrew North to conclude this section of the debate. The debate will resume with the normal rotation.

The House adjourned at 1803.

Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Subscription information may be obtained from: Sessional Subscription Service, Publications Ontario, Ministry of Government Services, 5th Floor, 880 Bay Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone (416) 326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1 (800) 668-9938.

Table des matières

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au (416) 325-7400.

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi qu'à celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1, page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Wednesday 30 October 1991

The House met at 1330.

Prayers.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

FOREST MANAGEMENT

Mr Brown: The managed forest rebate tax program results in changes. I will make my case using a real example.

Peter Schlifenbaum is a young, European-trained forester. His dream is to provide a sustained yield of high-quality hardware from his land in central Ontario. Peter employs dozens of local people. He has invested thousands of dollars in state-of-the-art computer equipment.
He has spent over $100,000 on silviculture work last year just to improve the production and quality of his forest.

Peter is in the managed forest rebate program, as are thousands of other private land owners. The program has an upper limit of $25,000, a very small portion of his tax credit, which has increased to $200,000 in just four years. It has doubled.

Peter has a problem, an expense he cannot control. I believe there is a remedy to the shortcomings of the rebate program. I suggest that people enrolled in the program must operate in response to some regulated or approved plan, perhaps involving professional foresters. The plan must be available to those sites which have a minimum productivity and the ceiling on the rebate should be linked to provide forest management if forest management is being done.

ONTARIO HYDRO

Mr Jordan: I rise today to ask the Minister of Energy to initiate a complete review of the operation, maintenance and administration budget of Ontario Hydro. This is where the costs are out of control.

In 1990, OMA costs amounted to $1.9 billion, an increase of $393 million over 1989. This increase, according to Hydro's annual report, was primarily due to inflationary pressures on labour and other costs, higher program costs for maintenance and restoration activities and increased pension costs.

Other factors contribute to the uncontrolled spending in operation, maintenance and administration. Salaries and the proportion of supervisory staff to clerical staff are excessive. I have received numerous calls from constituents complaining of overstaffing in regional offices. The management of the utility has become top-heavy. In my riding of Lanark-Renfrew there are eight utility managers and three rural managers reporting to a regional manager.
Residents are confused over who is responsible for what action.

Inefficient management in Ontario Hydro is counterproductive to economic development and new investment in the province of Ontario.

CHILD CARE

Mr Kormos: This is art, and it is art with a message.
The artist in this case is young Jeffrey Carusetta of Colbeck Drive down in Welland, and the caption here says it all: "I don't want this man to close the day care centre because I like playing with my friends."

J. C. Bald school, which is a place of day care for a whole lot of kids like Jeffrey whose families have relied on that day care centre for four years now, is being reclaimed by the board of education. The Young Men's Christian Association out of St Catharines has been running quality, affordable day care there for those kids and now it is being told, "As of September 1992, no more, gone."

These families are looking to this government for help.
These families are saying to the ministries involved, "We understand that there have to be studies done, but our children's futures cannot be studied in perpetuity."

These kids need day care. These families need care. We have for the past four years, as a result of the partnership between the board of education and the exemplary work of the YMCA, facilitated and accommodated their needs.
Let's go one further and make sure that we do not leave them hanging out to dry.

I am talking about people like Jeffrey Carusetta; I am talking about people like Sandra Smelsky and her kids—she lives over on Gadsby Avenue—and people like Lynda Cooke of Newleaf Crescent whose kids go to J. C. Bald day care too. They need our help. They need it now. They cannot wait.

RETAIL STORE HOURS

Mr Daigeler: We have already talked at length in this House about the many problems surrounding the NDP's flawed Sunday shopping legislation. We have mentioned the unfairness of the bill and how the NDP is unaware of the economic realities of today's marketplace. Cross-border communities are just one example of how the unfairness of this legislation will hurt many retailers in the province.

Today we have evidence of another sector that faces job losses because of the NDP Sunday shopping policies.
The Ontario Discount Drug Association has released today the results of a study by independent auditors showing that 3,000 drugstore workers' jobs are unfairly in jeopardy under the NDP policies because small drugstores are allowed to stay open while stores with more than 7,500 feet of retail space must close.

Why does the government policy on Sunday shopping make a distinction between the size of stores? Why is it that employees of large stores are forced to abide by a common pause day but employees of small drugstores are not?

The news conference today by the Ontario Discount Drug Association points out another inconsistency in the NDP Sunday shopping legislation. All these inconsistencies together make us ask, where is the fairness, the equality and the justice that the NDP has promised in its new Sunday shopping legislation?

RESIDENTS' PRIVACY

Mr Stockwell: Once again, I am compelled to make a statement in this House regarding a situation in my riding that has been mishandled by the Ministry of Housing.

Last week the ministry promised to send a representative to a meeting of the home owners of Wareside Road to discuss the ongoing problem between them and some of the tenants of a Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority complex that shares a common property line. On Thursday the ministry sent the property manager of the MTHA complex. How this man could represent the Ministry of Housing in this dispute is beyond me and shows the complete lack of seriousness with which the Ministry of Housing regards this issue.

Some of the residents of this complex are making life miserable for the people living on Wareside Road. There are children living on this street who have never been in their own backyards without supervision from their parents. Finally, after 15 years, MTHA agreed that the only solution was to build a wall. Now, as a delaying tactic, MTHA is making the absolutely unreasonable demand that the residents pay for half the construction of this wall.

I would agree completely with the proposal if the residents were throwing back the steel bars, the chairs, the bicycle parts and other assorted human waste that is being thrown into their backyards. I would agree that the residents of Wareside Road should pay for half the wall if they were responding to the loud stereos at 2 am by turning their own stereos up, but they are not.

I am simply pleading that the Ministry of Housing solve this problem once and for all before it turns into something much more serious.

ANNIVERSARY OF ENCYCLICAL

Mr G. Wilson: This year, 1991, marks the 100th anniversary of Rerum Novarum, on the condition of labour, an encyclical of Pope Leo XIII that is considered to be the charter document of Catholic social teaching. The event was celebrated last May 15 at St Mary's Cathedral in Kingston with a special mass.

In the encyclical, Leo XIII speaks of workers who have been "given over, isolated and defenceless, to the callousness of employers and the greed of unrestrained competition." Fundamentally, he was concerned that economic wealth should serve people, not oppress them. Thus, among other things, he supported the formation of unions to protect and speak for workers.

In his stimulating sermon on the subject last May, Archbishop F. J. Spence traced the Catholic church's social ministry to the passion for justice of the Hebrew prophets. "It is evident," the archbishop said, "that the church's social mission is both old and new, both a tradition to be shared and a challenge to be fulfilled."

Regardless of our personal religious beliefs, I believe we as legislators can benefit from considering the central ideas of Rerum Novarum in our efforts to ensure that everyone, not just the rich and powerful, is able to participate in the creation and sharing of wealth in our society.

On the 100th anniversary of Rerum Novarum, Archbishop Spence said: "We express our gratitude to those who have struggled so hard for social justice in the past. At the same time, we are concerned about serious social and economic changes that are presently taking place."

I suggest the tradition of social thought and action begun 100 years ago will help us address these changes in a democratic, just way.

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

Mr H. O'Neil: I would like to ask the Premier if he would pay a little attention to this statement. I rise today to pay tribute to the Prince and Princess of Wales following their visit to Ontario. Their genuine concern about the quality of the lives of the people of this province was evident throughout the tour.

During these tough times, as we grapple with a series of economic and constitutional problems, it is useful for us to reflect on the strength and usefulness of institutions such as the monarchy.

I note that the Premier attended many of the engagements involving the royal couple. I am sure the Premier noticed that the Prince and Princess are held in the highest regard by the people of Ontario, who came out in droves to show their support for the monarchy. I trust the Premier has reflected on this experience during the past week, and I hope he has come to the realization that his decision to abolish the oath to the Queen for police officers was a mistake and does not reflect the wishes of the people of this province.

The Premier has said on several occasions that he is not afraid to acknowledge his mistakes. I urge him to admit that he has made a mistake, and I call on the Premier to reinstate the oath to the Queen for police officers and other public servants. All it takes is for the Premier to turn around and look at the Solicitor General and say, "Solicitor General, reinstate that oath." Will the Premier do that today?

COMMUNITY SERVICES

Mr McLean: My statement is for the Minister of Health, and it concerns her government's inappropriate use of the taxpayers' money.

The NDP Agenda for People claims the government will establish the appropriate supports to enable the treatment of individuals in their own homes or in facilities located in their communities. I believe that by establishing such community outreach programs as diabetes awareness centres, homemaker services, psychiatric care centres or home care nursing services, we would save the hundreds of dollars a day a hospital bed costs and lessen the strain on our already overburdened hospitals.

I would also urge the minister to consider converting vacant beds at the Huronia Regional Centre for the care and treatment of Alzheimer patients, psychiatric patients and other chronic care patients. This would be an effective use of vacant beds and free up badly needed beds for acute care patients at Orillia Soldiers' Memorial Hospital.

I am not suggesting that the minister's government spend more money. I am suggesting that her government spend the money that it has more wisely. Common sense tells us that economic opportunity, social justice and health care cannot be attained just by tossing money around. They should use the resources already available and spend taxpayers' money more wisely.

IMMIGRANT AND REFUGEE SERVICES

Mr Winninger: I am pleased to congratulate the Kurdish community of London upon the opening of London's first Kurdish community centre. London's 250 Kurds, one of the smallest ethnic groups in London, will share news, take part in educational seminars, find interpreters and help each other help those still suffering. Many London's Kurdish community have not seen their families for years, have no idea where they are or even if they are alive.

Although the world's focus on the plight of Kurds in the Middle East has diminished, persecution continues. While Saddam Hussein is still in power and their relatives in Kurdistan are still refugees in their own land, a community centre in London is vital to focus and unite those who have been forced to leave their native country.

For those who have been displaced from their homes, who have seen family, friends and relatives killed and who have survived starvation themselves, learning about services to help immigrants adjust to Canada is paramount. I am pleased to hear, therefore, the recent announcement of the Minister of Citizenship that immigrants and refugees living in London will be assured access to settlement and integration services, thanks to continued support for local migrant aid and multicultural agencies under the Ontario settlement and integration program.

Several agencies, including the London Cross-Cultural Learning Centre and Women Immigrants of London Counselling Services, will receive a total of $240,000. I commend these agencies for the fine work they do in counselling, educating and providing support services to immigrants and refugees such as the Kurds of London.

VISITOR

The Speaker: I invite all members of the House to welcome to our midst this afternoon a former member for the riding of Lanark-Renfrew and indeed a former minister of the crown. Seated in the members' gallery west is Mr George Gomme.

PENSION LEGISLATION

Hon Mr Cooke: I am pleased to inform the House of my intention to introduce amendments that will facilitate significant reforms to one of the province's largest pension funds. Next month I will be introducing amendments to the legislation that governs the Ontario municipal employees retirement system, commonly referred to as OMERS.

I would like to describe the most important of these proposed changes. The amendments will allow OMERS to guarantee the indexing of their members' pension benefits. All pension benefits will be adjusted for inflation at the rate of 70% of the annual increase in the consumer price index. The maximum rate of indexing in any year would be 6%. This year the board will also be able to increase pension benefits on an ad hoc basis by an additional 30% of the change in the consumer price index. In combination with the 70%, this will provide full indexation for 1992.

Another important amendment deals with the spousal survivor benefits. Formerly, if members married after retirement their spouses were not entitled to receive survivor benefits. The amendments will extend coverage to include spouses of members who marry after retirement. As well, all members will now be able to retire after 30 years of service without a reduction in their pension if they are within 10 years of normal retirement age.

I am pleased to report that this government has listened to OMERS's requests and recommendations and responded. The cost of providing these enhancements will come from the fund's surplus and from an increase of 0.5% in contribution rates from both the employers and the employees. In the past, employees could not purchase past service until the employer entered into an agreement with OMERS. Now individual members will be able to purchase past service in the OMERS plan independent of the employer's approval. The member must pay the cost of purchasing past service.

Once the amendments are passed and proclaimed, employers and employees will share equally in any surplus or deficit. These and other amendments will bring the act into compliance with the provincial Pension Benefits Act and the federal Income Tax Act as well as provide enhanced benefits to members. Additional amendments will deal with general policy and housekeeping issues.

All of these amendments are important to the members of one of the province's largest pension plans, a plan with assets of $11.7 billion. This is good news indeed for OMERS 230,000 pensioners and active members, who include municipal employees, local board employees and non-teaching staff of school boards. I am pleased our government is helping improve the quality of their lives.

I would like to point out that representatives from the OMERS board are with us today in the lower gallery.

RESPONSES

PENSION LEGISLATION

Mr Mahoney: I must say that it is delightful to finally have a statement from a minister of this government. It is about time that the Premier started laying some of the work that the government is doing out on the table for us to discuss in this place.

In a spirit of generosity, I also congratulate the minister because I think these are amendments that are overdue. They are amendments that indeed our government was working on and did not have the opportunity to introduce before we were—

Hon Mr Philip: Sure you were.

Mr Mahoney: Are they upset about something over there? I am trying to compliment them and they do not even seem to know how to take a compliment, for goodness' sake.

It is nice that the minister finally brought out something that is beneficial to the 230,000 municipal employees around this province, and I congratulate him for doing that. I will of course, as is my responsibility, express some of the concerns I hope the minister will take into account in bringing in these amendments.

First of all, I would also like to congratulate him very much on extending coverages to include spouses of members who marry after retirement. I think that is a proper and appropriate thing to do in this modern society.

I find the contribution of 0.5% from both employers and employees interesting. I seem to recall an equal contribution in the teachers' pension when NDP members on this side of the House were screaming that our government was being draconian and unfair in requiring equal contributions by the employer as well as the employee, particularly the employee. At the time we thought it was the fair thing to do—we still do think it was the fair thing to do—but the members of that party of course mobilized that union to express some concerns, which is all fair in love, war and politics.

I am concerned about the timing of this. When I got the call that there would be an announcement by the minister, I was wondering if it would be with regard to the issues we were talking about yesterday, Mr Speaker, since this minister is also the House leader, and I thought that your meeting this morning had been so successful in resolving the differences that you might have finally got the House leader to agree to be a House leader, but it is not that.

Then I had thought with some hope that it might deal with the MUSH grants to municipalities, universities, school boards and hospitals, because they are waiting to hear and this is the time of year traditionally that those announcements are made. I wondered, being somewhat cynical from a number of years in public life, if the timing—particularly when you consider that it says, "Next month I will be introducing amendments"—had anything to do with giving a helping hand to the NDP members who are running for municipal council. Far be it from me to suggest that, but it did cross my somewhat simplistic mind that this might be an attempt by the minister and by the government to prop up Mr Layton and others who would like to say what wonderful things this government is doing.

I know that members of the board invest in many worthwhile projects and I know they are free to do that in the real estate industry. Generally, I support that kind of use of pension funds, but they should recognize and I think just be cautious—on behalf of my party I would encourage them to be cautious—about certain investments when it says here that they will share in the surpluses and the deficits.

That is fine in sharing in surpluses. I would hope surpluses would go into perhaps a reserve account for some long-term thinking in case at some point in time some of the real estate projects that have been invested in or some other investments in the private market go sour. Then they would have a reserve fund to call on in case this particular pension fund, albeit one of the largest and best protected the province, gets into some trouble.

I would ask the minister to work along with the board in monitoring the surpluses to ensure that they be used appropriately shore up any deficits rather than making quick decisions and taking those surpluses out.

Once again I hear rumours that the MUSH grants, municipalities are going to be flat-lined. I hear of concern during the municipal election from my Mayor Hazel and many others—I have to make a tribute to Hazel; the Premier can understand that—that this government will ignore their needs. I congratulate the minister for the announcement, but I add those words of caution and sincerely hope he will come out with the grants to the municipalities and the other agencies in this province very soon.

Mr Stockwell: Commenting on the announcement today by the Minister of Municipal Affairs, I have some grave concerns about the pensionable earnings and pension plans that are operated by governments at all levels, be it federal, provincial or municipal. Every time an enhancement is made to a municipal, federal or provincial program retirement package there is a cost. Now, yes, the cost is split in this instance, but the cost must always be borne at least 50%, as in this case, by the taxpayers. When we speak of the taxpayers, we are speaking about municipal taxpayers today and their home ownership taxes, apartment taxes or whatever. They must bear the brunt of any increase in contributions.

From the conversations I have with taxpayers at the municipal level they are very concerned. They have very real concerns about the affordability of municipal taxes. They have real concerns about provincial taxes and real concerns about federal taxes.

I understand how a group can come down here and negotiate a package that improves their pension. I have no doubt in my mind that this group from OMERS would endorse this package because it improves their pension. But when we examine it from the view of what a taxpayer must now fork over—and I do not have the numbers in front of me right now—I would assume that will be considerable sums of money. For Metropolitan Toronto, for the city of Toronto, for the cities of Etobicoke, North York and Scarborough, it is going to cost them more money they do not have.

I have some concerns not only at the municipal level but at the federal and provincial levels on the affordability of pension plans, and future actuarial accounts are suggesting they may not be affordable. I think before everyone breaks their arm patting themselves on the back, when the Minister of Municipal Affairs comes into the House tomorrow and announces an enhanced retirement package for some municipal employees, the taxpayers out there must always remember one thing: Every time the government negotiates a package it does not cost the Minister of Municipal Affairs any money; it does not cost the NDP any money; it costs the taxpayers money. They should look long and hard at these things before they break their arms patting themselves on the back.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr Elston: I have a question for the Premier. I note we have just had a press conference this morning about the potential loss of some 3,000 jobs in an industry that his legislation will make sure occurs. I noticed as well that the press is full of reports that he is about to spend hundreds of millions of dollars, however, to rescue some jobs at de Havilland. While all of us congratulate the steps taken to ensure the jobs are retained, I wonder if the the Premier can tell us exactly where the proposed strategy is that he announced on September 23 that was going to turn the economy around so that he would not have to lurch from the catastrophe to another?

Hon Mr Rae: I appreciate the question. I take it that the question is not intended as a criticism of the work this government is doing to respond to the particular crises we have as a government have to respond to. The question is one of how the government is dealing with all the time. The Treasurer is working away, as is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology, and there will be more announcements with respect to the government's economic plans this fall and through until the spring.

I would say to the interim Leader of the Opposition that the decisions we are making, for example, with respect to the negotiations we are carrying on with de Havilland, are fully intended to be constructive and to help not only in the saving of jobs but in the creation of new jobs. That is the situation in which we now find ourselves. We are having to respond to a number of crises as well as having to plan more effectively for the future. We are keeping on both tracks.

Mr Elston: He must have a foot on each track, and he is stretching things just a little bit to let us believe he has everything under control in this province. I have been in several areas where people are reeling under economic stress. I have spoken just recently with people in Barrie who wonder what is going to take place there since they have lost so many jobs in that community. There has been a response, although a loss of several hundred jobs is speculated for Kapuskasing, and a loss of jobs in Elliot Lake and a loss of jobs in Sault Ste Marie.

The Premier said here on September 23 that he was going to come forward with a program that would save the Ontario economy and help it to become more vigorous. All we have seen so far in any concrete fashion is the release of details of the labour relations material, an increase of some billion dollars in taxes that his government has taken, a release by the Ontario Hydro people to indicate that hydro rates are going to increase by 44% over the next three years as a minimum, all militating against the economic recovery he so boldly forecast as part of his statement.

When is the Premier going to tell us how those billion-dollar taxes, the hydro rate increases and loss of current jobs are going to fit into his economic recovery strategy?

Hon Mr Rae: I think the hard reality is that recovery is something we have to work at every day and I do not pretend it is easy at the moment. If he is looking for one single announcement on one single day that is going to produce the solution to all our problems, or thinks anyone on this side is saying we have all the problems under control, those are not the kinds of claims this government is making.

What we are saying is that we are working very hard with the private sector and that we are working very hard with the business community on a number of projects right now which we are hoping will come to fruition shortly, and we will be making a number of announcements over time that will indicate some of the positive steps we can take as a government, even given the very difficult circumstances in which we now find ourselves as a province.

Mr Elston: We have not been asking so much about announcements; we have been asking the Premier to fulfil his promise given to the Legislature on September 23. The Premier promised a comprehensive strategy to tell the people at de Havilland where they fit, to tell the people in Barrie where they fit, to tell the people in Kapuskasing where they fit and to tell the people in Hanover, where there have been job layoffs, where they fit.

All I am asking the Premier is, when is he bringing that comprehensive strategy forward so we can see that he actually intends to start to keep one of his promises?

Hon Mr Rae: I will just say that when we made the announcement with respect to Kapuskasing, the Leader of the Opposition was critical of it. When we made other suggestions with respect to—

Mr Elston: No; story-telling.

Mr Bradley: Don't miscarry.

Mr Elston: We want a better administration of this House.

The Speaker: Would the leader take his seat, please. There is clearly a difference of opinion. Does the Premier have a further response?

Hon Mr Rae: I will say to the Leader of the Opposition that we have been making a number of announcements and working on a number of projects at the same time as we are trying to develop a longer-term strategy for the province. The kinds of steps we have been taking with the companies involved and the kinds of negotiations we have been involved with, as difficult as they are, we think are an important element in beginning to point the way to some positive solutions.

LAND REGISTRATION

Mr Conway: My question is to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Regulations. It is one of great interest to people in rural Ontario and particularly today in rural southeastern Ontario.

It was on July 29 that the very distinguished Morrisburg lawyer, James Douglas Grenkie, QC, came before the standing committee on general government and argued quite effectively, I thought, that what the government was intending with respect to its land registry policy was not only unwise but that in his legal opinion it was illegal. Last night, in the General Division of the Ontario Court, Mr Justice Soubliere agreed that the Ontario government could not proceed because in his view that policy violated the provincial statute, namely, the Registry Act. What can the minister advise as to her next move in this endlessly fascinating government policy?

Hon Ms Churley: I have to agree with the member that it is an endlessly fascinating subject. I have received word of the court case decision. However, I have not yet received a copy of the judge's reasons for this decision. When we do, we will determine whether or not we will appeal this decision.

Mr Conway: In the minister's statement of government policy read to this House on May 7, 1991, it was clearly indicated that in the case of the Morrisburg land registry office, which has served the good people of Dundas county in southeastern Ontario for almost a century, that office would in fact be closed some time in mid-November 1991. What can she advise the people of Dundas county as to her intentions with respect to that announced state, with regard to the fact that today is October 30 and that her plan was to close that office within two to three weeks' time?

Hon Ms Churley: I can advise four land registry offices today that, as a result of the decision, at least the closing of these four offices will be delayed.

Mr Conway: I take it this means the offices that were scheduled for closure in Morrisburg, Alexandria, Prescott and Russell are the four offices about which we are speaking. If I am incorrect, I am sure she would be quite free to correct the record.

With regard to what the Ontario court has now ruled and with regard to what her own government did in that spectacular move in Lanark county a few weeks ago, would she as the responsible minister not now agree that in light of all we have heard and all we have seen, this policy is, for the moment at least, a shambles, that it should be entirely put on hold while calmer heads prevail and that the interests of rural Ontarians, whether they live in Dundas county or in north Wellington or in south Grey, will have better treatment from this government on this very important local service?

Hon Ms Churley: As I have said before on this subject, these are tough economic times. I still think the decision to eliminate these kinds of duplications in these tough economic times has to be done. They are not easy decisions but I think it was the right decision, and we will proceed with the other closings on schedule.

RETAIL STORE HOURS

Mr Carr: My question is to the Solicitor General. I had the pleasure of attending a news conference this morning that dealt with his Sunday shopping legislation. In fact, I also had the opportunity to go out on the steps during a protest this morning on that same piece of legislation. I heard from Monica McGregor, who spoke this morning and said that if their piece of legislation goes through, she will be going on welfare. I also heard from Tammy Perry, who said she is fearful that she will not be able to pay for her education if their piece of legislation goes through. I also heard from Laurie Gillis, a single mother, who said, "don't want to lose my job."

On October 18 I asked the Solicitor General a question. I would like to hear him explain to those people, as well as to some of the people in the gallery from Hy & Zel's, from the Payless stores and from Herbie's drugstore, so those people can hear, what the Solicitor General is going to do to save the 3,000 jobs that are in jeopardy because of this piece of legislation. Will he tell them what he is going to do today?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I thank the member for the question. The reason the amendments to Bill 115 do not deal with drugstores is simply that Bill 115 does not deal with that issue. The drugstore question was covered by the provisions of the Retail Business Holidays Act passed under the previous Liberal government. We choose not to deal with this issue at this time, choosing instead to deal with protecting the rights of workers and ensuring the common pause day of some 760,000 Ontarians and their families who work in the retail industry throughout this province of ours.

As I said, we are concerned with amendments that deal with Sunday working and not with Sunday shopping. Drugstores have in fact been allowed to be open under the previous legislation, and as a result of our amendments to provide therapeutic, cosmetic, hygienic and pharmaceutical products in stores of a size of some, not 1,000 or 2,000 square feet, but 7,500 square feet. We believe that should be sufficient space to provide those kinds of services that were envisaged under the previous government's legislation and our amendments at this time.

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Pilkey: I would add, however, that these particular stores will be allowed to be open during the Sunday days prior to Christmas during the month of December.

Mr Carr: The problem is that the tourism criteria still set 7,500-foot criteria; 7,500 square feet is in fact at issue with this piece of legislation. The Solicitor General may not know that. I know he is a new Solicitor General coming in late in the game, but that is a fact.

The problem is that those people do not care whether it is 7,500 feet, 3,500 feet or 12 feet. All they know is that the piece of legislation he is bringing in is going to destroy their jobs. The people who are going to have to go on welfare are saying to us, "What can we do to get the Solicitor General to act?" They had to come up on the front steps of this Legislature because they could not get the answers from this open and accessible government. They had to come to the front steps with their signs, protesting to get their answers here today.

I am going to ask the question that did not get answered by the Solicitor General during that time. I suspect he would like to speak directly to those 3,000 people, some of whom were here today, who will be losing their jobs. The question they are asking that they have never had answered is, why is the common pause day being applied to only 3% of the drugstores in Ontario? Why is it only going to restrict that 3%?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I believe I have already indicated in initial response that it is the government's view that matter does not fall within the four corners of this bill. was covered by the previous government. It is not up for discussion, nor can it be at this particular time. We believe 7,500 square feet, for the purposes that they are allowed to be open in the first place, surely must be adequate to serve the citizens of Ontario on Sunday.

Mr Carr: It would seem the Solicitor General does not care about the 3,000 jobs, and I suspect the people here can see that very clearly. He can talk about other pieces of legislation and he can talk about whose fault it is, but all we know is that they are going to be out of a job at a time when it is difficult to find jobs. As was stated today by Patricia McGregor, a single mother, "I'm going to be living on welfare because of this NDP government." That was her statement this morning at the press conference.

If the Solicitor General does not care about the jobs, if he does not care about the people who are sitting up in the night, every who are going to be out of their jobs, if he does not care because they are not the unionized Canadian auto workers that he cares about, if it is because of that, if it is because they are the people at the low end of the pay scale who cannot afford to have the big unions represent them, I would ask him a question regarding some of the seniors.

These particular drugstores offer discounts to some of the poor people across this province who cannot afford access to some of the drugs. Why should the public be denied access to drugstores whose average price for goods and services is 20% to 40% less than in the conventional drugstores? If the minister does not care about the jobs, what does he say to the poor people out there who do not have access because of his policies? What does he say to them?

Hon Mr Pilkey: The government has not changed the legislation. If there are jobs impacted, that is regrettable, but the government has not changed the legislation that has been in force in this province for a very considerable length of time.

As I have indicated, in terms of pricing in those particular stores, there will be drugstores that will dispense therapeutic, cosmetic, hygienic or pharmaceutical products to a extent of stores that are of a significant size, up to 100 square feet. I assume the needs of the public will be met to be served in stores of that size and that magnitude.

CASE OF BRIAN RAPSON

Mr Harnick: My question is for the Attorney General. As he is probably now aware, Police Constable Brian Rapson was acquitted of the three charges he was charged with, one of which was an indictment that the minister had preferred on attempted murder, which he had already been acquitted of earlier.

The minister has put this man's family through additional hell, through additional suffering and through additional agony because of that indiscriminate use of the preferred indictment. What is he going to do to alleviate the extra pain and the extra suffering he has caused this man's family? What is he going to do to pay this man's expenses for the additional defence of attempted murder that he was wrong in preferring by way of indictment?

I remind the minister that in the past his Premier, when he was the Leader of the Opposition, advocated payment of legal expenses when a preferred indictment was wrongly preferred. What is the minister going to do to help this poor police officer?

Hon Mr Hampton: With respect, I am afraid I must disagree fundamentally with some of the statements made here by the member of the opposition. Now that the trial is complete, I can provide some further information.

The trial judge in this case was presented only a few days ago with a motion for a directed verdict for an acquittal, and in that sense to not put the issue of attempted murder before the jury. The trial judge, having heard the evidence, put the issue of attempted murder before the jury. In other words, the trial judge, having heard all the evidence, decided it was proper and appropriate that the charge of attempted murder should go before the jury.

Mr Harnick: You shouldn't have preferred the indictment to start with.

The Speaker: Order. The member for Willowdale is asked to come to order to hear the response to a question which he placed.

Hon Mr Hampton: The issue here is seeing that the process works, that the process of law is carried through. That is what has been done. I can only say again that the trial judge, having heard all the evidence, having presided over the case, decided it was quite proper and appropriate to put the charge of attempted murder before the jury, and that was done.

Mr Harnick: It is interesting that the Attorney General wants to see that the process works now, but when the process worked a year ago and the officer was discharged after a preliminary inquiry, the Attorney General was not content to let the process work. He has now tried the person twice and he has been wrong twice.

It is quite obvious that he is not prepared to do what his own Premier has advocated in the past and he is not prepared to do anything to help the officer, but by preferring this indictment, he has struck a chord against the morale of every police officer in this province.

What is the Attorney General prepared to do to repair his relations with police officers when he has again been wrong? He is not going to do anything for the officer. What is he going to do for police forces generally?

Hon Mr Hampton: With respect, again I must completely disagree with the premise that has been stated by the member of the opposition. The trial judge had the question squarely before him when he received a motion—

Mr Harnick: You were wrong a year ago and you have been proved wrong now.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. The member for Willowdale posed a question, and I would take it that in order for him to get a response, both he and his colleagues will have to listen.

Hon Mr Hampton: Again, as I said, I must completely disagree with the premise that has been stated here by the member of the opposition. The question that was before the trial judge yesterday was exactly the question I was faced with. The trial judge was faced with a motion for a directed verdict of acquittal. He did not follow that. He did not accept that motion. He instead put the question before the jury, and that is exactly the question I was faced with.

The member of the opposition says this is something like a strike against the morale of police officers. Is he suggesting there should in effect be one law for the police and one law for everyone else? I would suggest that the process that worked here is exactly the process that works in all situations where someone is charged with this type of offence.

Mr Harnick: I am suggesting, with respect, that the Attorney General not get involved in second-guessing the justice system in this province when somebody has been discharged. That is what I am suggesting. I am also suggesting to him that he was wrong to prefer the indictment. The judgement that a jury has handed down today has indicated that he is wrong. On the basis of his logic, he will probably be appealing this judgement.

The Attorney General is not prepared to apologize to the officer, is not prepared to make restitution to the officer, as his own Premier has in the past suggested, and is not prepared to apologize to police officers generally for what he has done to their morale. I will admit he is not the only bad actor—the rest of his government has not been great either—but would he at least stand up here and admit he was wrong to prefer the indictment?

Hon Mr Hampton: I must say that it makes me unhappy when I see a member of the opposition take a serious legal matter and try to use that as an opportunity to score all kinds of political points across the spectrum.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. I ask the members to come to order.

Interjections.

The Speaker: It would appear that both the member and his colleagues do not care to hear a response. New question, the member for St Catharines.

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE

Mr Bradley: I have a question for the Premier. In opposition and on the campaign trail, the Premier waxed eloquent about the right of the democratically elected members of the opposition to carry out their responsibilities and role unfettered by the repression of government. His government has sent the Ontario Provincial Police to interrogate the Leader of the Opposition and the Liberal member for Halton Centre because they received documents embarrassing to his government from public-spirited civil servants. Is the Premier not concerned that these efforts to silence members of the opposition and intimidate the civil service will diminish the open and democratic system that so many fought for in previous wars?

Hon Mr Rae: I would say to the House leader for official opposition that, first of all, I have read the debate and listened very carefully to what people have said over the last number of days, and I do not think anybody who has heard what has been said by the member for Halton Centre, for example, would be unconcerned. The concerns she has raised are real ones.

It was suggested the other day by our House leader that he would be quite happy to sit down with the other House leaders to discuss this situation. There is also, as I understand it, still an outstanding question of privilege which the member for Halton Centre has raised and which is supported by the member for St George-St David.

I would say to the House leader for the official opposition that I have a great deal of respect for him and for his experience. Certainly nothing that would be done by the government would be intended in any way to intimidate, harass or prevent a member of the opposition or a member of the Legislature from carrying out his or her responsibilities.

No police investigations have been ordered or directed by this government. I hope the House leader for the official opposition will at least recognize that fact. I have said it on a number of occasions and I say it again here today. I think there is ample ground here for some further discussion and consultation. Certainly this government has never ordered any police investigations, nor has the government any intention of intimidating or trying to silence anyone at all.

Mr Bradley: That is interesting, because my concern extends not only to members of the opposition but to members of the government. My concern is that the Premier's intimidation tactics are now being used against members of his own caucus.

If the Premier truly believes in the freedom of expression by democratically elected members of this House, why did he fire my Niagara colleague the member for Lincoln and my Niagara colleague the member for Welland-Thorold, in one case as Chairman of the standing committee on finance and economic affairs and in the other case as a member of the standing committee on administration of justice? Was it because the member for Lincoln dared to vote against a tax measure which would be damaging to his constituents and the member for Welland-Thorold dared to express the view that the Sunday shopping bill the government brought in is a betrayal of those who voted for the NDP in the last election?

Hon Mr Rae: First of all, the member's concern on behalf of members of our caucus is deeply appreciated, and I am sure, by all of us. I certainly appreciate that concern.

All I would say to the honourable member is that no one has been fired.

CASE OF BRIAN RAPSON

Mr Harnick: My question is to the Attorney General. It is a very simple question. A year ago he preferred the indictment, and I asked him at that time why he had preferred the indictment. He told me he could not tell me because it was before the courts. Now it is no longer before the courts. A jury has acquitted Police Constable Rapson.

asking the Attorney General again why he preferred indictment.

Hon Mr Hampton: We came to the same conclusion the trial judge hearing this matter over the last couple weeks came to. Senior criminal law counsel in the Ministry of the Attorney General looked at the evidence and came to the conclusion that there was sufficient evidence to go before a jury. The trial judge who heard this matter over the last two weeks, who heard the evidence, was presented with a motion for a directed verdict and said that there was sufficient evidence here with respect to attempted murder and that this evidence should go before a jury.

With great respect, the decision we made with respect to referring an indictment has, I think, been vindicated by the trial judge.

Mr Harnick: That answer just shows the capriciousness with which this preferred indictment was brought.

Mr Mahoney: Come on, we're politicians, not lawyers. What does that mean?

Mr Harnick: Malice. The member for Mississauga just asked me what that means. I will describe it as malice.

I put it to the minister that the trial judge's charge to the jury was absolutely clear and virtually instructed the jury to acquit him on the attempted murder charge. The charge to the jury was crystal clear that is what the jury must do.

Mr Wessenger: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: He is imputing the motives of another member and saying there is malice in his actions. I very clearly heard that.

The Speaker: I listened very carefully. He did not accuse the minister of malice; he said the decision was capricious. He did not accuse the minister.

Mr Harnick: In addition to malicious, it was arbitrary, because the minister has stood today and again refused to tell us what reasons he used one year ago. He is relying on the fact that a judge may have done something during the course of a trial one year later. I ask this minister to come clean and tell us what reasons he had one year ago after he was discharged by a judge who heard the evidence. I want to know for what reasons he preferred indictment.

Hon Mr Hampton: As I said the first time—and I remember the member was preparing his next line of political attack, so he did not hear it—when we looked at the evidence in the case, we were of the view that there was sufficient evidence to put the charge of attempted murder before a jury.

Interjection.

The Speaker: Member for Etobicoke West.

Hon Mr Hampton: The trial judge was presented with that motion a few days ago in this case and made the decision we did, that there was sufficient evidence of attempted murder to go before a jury.

VITAL STATISTICS REGISTRATION

Mr Malkowski: I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Many of my constituents use the services of the office of the registrar general to obtain birth certificates. I know the office moved to Thunder Bay earlier this year. Can the minister tell us what has been happening since the move?

Hon Ms Churley: First of all, I would like to say that I know a lot of citizens of Ontario have been inconvenienced by this move and there have been long line-ups and a lot of inconvenience, and I feel very badly about that. There has been a lot of activity over the summer and in fact we hired summer students and put in extra telephone lines and virtually worked around the clock to deal with the backlog.

I think it would help people to understand if they knew the scope of what we are dealing with. The staff, which is mostly new, receives on the average over 18,000 requests for registration and certificates in a week and, on top of that, 1,000 telephone calls. I am continuing to monitor that to try to find new solutions for dealing with that kind of tremendous workload.

Mr Malkowski: Some of my constituents have been waiting a long time to get the documents. Can the minister tell the House why there have been such delays?

Mr Bradley: Must be the previous government.

Hon Ms Churley: The previous government, no doubt, for making the decision. I thank the member. I do, however, take responsibility; it is my responsibility now.

As I said, the backlog from the move was just tremendous, and over the summer we hired a lot of students to deal with that. We have extended the hours in Toronto to benefit working people more. We are open from, I think, 7 or 8 in the morning to 8 in the evening, and we have put in new telephone lines and done a lot of things to help the situation. We have eaten into the backlog significantly, and in fact some members have told me they are seeing an improvement. But I will continue to work on this very important issue. It is certainly one of my priorities.

RACE RELATIONS

Mr Poirier: I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship regarding her statement about Champlain and Cartier. The minister has made clear her government's commitment as well as her own personal commitment to the elimination of racism and prejudice from our society and to the enhancement of multicultural and cross-cultural understanding in Ontario.

The Toronto Star recently reported that the minister stated that Jacques Cartier and Samuel de Champlain, Canada's first European explorers, were racist. Of all people, given her mandate, does the minister believe her gratuitous statement will contribute positively to linguistic relations in this country, given the sensitive state of affairs that currently exists?

Hon Ms Ziemba: I appreciate being asked the question because I would like to set the record straight. First of all, unfortunately the reporter was not at the meeting and has taken the context of my speech out of order. What I talked about was the systemic racism that has existed in this country. For instance, let me explain about talking about how we interned Japanese Canadians during the Second World War. All parties have agreed that it was not a thing to do, that unfortunately we showed racism in this country. We interned Italian Canadians and Ukrainian Canadians during the First World War as well. In that context, we have unfortunately displayed systemic discrimination and racism in this country.

We also have heard from the Canadian Human Rights Commission how one in 10 Canadians faces racism and discrimination in this country. We are committed as a government, and I think all of us in this House—I know I have spoken to members in the opposition parties—want to make sure we have a society that is truly free of racism and discrimination.

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Ziemba: This is a very serious question, for myself and for the honourable member opposite, so I would like to respond.

We have to make sure, if we are going to eliminate racism, that we understand the problem and that we admit we have had a problem in the past. Now that we have admitted the problem, we can try to—

The Speaker: Would the minister take her seat, please.

Mr Poirier: It would be interesting to know what, in reality, was mentioned about Champlain and Cartier. I think Jim Coyle from the Ottawa Citizen had a very good history he wrote about what may have happened with Champlain and Cartier recently.

No one can deny that racism has existed in Canada for a very long time, and unfortunately it continues to exist today. We also know there is an incredible backlog at the human rights commission, but I am not so sure that to bring forward the dossiers of Cartier and Champlain would really resolve the problem. I think our role as politicians is to be careful of what we say, because between the message emitted and the message perceived there may be a heck of a gulf, and we have a mandate to add water, not oil, to potential flare-ups.

What is to be gained by making statements of this type if they are going to be wrongly perceived like this? How will her remarks assist or enhance cross-linguistic and cross-cultural relations in Ontario?

Hon Ms Ziemba: Again I must say that unfortunately, as has been experienced I am sure by all members of this House, the tabloids are not always correct, and the tabloids were not present at this particular meeting. That is an unfortunate experience. If this was taken out of context, I cannot apologize for the tabloids.

I reiterate to all members of the House that I did not take, nor would I have taken, anyone personally to task for displaying any form of racism or discrimination. What we are talking about is the systemic problems that have existed in this country and how we are going to find solutions to correct that and to make sure that does not happen again. If we cannot look at past experience and learn from it, we certainly are never, ever going to eliminate racism. I know that members share with me the fact that we must make our society, not only for our children but for our grandchildren, a place where everybody lives harmoniously and in peace, with equity and justice for all.

WORKERS' COMPENSATION BOARD

Mrs Witmer: My question is for the Minister of Labour. In 1990, the unfunded liability for the Workers' Compensation Board increased by 7% to $9.1 billion. The 1990 annual report from the board stated that the unfunded liability would peak at $8 billion and could be eliminated by 2007. Now the $9.1-billion unfunded liability is projected to grow to $10 billion in 1992 and $12 billion by the year 2000. The current estimate on the elimination has been pushed back to the year 2014. Could the minister explain why the unfunded liability increased by $1 billion in one year, from 1989 to 1990?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: The situation with the unfunded liability of the Workers' Compensation Board is one that has been with us since 1972. The first steps to try and deal with it took place in 1984. The current increase in the unfunded liability is a direct result of the economic climate we have in the province today and the number of closures we have seen and the number of workers who are out of work. That is a situation that basically we have inherited but we are currently looking at options to take care of this situation.

Mrs Witmer: I appreciate the minister's response, but I am not sure that adequately deals with the increase in the unfunded liability total.

Last week the WCB launched six months of hearings to determine whether the board should compensate individuals who suffer from chronic workplace stress. We know that is going to increase the costs. The Employer Advocacy Council, which is based in Kitchener, has sent me a letter. They report that in 1992, employer assessments are going to increase by 21% to reduce the $9.1-billion unfunded liability and an additional 27% to cover administration and program costs. The employers in the province are desperately concerned about the province's ability to maintain an affordable employer-financed system of workers' compensation in the future, and with good reason.

The Speaker: Would the member place her question?

Mrs Witmer: This dramatic increase in WCB rates is going to prompt yet more businesses to close or move out of the province. It is going to contribute to further job loss.

Given the fact that there are too many government policy decisions being initiated without any consideration of the impact on business, I ask the minister to share with this House what research he is doing. What economic impact studies has he done to take a look at the potential inclusion of workplace stress under the WCB on the assessment rates and the unfunded liability?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I should inform the member that the study on workplace stress—and there have been a number of cases that have been granted but there has no on a clear policy on workplace stress—is one that has been initiated by the board itself. They are doing a study on it. They have not taken action and will not until, I think, following the study and then, probably, discussions with my ministry. That is in the process of being looked at to whether or not a case can be made for Workers' Compensation Board payments for stress items.

In terms of the unfunded liability, the board is currently looking at that issue and has drawn to my attention a number of potential proposals. When it is prepared to make an official recommendation, we will sit down with it and discuss what we may have to do on the issue.

ASSISTANCE TO TOBACCO FARMERS

Mr Jamison: My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. The members of this House are well aware of the tremendous amount of strain that has been placed on tobacco farmers as a result of increased taxes and the imposition of health regulations. The Minister of Agriculture and Food had announced earlier in this House that his ministry would be meeting with the federal government to discuss other options and adjustment programs which may be considered to address the needs of the tobacco community and tobacco growers.

Since this is a very important question to the riding I represent, Norfolk, I also say that it has an impact on the communities there. As the minister knows, I have expressed my concern about this matter before in this House on other occasions with him, and about its effect on the local economy of Norfolk and the people who live there. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture and Food when we can expect to hear a favourable announcement with respect to assistance to this community.

Hon Mr Buchanan: I would like to thank the member for Norfolk for his question and commend him for the excellent work he has done on behalf of the province's tobacco farmers. Let me also say that this government recognizes the concerns of the tobacco industry because of the taxation and health-related concerns the member mentioned. We intend to address those concerns.

I have met with the tobacco board as a group and I have also met with the tobacco board chairman to discuss proposals. In light of that we have set up a committee, which comprises my staff, their federal counterparts and tobacco board members, to have discussions around different kind of assistance options we should look at. As members know, when it comes to health and agriculture, it is a provincial-federal matter, so it is very appropriate for the two governments to share the discussions and look at what kind of assistance we can provide to this industry.

Mr Jamison: Has the committee been working on putting together a long-term solution in support of this concern, since in my opinion long-term assistance will be needed to help these farm families adjust to the future market for their legal product? I think this is a major concern with the ongoing view, looking at assistance in this

Hon Mr Buchanan: The tobacco board has submitted preliminary funding requirements which discuss the needs of five years. The committee we have established is looking at long-term funding and hopefully we can address some of the requests we have been asked to assist with. We are looking at how we can assist tobacco farmers exit from growing tobacco and that is a shared responsibility, as I mentioned. We are also looking at how we can change the requirements for eligibility of any kind of reduction program. We recognize there are some concerns about alternative crops that can be grown on tobacco lands and we need to address those as well.

The second part of our way of addressing this problem is to look at market adjustment. We need to look at the export market for tobacco, which has a reduced price, and we need to look at ways of assisting farmers to adjust to that lower price in the export market.

RACE RELATIONS

Mr Curling: My question is to the Minister of Citizenship, the minister responsible for human rights and the minister who is giving all these history lessons. Let me bring to her the present situation.

It was about six months ago—to be precise, it was April 9—that this minister promised to produce, as she stated, clear and defined guidelines to prevent employment agencies from discriminating against job applicants. The following day, April 10, 1991, the Minister of Labour promised to put together legislation including tougher auditing of agencies by the end of June. Despite the explicit promises made six months ago by both ministers, the Toronto Star today reports that the chief of the Ontario Human Rights Commission has been forced to make public an appeal to the government to enact a stricter law governing employment agencies.

Let me plead on behalf of the many people who have become victims of such discriminatory practices. Why has the minister failed to keep her promise to produce clear and definite guidelines?

Hon Ms Ziemba: I thank my colleague for asking this question because I know he has suffered discrimination, and he has shared that with me. I understand his concerns as we all do in this government.

What we have to add to that history lesson he just unfolded for us was that when the whole issue came before the Ontario Human Rights Commission I said I would wait for the ruling. In the meantime, the Minister of Labour and I have been meeting with many concerned groups. In fact, we funded a very important conference that addressed this issue. Out of that conference came some very good, interesting comments and recommendations. In that framework the Minister of Labour and I, now that the commission has come forth with its ruling, can move forward to develop that legislation.

We have not been inactive; we have been working very hard to make sure we get the proper guidelines in place and that we bring forward people's ideas from the community. In those terms as well, we have made sure that we are very shortly going to introduce employment equity. We have also introduced a new strategy to combat racism in Ontario in the Ontario anti-racism secretariat. I think we are encompassing all these ideas—

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Ziemba: Yes, I will. I am sure there is a supplementary and I will be given an opportunity at that time to expand this a little further.

Mr Curling: I cannot believe this minister is saying she has to wait until the Ontario Human Rights Commission brings forward its recommendations on the two cases. Of course I have been discriminated against in this province. What I am appealing about are the hundreds of people who are subject to this daily, and the minister is going to wait until the two cases are heard by the Ontario Human Rights Commission. What if something happens today? Is the minister going to wait for those cases to be heard by the Ontario Human Rights Commission? This is obviously a do-nothing government.

To quote the Toronto Star, "That which it has said it would do, it does not; that which it does, it changes; that which it promises, it postpones." What is obvious is that the minister has failed to advocate strongly enough at the cabinet table. I do not think the people of this province have a strong voice at the cabinet table to fight for their cause. Will the minister make a specific commitment in this House that her promise and that of the Minister of Labour will be kept before the end of the year, or is it another in a long list of promises that will be broken?

Hon Ms Ziemba: I did not say, first of all, that I was waiting for the commission and that we would continue to wait for the commission's report. I said we are developing other guidelines as we were waiting for that report. We have had conferences. We have dialogued with the community. For the first time people were able to come to a conference and express these ideas and give us input on how they felt. In fact, nobody has ever wanted to talk about racism, they have always wanted to hide it under a carpet. This is the first time government has been open and honest about racism existing, and we are going to stamp it out.

The other issue is that we have kept promises. We are introducing mandatory legislated employment equity. We have come through with many initiatives in this government that have addressed inequities in our society and we will continue to do so. I hope my colleagues on the other side would work with us to eliminate discrimination instead of making this a political matter, and share with us their concerns and work—

The Speaker: Would the member take her seat again, please.

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE

Mr Tilson: I have a question for the Minister of Financial Institutions. Earlier this month I asked the minister when we would see his bill on auto insurance. He replied that he would announce later this month, which is now, a policy statement, to be followed by a bill some time later, which I assume would be next month. There seems to be some speculation that this policy paper has been scrapped. The only sign I can see of a policy paper, the one we appear to be aware of, is the one issued exclusively to the Insurance Brokers Association of Ontario; not to the media and certainly not to this House.

We are now at October 30 and we still have no discussion paper. Is the minister still planning to release a policy paper prior to the introduction of auto insurance and will he be doing it in this House or in some other forum?

Hon Mr Charlton: Let me respond first to the part of the question the member raised regarding a discussion paper released to the brokers' association and to the association exclusively. I have heard several accusations over the course of the last couple of weeks about a discussion paper that has gone to the entire insurance industry and now about a discussion paper that has gone exclusively to the brokers' association. There is no discussion paper. The brokers' association has not received the discussion paper. The insurance industry has received no discussion paper, as others who have held press conferences have implied.

It is still our intention to proceed with a discussion paper. As the member well knows, in terms of the timing in this Legislature, the time lines are getting very tight and unfortunately I am running a couple of weeks behind schedule, but we intend to release both the discussion paper and the legislation this fall.

Mr Tilson: The wheel seems to be grinding to a dead stop. Certainly this government in the last election promised a publicly owned auto insurance industry. It also promised full access to the courts. It would do away with the Liberal law of the threshold test. The member Mr. Welland-Thorold spent many hours telling us how terrible that was. Now it appears both those promises are going to be discarded and the government is going to do something else, and that would include the abandonment of the economic loss issue.

There have obviously been strictly exclusive discussions with the insurance industry alone, an industry that has made $1 billion in profit since the Liberal bill was introduced. Can the minister tell us what the insurance industry is giving the people of this province in return?

Hon Mr Charlton: I am not sure I can respond to the part of the question that relates to what the insurance industry may or may not be giving. We have had consultations with the insurance industry; that is correct. We have also had consultations with every victims' group that has made itself available. We have met with every lawyer's group that wished to have input on this issue. Just let me say, in wrapping up, that the implication raised by the member a few moments ago about the economic loss issue now being dead or off the table, whichever words he uses is as incorrect as the rest of the things he has raised. We are proceeding to deal with economic loss.

GAS LEAK IN PICKERING

Mr Wiseman: I was getting a little worried that I might not get this question in with all the extensive preambles. My question is for the Minister of Natural Resources. My riding—

Mr Harnick: Is this a question about the dump they're putting in your riding?

The Speaker: Order. The member for Willowdale could be aware that if a member causes disorder in this house, the Speaker will have no choice but to name that member. I am asking the member to come to order.

Mr Wiseman: This is a very serious question for the residents of my riding. Last summer a house blew up in an area just north of a subdivision because methane gas was seeping into it. Prior to that, the weigh station at the Rock West landfill site had exploded because of methane gas. Yesterday it was revealed that there is a methane gas leak in a subdivision. Is the Minister of Natural Resources aware of this and what is he doing?

Hon Mr Wildman: This is a very serious matter. Yes, indeed we are aware of the gas leak. During the course of the drilling of a well on Pine Grove Avenue in Pickering, natural gas was hit at about 110 feet in bedrock. There was no fire or explosion. Under the terms of the Petroleum Resources Act, the Ministry of Natural Resources is responsible for issuing permits for the exploration, but in this case there was no gas anticipated. It is not an area where we would normally expect to find gas, although there have been some occurrences in the past. The fact is that the gas has stopped flowing, the owner will ensure the well is cemented to stop the leak and MNR inspectors are on site today to ensure the work is satisfactorily completed.

The Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired. Petitions. Petitions.

[Interruption]

The Speaker: We were at petitions. I recognize the member for St Catharines with his petition.

Mr Bradley: I guess I would call this a question of privilege, Mr Speaker. I notice that the chief government whip, the member for Lincoln and the government House leader disappeared during question period.

The Speaker: What privilege have you lost today?

Mr Bradley: It is another member's privilege I am talking to. I am wondering if the member for Lincoln has been reinstated as Chairman of the committee.

The Speaker: The member for St Catharines will please take his seat.

PETITIONS

CLOSING OF TREE NURSERIES

Mr Miclash: I have a petition that reads:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We, private contractors, oppose the proposed closure of the bare root section of the Dryden Tree Nursery due to the loss of substantial business revenue and local employment."

This is signed by a good number of people and I too have attached my name to this petition.

CHILD CARE

Mrs Witmer: I have a petition that reads:

"To the Honourable Zanana Akande:

"We, the undersigned, request the minister take action immediately to rectify the further salary inequity announced January 31, 1991, for early childhood educators. We believe that the principles of freedom of choice, pay equity and non-discrimination form the backbone of our democratic society. Furthermore, parents must retain the right to select the day care of their choice."

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON REGULATIONS AND PRIVATE BILLS

Mr White from the standing committee on regulations and private bills presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill Pr62, An Act respecting the City of North York;

Bill Pr68, An Act respecting the Armenian Community Centre of Cambridge.

Your committee further recommends that the fees and the actual cost of printing at all stages and in the annual statutes be remitted on Bill Pr68, An Act respecting the Armenian Community Centre of Cambridge.

Your committee further recommends that the actual cost of printing at all stages be remitted on Bill Pr9, An Act to revive Restoule Snowmobile Club.

Motion agreed to.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

INTERIM SUPPLY

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for interim supply for the period commencing November 1, 1991, and ending December 31, 1991.

Mr Runciman: It is a pleasure to participate in this debate for interim supply. I am following yesterday's speaker, the member for Renfrew North, who as usual gave a most interesting speech on the question of government finances and a whole host of other issues. I find passing strange, and I have mentioned this in the past, the comments coming from the official opposition, the former government of this province, and I have some concerns with respect to the validity they may be carrying with the public at large.

We have heard some concerns expressed in the past about the delays in the issuance of birth certificates, death certificates and so on. Of course, it was the former Liberal government which moved that operation to Thunder Bay. They have to assume some degree of responsibility for that.

We have heard questions about payroll tax. The member for Renfrew North has again expressed concern about payroll tax. Who brought in a payroll tax? No other than the former Liberal government. In fact they brought in something like 33 separate tax increases during the five-year life of the Liberal government, representing something like a 132% increase in taxes to the people of Ontario. Now they get up and express concern about payroll taxes.

We hear the interim leader of the Liberal Party getting up and expressing concern about the closure of hospital beds. Well, the Liberal government was responsible for the closure of 3,400 hospital beds. Now they get up in this House and express concern. It is passing strange.

Today—this one really caught me off guard—we had the member for York Centre saying he likes beer and wine in grocery stores. That man was the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. If he believed that, he sat in cabinet for the portfolio responsible for that area of the economy and did not do one thing, did not make one utterance in respect to support. Now that he is in opposition and involved in a leadership campaign, all of a sudden he supports beer and wine in grocery stores.

I simply want to send out the message to Ontario voters that they should take what the Liberal Party is saying now with a considerable grain of salt when they take a look at its experience and the way it conducted the business of this province for the five years it was in office. That is something we as a party have to continue to reiterate to and reinforce with the public, so the bad government we experienced by the Liberal Party of Ontario is not forgotten about by the time we roll around to the polls three or four years hence.

There is no question that the current government inherited a very bad situation in terms of the state of the provincial economy. They, along with the electorate, were led down the path in terms of what kind of deficit we were facing. I think the Treasurer of the day was talking about a very modest deficit. It turned out to be a very significant one indeed. There is no question this government has had some tough decisions to make. In any event, members undoubtedly are not surprised to know I disagree with many of the decisions they have taken to deal with the tough and trying economic circumstances we find ourselves in in this province today.

I want to talk about a number of issues. I believe they all in some way, shape or form touch on interim supply and the finances of the province. The one I want to deal with initially falls within one of my critic areas, and that is the whole question of the Ontario Provincial Police, law and order and community safety, which is a growing concern in the province.

We are hearing stories now of significant cutbacks in OPP services. I saw a letter that was circulated by Thomas O'Grady, the commissioner of the OPP, talking about changes that are going to have to occur within the OPP: cutbacks in overtime and time off in lieu of overtime. We have situations now where police officers do not have cruisers. They have to use their own cars to respond to calls. We have cruisers in my own area that are sitting on the lot at the OPP station because the detachment cannot afford repairs to those cars. For a significant part of the 24-hour period, the Highway 401 corridor has little or no coverage on it and very few people able to respond to emergency calls. That situation is worsening, with additional cutbacks being faced by policemen and policewomen in this province.

What have we done over the past number of years to improve the situation? Really nothing. The Liberal government—and the current government is following in its footsteps—put more obstacles in the path of policemen and policewomen trying to do an effective job for all of us in this province. It is a paperwork jungle, especially if there is a complaint lodged against a police officer. I think police officers have to fill out something like 75 different reports if there is a complaint lodged against them. They are twisting in the wind because of the long period of time it takes to resolve any public complaint against an officer to be resolved. That is having another negative impact, a significant negative impact on police morale.

We have to look at a host of areas where we have to address the growing concerns of policemen and policewomen in the community at large. We have a significant increase in violent crime in this province but very little concern being expressed by this government and very few options, if any, being brought forward, ways in which we can address that. Mr Speaker, in your former responsibilities, you were intimately aware of and familiar with some of these concerns.

When we talk about anything like this we frequently have tossed back at us, "The Conservatives want to cut spending but here they're talking about increasing spending." There is no question that we do want to cut spending in significant areas of government, but we think there are other areas, such as policing, that do deserve additional funding. What we are talking about is a reallocation of spending priorities within government. We are not talking about new money.

I can go on about a number of things but I want to point out money that is available within government today and could be reallocated to a need that is very obvious and is being neglected significantly by this government. I am talking about policing.

As members are aware, I chair the standing committee on government agencies. We have a draft report before us dealing with the TVOntario network. That dealt extensively with the spending habits of the former chairman, Mr Ostry. We also took a look at the operations of TVO.

One of the areas we took a look at was the French network, La Chaîne, and the significant expenditures going towards La Chaîne. They are attempting to appeal to something like 185,000 Franco-Ontarians. That is their audience. According to the statistics provided by TVO, it attracts something like 2.5% of that audience; 2.5% of 185,000 potential viewers, a pretty infinitesimal figure. Yet La Chaîne, the French network, is taking up 35% of TVO's budget. We are talking about at least $25 million of $30 million.

Mr Ostry and his colleagues, when they appeared before us, talked about the creation of the French arm of TVO and why it occurred. He quite clearly indicated it was not a decision or a desire of the board of directors or the chairman of TVO. It was purely a political decision made by the Liberal cabinet. What we are doing is spending significant sums of taxpayers' money on a network which is really not fulfilling any meaningful need within the province.

The network brass at TVO will tell members that. Anyone who has taken a look at the network and has any appreciation or understanding of the network, and has the guts to stand up and say it, will say that it is not doing the

. We can provide those services through the one network, which we were doing in the past, and perhaps enhance it, and at the same time realize a significant saving for Ontario taxpayers which could be directed into other areas such as policing. If we could look at injecting that $5 million or $30 million into the budget of the OPP, that would have a significant impact on its operations.

I have been trying through the legislative research branch for well over a month now to get details of a manpower study—this was probably commissioned, Mr Speaker, while you were the minister—taking a look at the manpower situation within the OPP: where the jobs are, what kind of requirements we are going to need in the future, etc. Up to this point, Commissioner O'Grady has been extremely reluctant to make that report available to me as a member of the opposition, but we are continuing to pursue that.

What I suspect we are going to find is that in a lot of areas where jobs have been created—this does not apply only to the provincial force, it applies to municipal forces as well—based on legislation that governments have brought in and initiatives undertaken by the senior levels of government, they have increased the workload of policemen and women and have created jobs that are not front-line jobs, jobs where we do not have officers out investigating crime and trying to prevent crime, working with the community. These are desk jobs, paper-shuffling jobs, jobs that in many instances I believe, if carefully rationalized, are not really needed. Those dollars could be better directed towards community safety.

Again, these are the kinds of issues that certainly my priority, over the next period of time, is going to continue to pursue and continue to press the Solicitor General on.

Another area I want to talk about, which takes up a significant chunk of provincial dollars, is health care. As members know, this government negotiated a sweetheart deal with the Ontario Medical Association with respect to payment to doctors. I call it a sweetheart deal although certain members of the medical profession, specialists, have significant concerns about the ceiling put on earnings. General practitioners do not have those concerns. They see $400,000 as a goal to work for, but the impact it is having with respect to specialists is significant. Of course the consequence of that is that it is going to have a negative impact on health care consumers in this province who require the services of specialists.

Mr Speaker, I know some of my colleagues and perhaps some of your colleagues are now faced with a situation where specialists are reaching their cap on income, and what they are doing is closing down their operations and not investing new capital dollars for the latest high-tech equipment that is coming on to the market. The result of that is that health care consumers in this province are really being left as losers.

We have this agreement, as I said, with the OMA. It made the OMA the union for all doctors by instituting a Rand formula whereby even though something like 10,000 doctors in this province are not currently supporters of the OMA, they are going to be compelled by this government to pay dues to the OMA. In effect, it represents all doctors at the negotiating table with the government. All doctors, whether they respect, support or care about the OMA, are going to be compelled to pay an annual fee to the OMA.

It is passing strange when we see these doctors, the OMA, getting into bed with the Premier. All we have to do is go back to 1986. I think it was 1986 when we had Bill 94 brought in by the Liberal government, banning extra-billing. That was part of the accord. The member for York South and his negotiators insisted that extra-billing be banned as part of the accord, so Mr Peterson brought in the legislation. We had one of the largest demonstrations in the history of this Legislature on the lawn, doctors violently protesting against the legislation, Bill 94, which was going to ban extra-billing. That was not David Peterson's idea; it was the member for York South's idea. It was the NDP's imposed policy on the Liberal government of the day. Now who is cosyng up to the Premier and his socialist chums? None other than the doctors, the Ontario Medical Association.

There is a term I could use to describe the OMA, but I will not use it. It is not polite. I will just say it equates to ladies of the night, and I do not have a very high opinion of those individuals, obviously. Certainly we went to the wall in support of the doctors in 1986, and now we see them getting into bed with the architects of the legislation that banned extra-billing.

We are talking about a whole host of areas in this government. A lot of the members opposite are new to this Legislature. They have only been here a year, but I am sure they have witnessed the significant waste around this place and their constituency offices. There does not seem to be a real will on the part of legislators to deal with some of the waste.

I recall, I guess it was last year—this is just a small example—getting in my office a report from the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Technology. It came by courier, two thick books, and it was simply a listing of businesses in Ontario. I did not request those books, they were sent out to me, but the other thing is they were sent by courier. They sent two books, one in French and one in English.

We all want to be fair. Of course, any time you even touch on this kind of subject, there are going to be those who will jump up in the House and say: "Your motivation is something other than correct. You're not really being concerned about taxpayers, you're being concerned about something else, which impacts on a minority in this province."

I think common sense has to play a role here, and it has a very little role with respect to the way we have dealt with French-language services. Let's just take a look at this, where we had this document translated and sent out to members. We did not need it, we did not want it, yet they sent out two separate ones, in both French and English.

I think there has to be some kind of rationalization. Certainly we can provide those services if requested and if required, but to simply publish them, shove them out and send them across the province by courier—I suggest if we take a look at the cost of that kind of program, which for all intents and purposes is flushing money down the toilet, we would find it is rather significant.

We talk about increasing lines at food banks, we talk about cutting back on police services, we talk about cutting back in a whole host of areas, hospitals beds, what have you, but we do not want to look at these kinds of things. We do not want to look at them at all because it is not politically correct to do so. If you raise them, you are going to be accused of perhaps having ill will towards a minority in this province.

That is not the case. I think we can provide those services in a real way, in a fair way, but not just this carte blanche approach: "Duplicate everything. Send it out to everybody regardless of whether they want it or not. Regardless of whether they need it or not, we will provide it. That way we cannot be criticized by any vocal pressure group in the province."

I think the time is long past when we take that approach to government and to the use of taxpayers' dollars. We are talking about a $10-billion deficit. I know what I am talking about is probably a very modest sum, but we are talking about millions of dollars which I say could be better utilized, especially given the severe situation this province finds itself in economically.

There are other things I want to talk about. If I were in government again, I would certainly call for the cancellation of chauffeur-driven limousines. Again, this may seem like a modest amount of money when we are talking about a budget that is in excess of $50 billion, but it sends out the wrong kinds of signals to ordinary working men and women in this province. There is no need.

I was in cabinet, and when I reflect back on those days, Mr Speaker, you really did not need a chauffeur-driven limousine. We have a garage, where if you needed a car, all you had to do, as a member of the executive council, was call up the garage and have a car available to you for government business, for government use.

Right now, cabinet ministers have their own cars and they have their own drivers, and those drivers are probably making in excess of $30,000 a year, plus benefits. I do not know how many members of cabinet there are now—close to 30. Take a look at the cost of operating that car and of keeping that employee in service, who on many occasions sits around waiting for a minister all day. In my view that is a very significant waste of taxpayers' dollars. It could be dealt with to send out the right kind of signal to the people of this province. It is not being done.

I know we are not going to get this current socialist government to change its views with respect to this, but certainly one significant area of waste is rent control. The bureaucracy was started under a Conservative government. When it was brought in, it was supposed to be on a short-term basis. Of course, once you bring in a program like that, it is not short term. It grows like Topsy, and it has become a very politically dicey issue to deal with.

If we take a look at the situation in Ontario, there are millions of dollars—I believe it is in excess of $50 million a year—now being spent to maintain the rent control bureaucracy. In my view, that is money ill spent. It could be spent in other areas which would be much more helpful to people in real need in Ontario. Many of the people who are now benefiting from rent control are earning in excess of $200,000 or $300,000 a year, living in rent-controlled apartments and benefiting from the taxes paid by people earning significantly less money. People living in Cambridge or in eastern Ontario, making $20,000, $30,000 or $40,000 a year, are subsidizing people in Toronto who are earning in excess of $200,000 or $300,000 a year. There is something terribly wrong about that kind of policy, but again, politicians are loath apparently to deal with that kind of situation.

I want to talk about the money now being spent on welfare, social assistance. We have the former minister in the House today. I do not think it is a secret that close to 10% of the Ontario population is now on welfare. That is a pretty scary statistic and certainly has something to do with the state of the Ontario economy. I think it may also have something to do with the changes that have been brought about in terms of growing social assistance benefits in this province and lack of incentives on the other side to get people back into the workforce.

Right now we have something like $5 billion going into social assistance, and we budget around $6 billion for education. Yet when you take a look at the welfare rolls, the analysis of people on social assistance, many of them are school dropouts. Many of them suffer from lack of formal education, lack of skills training, but we are increasing welfare payouts to these people, providing incentives to be idle and getting up close to the education budget. It seems to me that those priorities are way out of whack. We should be putting the money into skills development, doing what we can to ensure that these people have proper training and skills so that we do not have to provide social assistance to these individuals.

I know we have had some arguments about this, and the former minister was dealing with this, but we have economic studies which indicate that the gross income now for someone on welfare is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $35,000. That works out to something like $17.50 an hour to be on social assistance. Why would anyone want to work at a minimum-wage job?

Mr White: Because people want to work in this province.

Mr Runciman: Not like you, I guess. You do not know what work is all about.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): I regret the fact that members would interject as they walk past the member speaking and as they exit from this chamber. It certainly is not appropriate. I also regret the fact that members interject and I ask them to refrain. I ask the member who has the floor to address the Speaker. We have been doing extremely well and I think we can get back to that straightaway.

Mr Runciman: Mr Speaker, I appreciate your suggestions. I just want to say that the member for Durham Centre who walked off the floor making those comments does that frequently. You are the first individual sitting in that chair who has mentioned that. I think it is the first time. I have been in this House for 10½ or 11 years and I do not all any other member doing that. This member does it consistently. Not a week goes by without that member coming in here, either coming in from the lobby or leaving and making those kinds of comments.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I have already made comment on that and I would appreciate it if we went back to the debate.

Mr Runciman: Mr Speaker, I just hope that message was delivered. He was outside the chamber when you made those comments.

Mr Mammoliti: I want to know where you got the figures.

Mr Runciman: I want to elaborate on where I got the figures. They came from a study done by the Fraser Institute.

Mr Wiseman: Oh, the Fraser Institute.

Mr Runciman: I do not have any trouble with the Fraser Institute. Obviously the members opposite do, but it is not a surprise.

In another example they use that I think is pretty scary, they make this suggestion:

"If welfare works out at around $20,000 net, then any netting $28,000, which well under half the population Ontario does, is working a 40-hour week for only $160 a week or $4 an hour, out of which they must pay gas, taxes, etc."

As well, the government has told municipalities to ease their efforts to verify that welfare recipients are actually doing work. Again, the end result of that is extremely obvious. When you work it out, if an individual is going to benefit to the tune of $4 an hour sitting at home versus going out working extremely hard, there is very little incentive for that individual to get out and find a job. That is the sort of thing we have to come to grips with and it is certainly not going to occur with a socialist government, because it has a mindset that is obviously different despite what is happening in the rest of the world, despite what happened in Sweden.

The member for Renfrew North talked about the Swedish experience and someone across the floor said, "It took years for the Swedes to throw out the socialist government." I want to tell members that economic times are significantly different now in the world, not just in Ontario, and I do not think it is going to take Ontarians 60 years. I think they are now quickly coming to the realization that socialist policies do not work and that we are paying the price for the decision made by the electorate in 1980.

I want to put a few matters on the record with respect to Sweden. "The economy is bowed by a public sector that is used like a magic blotter to soak up unemployment." There is a relevant matter with respect to welfare, which I mentioned: "In Sweden, welfare absorbs more than 30 per cent of the gross national product. There are chronic budget deficits and balance of payments problems, and devaluation can no longer be used to make the figures come out. Productivity has dropped, inflation is high and the competitive edge gone. Twenty-five per cent of workers in any factory are on sick leave."

That coined the phrase so commonly heard, "the Swedish sickness." It could be called the socialist sickness, which this government is trying to institute and is trying to inflict upon the people of this province. We are trying our best to stop it in its tracks. We are modest in number, only 20 Conservatives in this House, and we certainly cannot count on the Liberal Party, because many of the initiatives brought in by the Liberal Party in its five-year tenure in office were certainly in line with many of the beliefs of the socialists in this province and not in the best interests of the economy of Ontario.

Mrs Sullivan: Only the enlightened ones, Bob.

Mr Runciman: I do not call a 132% increase in taxes over a five-year period being enlightened, or 3,400 hospital beds being closed.

I want to talk about another issue that touches on my riding to a degree. That is the question of deinstitutionalization of psychiatric patients. This is a policy that, again, is politically correct and has been in vogue for some years. I have always had some difficulty with it, living in the city of Brockville. We have a psychiatric facility there and have seen the experience. We see it in Toronto too. We see these people sleeping at bus stops. We see these people who have no accommodation being shoved out of provincial psychiatric facilities without the support services ready for them in the community, but even if those support services are ready, many of those people in my view perhaps should not be out in the community. It is not in their best interests, let alone the best interests of the community, but no one wants to take a look at that issue again.

I am talking about government expenditures here. When I was chairman of the standing committee on public accounts a number of years ago I spoke to the Provincial Auditor about doing some kind of cost-benefit analysis of deinstitutionalization. He said, "It is government policy and if the government wants to invite me to do it, fine." It was not something public accounts was prepared to take a look at. Again, it is one of those politically correct things that nobody wants to really take an in-depth look at.

I think we should go back to square one and start all over. I do not think we ever really did look at the impact of deinstitutionalization, what its long-term impact was going to be and whether it was in the best interests of the psychiatric patients and the community at large. I think it is long overdue that we do that.

I want to talk about a specific one in my community where they are building either a seven-bed or 11-bed facility—it is an odd number—to accommodate patients being moved out of the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital. They bought a residence in a residential neighbourhood for more than market price. They paid at least $25,000 to $50,000 more than the place was worth, but that is typical. They have sunk well over $300,000 or $400,000 into this home putting in an elevator and doing all sorts of things.

When this house is complete and occupied, I want to determine what the actual cost was of providing those seven or 11 beds in the community. I think it is going to be atrocious. There is that kind of money being spent. I have seen it; we see it, and obviously it is happening in my community.

It is happening in communities across this province where we say within government: "We have to tighten our belts. We have to take a look at expenditures in the psychiatric hospitals, for example, and tighten our belts." But then when you look at these community expenditures, which again are tax dollars, there seem to be little or no constraints placed upon these people. We have seen all these agencies and whatever you want to call them spring up over the past seven or eight years. Tax dollars seem to be unlimited to provide them with the funds to see their little empires grow. These are pretty basic things that government can deal with.

I know one thing that was done when the federal Conservatives came into office in 1984, and regrettably they have not followed up on it, but I thought the idea was great.

Mr Hope: They have followed up on a lot of other suggestions.

Mr Runciman: I agree. They established a commission headed up by Eric Kierans called the Kierans commission which took a look at every ministry, at virtually every operation and every expenditure of the federal government. It was a massive report on ways they could streamline government, make it more efficient and more effective and cut down on the cost and duplication of government operations. That report, for all intents and purposes, has been ignored. The people who participated, who volunteered their time—

Mr Wiseman: The Nielsen report.

Mr Runciman: That is right. It was the Nielsen report.

People who volunteered their time for months, believing the federal Conservative was sincere, have been extremely disappointed, people like the late Sid Handleman, who was the Conservative Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I know he was very bitter after the time he put in and the recommendations his group made. I think this could be a useful sort of thing to occur at the provincial level, using volunteers from every sector of the province to take a look at every agency, board and commission, at every ministry, at every avenue of expenditure within this province to determine whether it is serving a useful purpose, whether it is needed, whether it can be sunsetted and whether it needs to be changed, at a whole host of areas that can make government more effective, more accountable and more responsive. I would certainly encourage this government to do that, but I am not optimistic.

I think some of the decisions this government has made are interesting. My friend the member for Welland-Thorold, the former minister—I will not put these on the record—got up in the House the other day and indicated that describing some cabinet members as pinheads and nitwits was not something he had done, or at least he implied he had not said that, although I gather that the member for St Catharines also interjected something in the House at the time, that he had a tape of the show and indeed those things had been said.

There are people in this government who do not fit the description and hopefully they are going to have the intestinal fortitude over the next couple of years to deal with some of these matters I have raised in a commonsense way that is going to be in the best interests of all taxpayers in this province.

I think I have touched on all the subject areas I want to deal with today. I believe there are considerable tax dollars to be saved in this province if we take a commonsense approach to the expenditure of money and if we all take a look at the sorts of things that have been described as being off limits because they are politically correct and people are somewhat concerned about being attacked by some very vocal and active minority groups in society and their motives challenged or questioned.

I want to say that I have reached the point in my career where I am prepared to start talking about some of those things. If we are going to feel heat about it, we will feel the heat about it, but I know what my motivation is. I know that when I talk, for example, about the French arm of TVOntario wasting $20 million to $30 million of taxpayers' dollars, I am not doing it because of any feelings about a particular group within Ontario society. I am doing it because I believe it is wasted money and that we can meet the needs of that group in another way, in another fashion that is going to be in the best interests of Ontario as a whole.

Obviously we are not going to impede interim supply indefinitely. We simply wanted to get a number of our concerns on the record, and I thank members for their generosity.

Mr Sola: It seems the member for Leeds-Grenville is focusing too much on the former Liberal government, because he has to go back six years in time to make his criticisms of a former Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and a former Minister of Health.

On the other hand, the NDP government seems to be focusing back even further, judging from the remarks of the Minister of Citizenship today in question period.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. Your comments should be directed to the speech of this member; not to the comments by members of the government, but to the speech by the member for Leeds-Grenville.

Mr Sola: Well, I am. That is right. I am trying to make a statement here, comparing where the two parties stand because the member for Leeds-Grenville has attacked the former Liberal government as well as focusing on today's government.

The minister went back 450 years in time in order to try to revise history. The member for Leeds-Grenville and his party seem to be trying to live in the past. It seems to me the only party that focuses on the present is the Liberal Party, and it shows that this government is overseeing a slide into a recession without doing very much about it. They criticize the former Liberal government, they criticize the federal government, they criticize the business community, but they do nothing to turn things around.

The member for Leeds-Grenville again agrees with me when they attack the Liberal government, but he disagrees when they attack the federal government, trying to protect its point of view. It seems the Liberals are the only ones showing that there is something wrong today and that things have to be straightened out before the economy can be turned around.

Mr Ruprecht: I listened to the member for Leeds-Grenville. While my colleague the member for Mississauga East is correct that the focus probably should have been changed, nevertheless I thought the member for Leeds-Grenville made an important contribution to this House inasmuch as he has focused on one issue that is of importance to many of us: the whole issue of ex-psychiatric patients and how we deal with them.

I have just one point which, when the member made his remarks, I hoped got through to the government, namely, that we simply cannot put all deinstitutionalized persons in certain segments of Ontario. That simply would not be fair. They should have the right to live in the communities they come from, where the support services are, where their families live and where their friends are. If any municipality should stand in the way, saying through some legislative means, "No, we don't want them; we don't care to look after these people because they reduce our property values," then I think the government should listen to this member and to our side. We believe that if anyone stands in the way of that, there should be as-of-right zoning and isolation placed and put in such a way that there is no doubt that people who come from an institution or who are released ex-psychiatric patients should have the right to go to political districts or urban and rural areas, wherever they may have come from.

Mr McLean: I want to comment just briefly on the remarks made by my colleague. Some of the issues he touched on were very clear. Some of the issues he touched on go back many years. When I look at what has happened with regard to the birth certificates and the problems we are having of getting them which the government member has said today, it is important that people realize what avenues they have in order to get birth certificates.

People used to come to our constituency offices and we would pick them up after it within the same week. I would bring them home Monday and take them home Thursday. That is not happening in government any more, and it should be. There should be an area where that can still happen that quickly.

When we look at the taxes in this province, the budgetary policies of the government and the different revenues—the fees for licensing of vehicles—and at the gasoline tax, I remember the Treasurer—and my colleague has spoken to it—when he was in opposition, saying gasoline should be the same across this province. This very same Treasurer is the one who has added three cents a litre within a year to the price of fuel. I do not know what you will say, Mr Speaker, but I have some words for it that should not be used in this Legislature and I will not use them. It is not for him to stand on this side of the House and say it should be the same across the province, and then as Treasurer to bring in those tax increases for the people in the north, is not proper.

I have also spoken with regard to my colleague on the costs we have on hospital beds. I have said for a long time we should have more nursing homes, more homes for the aged, and get them out of the hospitals. That would be a lot more reasonable. I compliment my colleague on his remarks today.

Mr Runciman: The Liberal member for Mississauga East suggested I am living in the past when I am critical of the former Liberal government as well as of the current NDP government, but I think it is important to reinforce the message with the public at large. A lot of the issues being raised by members of the Liberal opposition are matters they had completely opposite positions on when they were on the other side of the floor. They instituted a payroll tax. They complain about birth certificates; they moved the office to Thunder Bay. They talk about hospital bed closures; they closed 3,400 beds. I could go on and on. We are not living in the past, but we do not want the public of this province to forget the past either. We do not want the public to forget what the Liberal Party did to Ontario.

I want to thank the member for Parkdale for reinforcing my comments with respect to the deinstitutionalization of psychiatric patients. I just want to say that in Brockville we have a director of rehabilitation who is a provincial civil servant, the only psychiatrist who is a provincial civil servant in that hospital, put in there to shove through deinstitutionalization. I have been advised that this gentleman is going to retire in two years and that he wants to go through that rehab area of the hospital and have it all closed down before he retires. He does not give a damn. He thinks psychiatric facilities are outdated, outmoded and that these people belong out in the community.

I think many of them may well belong out in the community, but we had better be damned sure we have the support services in place and the people to do the job to make sure we are not jeopardizing their safety and the safety of many people in communities right across this province. We do not seem to have that attitude or approach within the mental health division in the Ministry of Health. I think it has gotten away from this minister. She has significant responsibilities and I believe she is a very sincere and dedicated person, but she is dealing with a bureaucracy that has been in control for many years and can buffalo, and has buffaloeed, many a Minister of Health.

Mrs Sullivan: I am pleased to participate in this debate relating to interim supply. I have been watching the House over the past couple of weeks, and watching with interest the change in tone and attitude among the backbenchers of the New Democratic Party, who are clearly feeling some unease and some disappointment in the way their government is moving ahead on policies that were promises and on which they campaigned. I know, because I went through this in 1985, the enormous exhilaration and exuberance one feels when, after years of being in the wilderness, one is finally moved into government by electoral vote.

When I was first elected to the House, I had the advantage of having been around this place in capacities other than as a member for some time. I must say that during the course of that time I came to know many of the people who were key players in the New Democratic Party, front and back rooms. One of them was Robin Sears, of course, who was fondly known around this place as "Vlad the Impaler." Another one was Gerry Caplan, who is clearly still an influence and an influential adviser to the New Democratic Party.

I recall as well from the Conservative Party representatives in meetings we held, usually relating to election activity or election finances laws, Hugh Segal, who is now taking his place in the Prime Minister's office and assisting in creating a policy there, not a small place and not a small job to clean up.

I can recall the day in 1985 when with astute joint management, I think, from several sides of the House, including the government side and our side, a new government was formed. It was not a coalition government, but a new government that was formed. It was a wonderful day on the steps of the Legislature. I can tell members that people like my colleague the member for Renfrew North; the member for St Catharines; the member for Quinte; Bob Nixon, the former leader of our party; the member for Bruce, and the current leader of our party spent years and years having meetings in telephone booths and in offices with five and six people because that was all the interest we could drum up.

It was a wonderful day. That is not the case today. But for our party and for people in it who worked very hard and provided diligent opposition over that period time, that day in May was a very special day. It was a sunny day. The front of the Legislature was crowded with people and they all came in.

Mr Ruprecht: Thousands of people.

Mrs Sullivan: Thousands of people. Most came to celebrate. Some simply came to view but, by George, the place was full for Liberals who had worked very hard in opposition. I suggest that the Tories today are working hard in opposition. Certainly we in opposition are now working hard again to go back into government.

As I recall that day, I think of the exhilaration that must have been felt by members of the party, whether they were backbenchers or in government, the day of their swearing-in; the exuberance, the hope and the expectations they carried with them. As I look at the record of the government, whether it is a fiscal record, the economic record or the social record, there must be deep pain felt by people who felt so happy and exhilarated on that day.

Sometimes, Mr Speaker—you will know this, having been here for more than one term—when we are in this place, it is hard to keep our perspective on what is happening in the world around us. When we look around and see the carvings and the wonderful, ornate red of the floor and the grandeur of the chamber, everything seems so intense and the issues seem so intense here that we forget there is another world outside.

Every once in a while I think of the Vermont Legislature, for example, a beautiful chamber full of historical allusions and background from that community, much of this place is. When you visit that Legislature in Montpelier, Vermont, you see a place that has two chambers rather than one, but it is a wonderful place for people there. Frankly, do we know what is happening in that chamber from time to time? Rarely. Do people in Vermont know what is happening in this chamber? I will tell members no. There is a world outside this place, and too frequently we get caught up in what is happening here.

In speaking on interim supply, one of the things that is very clear is that this is a debate about paying a portion of the bills that are put forward in the budgetary policy of the government. The bills that are put forward in the budgetary policy, the spending and the revenue record, are included in this document. That is partly what we are talking about today, paying part of the bills that this document covers.

That makes it difficult, because I do not support this document, but the debate on interim supply relates to interim payments, sometimes for civil service and sometimes for social transfers that are part of the fiscal and economic and social policy of this government.

I think as well that this debate very sincerely relates to the approach of this government to governance itself, the way this government respects the role of the Legislature itself and the way it respects the role of the members of the Legislature.

There is no member of the Legislature, whether in opposition or a backbencher on the government side of the House, who takes his or her role lightly. I have very strong objections, as I have expressed in the House, to situations where the police are called in when members have access to information, no matter what the source. I object where there is perhaps misunderstanding, but certainly in the member's mind there was no misunderstanding when he was removed from a cabinet position to the government back bench because of a decision he made to vote on a specific tax bill against government policy.

Those are highly objectionable approaches to governance and to respect for this place. This is where laws are to be made. This is where debate is to be carried out. This is the place where ideas are to be put forward, and the full exploration of those ideas.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. This is a wide-ranging debate. If you can just bring it into interim supply occasionally, I will appreciate that.

Mrs Sullivan: Mr Speaker, I object to your intervention in my remarks. I am speaking to the fiscal and economic policy and the attitude of this government—

Interjections.

1600

The Acting Speaker: Order. The direction of the Chair was simply a request that the member make some occasional reference to the motion of interim supply before us and relate her remarks to that motion.

Mrs Sullivan: Mr Speaker, that is precisely what I am doing. I have been speaking about not only the fiscal and economic policies of this government—I will address se further—but the way those policies are formulated and the governance, and the respect for the governance and the place of this chamber in the course of that. That is very much a part of the debate on interim supply.

One of the things that is very much a part of that issue is the way the policies are formulated. What that means is when and how an ideology—I am not saying ideology in a derogative way. I am saying there is an ideology of this government and of that political party. There is an ideology here; there is an ideology there. What I am talking about is the way that ideology is translated into action, and frankly it is a bad performance. That bloody well is a part of the debate on interim supply, because what it talks about is who is listened to, who has a role, when advice is sought, if advice is sought, and where it is sought.

I will tell you, Mr Speaker, that this government uses the word “partnership” all over the place. In every single debate, every minister leaps up and uses the word “partnership.” I will tell you that institutions, individuals, corporations and advocacy groups tell horror stories of the results in legislation, in regulations, in announcements and directions that are a direct result of not consulting, of not forming those partnerships, of not bringing people into the action of government. There is no minister and no ministry that is exempt.

I want to recall that today in question period there were questions from my colleague the member for Oakville about the Solicitor General relating to the Sunday shopping legislation. The principals who are involved in several of the cut-rate drugstores were present in this chamber. I spoke with them afterwards. They have indicated that while they have asked for consultation directly with the Solicitor General in relation to their particular case, and have sought intervention and meetings with the minister in relationship to difficulties this legislation causes to their particular operations—3,000 jobs are at stake—they have been refused an interview either with staff or with the ministers. That is absolutely typical of what has occurred with this government.

Mr Wiseman: How did it get in there in the first place? You put it in there.

Mrs Sullivan: What was that? Mr Speaker, you intervened in my remarks. Would you intervene in their remarks?

The Acting Speaker: I do not think I have to remind the House that I do require that you listen to the member who has the floor. I have asked for that on numerous occasions today. I would appreciate if that could be the case. Of course, if when members are presenting their case, they do it forward in an inflammatory manner, it is more likely there will be interjections. However, I would ask for the cooperation of all the House.

Mr Wiseman: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I would like to point out that when a number of us came into the House, in the first instance, we were quite prepared to allow the debate to take the form that is binding in the standing orders.

The Acting Speaker: This is not a point of privilege. I am sorry.

Mr Wiseman: However, we learned that—

The Acting Speaker: Will the member take his seat, please. The member for Halton Centre has the floor.

Mr Wiseman: If they don't want interjections, they shouldn't make them themselves.

Mrs Sullivan: Mr Speaker, with your permission and the permission of the member for Durham West, I would like to continue with my remarks, because I am very concerned about what is happening in terms of the atmosphere in this province. The activities of the government have created uncertainty in many areas, and that leads to mistrust.

I want to give some examples. As you know, Mr Speaker, my role has changed recently from critic for the Ministry of the Environment to critic for the Ministry of Health, but I want to talk about some of the environmental issues. They are important issues and they matter to all of us. They matter to us in this generation and they will certainly matter in generations to come.

Whether the issue is waste management, pollution control, the reduction of accumulation of toxins in our waterways, air pollution requirements and so on, frankly, what we have seen from this government, which has a strong record in the community as being an environmental advocate, is vague rhetoric.

The first piece of legislation that came into the House from the Minister of the Environment was Bill 143. This bill will cost money, Mr Speaker, you will note. It is very much a part of the interim supply bill.

In the course of this bill, there are two issues that are of very great concern. This bill is to provide information and detail on a mandate for the Interim Waste Authority that the minister announced outside the House some time ago. The first thing this bill will do is exempt environmental assessments under the Environmental Assessment Act for interim sites. This bill sets up a new EA process that was never discussed in any way—no consultation with the communities affected. This is part of the bill:

“Environmental assessments for the sites will not be required to contain discussion of any alternatives to the landfill waste disposal sites.... Policies may be established for purposes of this part by the minister.”

That is a fundamental part of the environmental assessment process. This bill does what the Minister of the Environment said would never happen. She demanded on her own that it be a fundamental part of choosing those sites that are most environmentally appropriate, not only for today but for tomorrow. By eliminating the examination of alternatives, we could end up with landfill sites on our headwaters, on class 1 agricultural land, in all sorts of other areas that are totally environmentally inappropriate. I say to people who are part of the back bench, part of the government caucus, that this is a grave disservice—

Mr Hope: Tell us what you did. Tell us what you did.

The Acting Speaker: Order, the member for Chatham-Kent. Not just interjection, but constant interjection is totally unacceptable.

Mrs Sullivan: There was another issue I was very concerned about in the course of the announcement of this bill. The minister did not make a minister's statement in the House the day the bill was brought to the House; she gave a brief description of the bill on first reading of the bill. I believe on a matter that is as important as this, that has occupied the time of this government for close to a year and a half, there ought to have been a statement. But I want to just read from Hansard the response of the minister to a question from the member for Markham in question period yesterday. The minister indicated in her response, "The Interim Waste Authority, which is seeking the long-term sites—I am not and neither is my ministry; that is the agency doing the long-term planning—is, through the legislation, not required to consider those non-environmental alternatives."

She has said, "I am not and neither is my ministry." I would like to say that I think the minister should come back to the House and explain that further, because the Interim Waste Authority was set up as a private corporation under the Business Corporations Act, and the sole shareholder of that private corporation is the Minister of the Environment, the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore.

The minister says, "I am not and neither is my ministry." She is the sole shareholder of the corporation that is doing this work. She is the sole shareholder of the corporation that is changing the environmental assessment process, that is eliminating a fundamental, environmentally necessary part of that environmental process from the search for landfill sites in the greater Toronto area. I want to suggest that the members of her caucus should question her substantially at their next caucus meeting about this.

What has happened—this has been very clear from the cabinet document I brought to the House last June—is that there is a fundamental change of process, extralegal now being made legal, but that is a travesty.

I want to suggest that those kinds of decisions, these kinds of dumps-by-decree, almost, lead to enormous mistrust in the environmental community and in the community at large. That is something I am concerned about at a time when there is absolutely enormous cynicism among the population. The job of the opposition is to oppose, and frankly when we see something that is valid to oppose, it is important that we oppose it. I believe this particular action is substantially wrong.

There are other areas that provide enormous mistrust and add to the cynicism. I want to move for a minute or two to the health field, where we understand people are affected from birth to death, where the health budget consumes more than one third of the provincial budget, where decisions that are made affect not only the short-term operation of facilities or of systems but the long term as well.

If we look, for example, at our hospitals across the province, we will see that 50% of them have deficits. There are something like 224 hospitals in the province and 50% of them are operating in a deficit situation. In some cases, those deficits are 10%; in other cases, the deficits run up to 25%. Those hospitals have a mandate under the Public Hospitals Act to provide service to the community.

The minister has said those deficits must be eliminated, and it is appropriate that there are well-managed health services provided through the hospital system. But it is puzzling to me and it is puzzling certainly to the hospitals which have to eliminate those deficits, which have to fit into line with a directive of the minister, that indeed the minister has given no indication of any formula or guideline, no standard for bed closings, no standard for other options that are available to the hospitals. Does the minister want to see, for example, a standard of 3.5 beds per 1,000 in a community? What about 1.8 beds per 1,000? Who knows? Does the minister have a standard?

If bed closings become so substantial that a community is underserved, the hospitals are in contravention of the Public Hospitals Act. Where is the standard? The minister has not provided that. Surely when the minister, quite rightly, is insisting on a well-managed hospital system where the dollars really count, she should be coming forward with a universal formula that will apply to all community hospitals, and with specific factors that are taken into account for teaching and tertiary care hospitals. Surely that is an appropriate thing to expect from a minister who has expectations of her own from those in the community.

I note that yesterday the Minister of Health—whom I frankly admire a great deal; I think she is a very talented person who has contributed already to the work of the Legislature and will continue to do so—referred to 60 beds which the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto has indicated may at any one particular time be sitting empty in Metro. I think one of the things that was glossed over in the minister's response was that we have to understand that a body in the bed at that particular moment in time when a count is done does not mean that the bed is not fundamentally needed to provide health care services in a community.

Without the standards, without the direction from the Minister of Health, I will suggest to her there will be communities that will be underserved and that is something the Minister of Health cannot allow, because I know she is committed to the continuation of medicare, which itself implies an equitable and fair access to health care services throughout the province.

I want to move back to the question of consultation. We know the government has entered into an agreement with the Ontario Medical Association. Frankly, I regret some of the past difficulties in the relationships of our government with the doctors of the province. Some positions were impossible to bring together, but in others there could have perhaps been more accommodation reached. That is a perspective I have after the fact.

That agreement that the Ministry of Health and the government of Ontario reached with the doctors included with it a joint management committee. Other institutions, other agencies, other committees that are involved in the delivery of health services are very concerned about the role and the nature of that joint management committee. One of the things I would like to bring to the House's attention is that because Dennis Timbrell himself, a former Minister of Health and now president of the Ontario Hospital Association, complained that perhaps hospitals were going to be left out of the process, the minister and her deputy agreed that there would be a committee set up.

However, the OHA had a surprise waiting for it. I read from their latest weekly summary:

"OHA welcomes the opportunity to participate in the review, which it considers of utmost importance to the future of hospital funding"—so far so good—"but OHA is concerned that the presence of four union members on the review panel creates an imbalance and has therefore asked for two more places."

What is clear from that is that the OHA was not told at the nature of the committee was going to be or who should be included. I would have thought that had that consultation taken place at the time, there would not have been a negative follow-up reaction; there would have been a far more efficient start to what could be a useful committee.

I want to go back to the doctors' settlement for a minute, because it leads me to the position of commenting on a kind of clumsiness and sloppiness with which this government has approached much of its legislative process. The doctors' settlement, we recall, came to fruition when the member for Ottawa Centre was Minister of Health. The regulations for that settlement were only filed yesterday. They have not been gazetted and the regulations are of course retrospective regulations. It seems to me that if this government had been on top of things, those regulations could have been done at the appropriate time when the announcement was made and the agreements were signed.

In other areas there is sloppiness and clumsiness in approach. We have seen announcements from the Minister of Health about long-term care beds in Haliburton. I do not want to disparage the need for long-term beds in Haliburton, but one of the things that is puzzling to everyone in Ontario is, what is this government's definition of long-term beds? Nobody knows, and the calls that are coming into my office from health care institutions and from district health councils are all asking the same question. The minister having made an announcement, on what basis was that funding granted? That is sloppiness. It is clumsiness.

A similar example comes up in a question I raised in the House a couple of days ago relating to the removal of certain drugs from the formulary. In the context of a question period those issues perhaps cannot be explained in quite as much depth as they can through this kind of debate, but basically what has happened is that there have been four tiers of access to drugs created: first, there is a formulary; second, there is a non-formulary access; third, there is section 8, special permission; fourth, there is a new category, for AIDS patients and AIDS doctors, where a list of these doctors' names must be filed with the pharmacy, checked, and when a doctor prescribes for a patient those drugs that can only be prescribed for AIDS patients, those drugs are now included on the formulary.

This government has spoken at some length about the need for anonymous testing for AIDS patients. This is part of the policy of the government, part of the statements of the government. Yet what we find here is a policy that has been so clumsily drafted and implemented that the privacy has been stripped away, both from the patient and from the doctor. It seemed to come as a surprise to the minister. One wonders where the advice came from.

There is one issue as well that I find of great concern, and I hope other members—I know the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick has been very interested in legislation relating to the advocacy bill, the consent bill, the Substitute Decisions Act. Although when she was minister those bills did not particularly emanate from her ministry, I know she has an interest in those.

But one of the things that is of great concern—and I am asking the government to hear this argument, as it is put forward from people with whom I am speaking as Health critic—is that those three pieces of legislation will be considered together in the standing committee on administration of justice. Unfortunately, they are extremely badly drafted, and they were drafted in several cases, particularly the consent legislation, in the absence of adequate consultation. As a consequence, there are overlapping provisions in those acts and there are contradictory provisions in those acts. The Minister of Health herself has indicated that the consent bill, or at least the outcome of the consent bill, does not appropriately represent the public policy intentions of the government.

Frankly, given those circumstances, it would seem to me appropriate, and I hope the government will do this—they know I have already asked that the consent bill be withdrawn and put out for appropriate consultation. I believe this is important legislation. I believe the Advocacy Act is important legislation. The people we represent need some of the provisions that are included in these bills.

However, the overlapping or contradictory nature of this legislation is a matter of grave concern to people who are advocates themselves, to people who need advocacy services, to physicians and health care practitioners who are delivering health care services. I believe that those bills either should be withdrawn in total or the three ministers involved should make a decision that they will be used as consultative documents, a draft bill, if you like, so that appropriate legislative measures can be put before this House.

There is no one, I believe, in any party who does not want to see appropriate consent legislation, advocacy legislation and legislation relating to substitute decisions. Certainly the member for Carleton from the third party has a particular interest in the substitute decisions bill, and we have had many private members' debates on that matter.

The three pieces of legislation are too bad to fix by amendment and I believe that they are too important to be left in their current form. I would suggest, as I already have, that the legislation be taken back and a new start made. Whether these are used as draft bills for consultation or whether they are withdrawn completely and an appropriate consultation formula put into place, I really believe strongly that something better needs to be done.

I have spoken about some of the uncertainties that are being created in this kind of economic climate. Some of those have been created by the government, by certain early statements that were made in relation to who would have access and who would not, in the stories that come back about who in fact can have meetings and who cannot, who is being heard and who is not. But the uncertainty in the business and economic community is most worrying of all. We know there has been enormous job loss, not all of it the fault of this government, but one of the things that concerns me is the enormous lack of confidence in the growth and in the turnaround in the economy that the actions of this government have added to.

One of the things that is going to be vital for a turnaround in the Ontario economy is increased capital investment. Capital knows no borders these days; it is fluid. Business investment opportunities right now are not optimistic, and members can look at those figures in any economic document and any economic forecast. Some members might be interested in reading some of the material written by Robert Reich, who speaks specifically to the lack of borders now in international economies and particularly in financial institutions and the flow of capital.

When this budget document hit the streets, the document spelled out a plan which horrified many people. I had reason to review the other day a public opinion poll conducted by Environics which says that fully 75% of the people in Ontario disapprove of the economic strategy of this government: a $9.7-billion deficit, three times more than any in the past history of the government, and a spending increase of 13.4%, which has removed the flexibility for further action.

One thing that is of graver concern is that if indeed this government was using a Keynesian approach—which is not to be sneezed at; it has worked in the past, as long as the projections in the early stages are correct—one of the things that has happened is that the flexibility to react in better times is being removed, because the government has built into its economic plan a $9-billion deficit for next year, an $8.5-billion deficit for the year after and an $8-billion deficit for the year after that.

Those kinds of decisions, along with an increasing tax requirement, are decisions that will drive capital out of the province and not into the province. We are seeing a drain in the wealth creation aspects that are open to people in Ontario.

The climate of uncertainty—the clumsiness, the contradictions in policy that we have seen as this government implements its fiscal, financial and social policies—leads to only one question: What on earth is going on? The convoluted clichés, the rhetoric of advocacy without taking principled action that leads to change, the clumsiness in approach—we saw another example today in relation to the land titles offices—make one wonder, is the bureaucracy being heard at all? Are they being cut out? Who is being heard as the policies are defined?

Mr Wiseman: I have only two minutes, so it is going to be difficult to correct the record of the honourable member who has just finished, but I would like to raise a couple of points.

In the first instance, she talks about the heavy-handedness of this government. I would like to point out the heavy-handedness and the backroom dealings of her government when it decided it was going to put a landfill site in P1 without going for a full Environmental Assessment Act process, and were going to do it with the Environmental Protection Act. If she talks about something that contaminates the process and is completely unfair, she should start by explaining why this took place, and then why they flopped in this House with their first non-confidence motion and said that it should have a full environmental assessment after they had completely reneged on that.

The second thing I would like to correct concerns the Interim Waste Authority. The Interim Waste Authority is an arm's length from this government and it should be because of the kinds of machinations that went on behind the closed doors of the former Premier and the members from the region of Durham when they conspired to put the dump in north Pickering.

The Interim Waste Authority has six parts to it. Perhaps the member should read it. They set out the criteria upon which the long-term landfill sites are going to be determined. This process is completely separate from what is happening at Keele Valley and Britannia in terms of the extra lifts. The six parts clearly outline that class 1 and class 2 farm land will be exempt from landfill sites, the criteria will be developed on the state of hydrogeologic formations, and that criteria will be evaluated as to the fairness of whether future landfill sites will be put in communities that already have landfill sites.

This is a good process. It is consultative, it is an arm's length and it is going to make sure the next long-term landfill sites that are found in Durham and Durham-York are fair and devoid of the kinds of backroom dealing characterized by P1.

Mr Stockwell: The last thing we need is a lecture from the government on how to handle landfill sites and environmental concerns.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): Please address the remarks of the honourable member for Halton Centre.

Mr Stockwell: I will. The comments just made with respect to the comments of the member for Halton Centre are totally out of order and inappropriate. It is unbelievable that this member has the gall to stand up here and make such statements. The Minister of the Environment has unilaterally expanded Keele Valley and Britannia Road without so much as one minute—

Mr Wiseman: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The comments I was making were in direct reference to the honourable member's comments.

The Acting Speaker: That is not a point of order; I am sorry. That is a point of view.

Mr Wiseman: His comments are on my comments which is out of order, and they are also not accurate.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member for Etobicoke West, please.

Mr Stockwell: What really gets frustrating is that you, Mr Speaker, allowed them to finish their comments, which I consider to be totally inappropriate. When I get up to make comments on the speech from the member for Halton Centre, and comments on the comments from the member for Durham West, they insist on breaking it up because they do not want to hear the truth.

The truth is that we have not had one minute of open consultation. We have not had one minute of public hearings. We have not had one minute of environmental hearings on two sites being opened and expanded when his premier stood in this province not 14 months ago and promised never to expand a site without full environmental assessment hearings.

I do not want any more lectures from across the floor being fair and up front with the public and the electorate. They have been so—I know the word I want to use, but I am certain I cannot, but they have been less than up front with the public. The people of Peel are very upset, the people of York are very upset and I do not need any more lectures. They have more broken promises than shoes in their closet.

Mr Hope: Earlier I was ruled as being part of heckling while I was talking to my colleague the member for Essex-Kent. I just wanted to make that clear to the speaker.

I think it is very important that as we talk about the Liberal government and its five years and some of the promises that are made about this government, I must enumerate some of the things that have happened over the last five years of the Liberal government when it diverted attention to business. Members talk about business confidence; look at the employers' health tax and what it did to the small business community. They put this piece of legislation in, relieving the larger corporations that were corporate pals and put it on to the municipalities.

They talk about the consultation that the former government had. I stood in front of this park for five years trying to make sure workers had protection and were not being victimized by Liberal legislation. That is the consultation they are saying the Liberal government had. At least they are giving labour, business, municipal and federal governments the ability to consult with us and talk with us.

Yes, we are going to have philosophical differences. That is part of being in government, when sometimes one has to make decisions based on that. But when they make allegations that this government is not listening—yes, there are some people who do not always get inside. That is part of reality. Eventually, through the time frame in the government's mandate, we will be able to consult with a wide variety of people.

I think it is very important that when they start alluding to pieces of legislation and other things we are doing, they could have done things many years ago on a lot of these issues. They talk about protection of jobs. Where were they for the last five years on research and development? Then, according to their Premier, they knew the Mulroney agreement was going to damage this province, yet they never put any money into research and development, into the education system for the skills and development of the people of our future. For them to stand there and make allegations against this government is uncalled for and outrageous.

Mr Cousens: I just do not know where the members opposite are coming from when they start talking about the management of government, ability of government to do the right thing. There is absolutely no doubt in my mind and the minds of the majority of the people in this province that this government—the Minister of the Environment, the minister responsible for the greater Toronto area—has broken every promise that was made when it was in opposition.

When this government was in opposition, it said there would be a full environmental assessment and that this environmental assessment would mean there would be nothing done on Britannia or Keele Valley without that being done. The honourable member who has just spoken is trying to bring out the fact that they have failed the people of Ontario, that they are continuing to do it and that there is such a camouflage over this thing it is worse than garbage itself because something is starting to smell. It is the promises broken and the direction being taken.

If there is any doubt on this side of the House, it is that this government was elected on a set of principles and promises and have in fact not fulfilled them. I do not mind them breaking some of them. I think they can go ahead and hold back on implementing the environmental bill of rights, because quite candidly if they had introduced the one the minister and the member that has just spoken had brought in, we would be in worse trouble than ever. There are some things they do not need to rush at. Changing and backing off from auto insurance is another one.

When it comes to garbage, these guys are specialists, especially in stacking it higher and higher and doing a poorer and poorer job of it. If this House is to just sit around idly and give them dumb applause, we are not going to do it. We are not going to do it at all and we are not going to let them stand up in this House and make fools of themselves without at least our challenging them to be honest with the facts. They have not been honest with the facts. They have not been honest with the people of Ontario, and for them to think they are doing the right thing is wrong, absolutely, categorically, unequivocally wrong. It is high time the New Democrats stopped embarrassing the intelligence of the people of Ontario.

I thank the member for Halton Centre for what she was trying to say.

The Acting Speaker: This completes questions or comments. The honourable member for Halton Centre has two minutes to reply.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please.

1640

Mrs Sullivan: In responding to the outbursts and comments from members opposite, I thought I would refer back to a quote from Pierre Laporte's book called The True Face of Duplessis. As we know, Duplessis used to tell all sorts of fabulous political stories and one did not know whether they were accurate or not.

One of the stories is that in Ottawa one day Duplessis chatted with Joey Smallwood, who was then Premier of Newfoundland and of course a Liberal. He was telling him, in the presence of a group of newspaper people, that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had once made a statement that was to serve as the basis of all Liberal Party principles. Smallwood leapt to the lure and asked what Sir Wilfrid had said. Duplessis smiled, as he did on all these occasions, described at length the scene where Sir Wilfrid had made the statement, enumerated those who were present and reviewed the impression the statesman's remarks had left. Smallwood said, "Yes, but what did Laurier say?" Duplessis said, "He said the Liberal Party had one principle and that was to have none." Everyone burst out laughing and some wisecracks claimed that Mr Smallwood exclaimed, "That's fine, but why the devil did he go and say it in public?"

That is great fun from our history. What I am talking about is a government that has a principle for today and a different principle for tomorrow.

Mr Cousens: When it comes to interim supply, we are talking about the way money is being spent within our communities. I would like to take a few moments today to talk about what is happening within my own community, where there is some satisfaction but a great deal of dissatisfaction.

I cannot begin my remarks about the way the government is spending money without at least giving a compliment. I think the people who live in Markham, Unionville and Whitchurch-Stouffville have come to appreciate the way in which the previous government and this government have helped the Markham Stouffville Hospital come to reality. It is a fact that our community will never take for granted. The promise has been kept and we have within our community a hospital that somehow or other seems to be so far escaping the cuts the Minister of Health is making. I personally believe that with a fast-growing community such as ours we need to continue to have a very strong hospital. I sense there is some kind of good working together between our hospital board administration and the Ministry of Health.

I would also like to stop and say on behalf of my community that the spotlight the previous Minister of Transportation was able to approve in front of the senior citizens' home in Unionville is now in the process of being built by the Unionville Home Society. It is a rather large job. It is close to the railway tracks. It was a tricky job but none the less it was a situation where we brought a delegation of people from my community and presented the issue again. We did it to just about every Transportation minister we have had here for the last five years and finally, under the previous Transportation minister, approval was given. Again, I want to go on record and say thanks. You just cannot come along and ask and ask and not at least acknowledge when something happens the way you want it to, which I think happens to be the right way. That is only fair and right.

There are some issues, though, within our community that really need to be touched upon. I do not want to spend a great deal of time on them, but they need to be referenced in Hansard and in the House, certainly so the ministers can be aware of them.

The Children's Aid Society of York Region tried to make a point to the Minister of Community and Social Services not too long ago when it said: "We've got to increase our funding. We are the fifth-largest children's aid society in the province yet are receiving the 13th level of funding." That means the kind of budget being given the province for children's aid society services does not begin to meet the need within our community and the number of children being served.

I have the statistics here. They point to a very serious story for the last several years. It is not just something new to the socialist government we now have. It is something they inherited from the previous Liberal government. There was a failure to address the concerns of a growing community. York region has received the lowest overall percentage increase, well below the annual average percentage increase in budget across the province for the years 1982-87. York region consistently ranked second third lowest in dollar allocation per child population across the province for the years under review. They receive only one third of the average percentage increase awarded to societies in the proximity of York. York region receives the lowest dollar allocation per child population relative to societies adjacent to York—Durham, Peel and Simcoe. The fact of the matter is that we have been shortchanged York region for our children's aid society.

This government, through interim supply, is going on to spend its money again. All I am asking is that there be equity and fairness in what happens in York region and our neighbouring municipalities. If we have a need, it should be subsidized. It is important to the province to make sure there is equity in the funding mechanisms. I go on record now, as I have been on record before: There is no equity right now for the funding of the children's aid society in York region, and I challenge this government to review that funding again.

The board of directors has resigned. It has been replaced by another board of very interested and caring people from the community who want to maintain the service of the children's aid society. But if they are not going to get the money, we are not going to be able to provide the service and we will end up incurring another deficit, as we had a few years ago. I implore the Minister of Community and Social Services to look at the needs of our children's aid society in York region.

I also bring to the attention of this minister the needs of people in Participation House. Participation House is a very special place in northeast Metro, serving people in Durham and York who are handicapped and yet want to have freedom to live on their own. I was at a special breakfast this morning organized by Cliff Moss. The chief of police was there and the mayor of our town. The chairman of the board, Bob Sherwood, and members of the board were all on hand. These people were all put in by acclamation, so I do not have to give plugs to people. I think when you do things in your community, you will be acclaimed. I want to acclaim them here in this House.

We as a society have a continuing responsibility to help those people who are handicapped in different ways to get out and be part of the community. Two proposals submitted to the Ministry of Community and Social Services would have assisted the residents in Participation House to get out there and live in the Water Street residence at Cedar Crest or at Holy Trinity Square, which is also being built now in Markham. In both these cases, space was set so these people could be integrated into the rest of the community that was being built. The fact of the matter is that the 13 units that were set aside in the Cedar Crest Water Street property are still empty. It is not just Participation House. We also have the Villa on Bathurst Street. There are residents being moved out of the Villa who would go into these units.

The fact is that the government of Ontario, this government which is supposed to have the biggest heart of any government you have ever seen, has not found the money, the heart or the substance or the time to look at these concerns. I am satisfied that they have missed an opportunity. Maybe there is still time to do something about it, to use both the Water Street residence and Holy Trinity. There are places for people. They can be integrated into other seniors' community, such as we have done with St. George's in Thornhill, yet this government seems to have a closed mind to it.

I make these remarks now and I will copy them to the Minister of Community and Social Services in the hope that there is still another chance for this government to do something for these people within our communities.

I also want to point out another area where the Minister of Community and Social Services is failing our communities. I could not believe it, but the other morning I learned that the Family Life Centre, a group of professionally subsidized by people who can afford to pay but also by the United Way and by the government, had to reduce its services last November and December, that is, in 1990, because it did not have enough funds in order to continue to provide them.

We have a fast-growing community in the southern part of York region which has to continue to provide services for families in crisis. Yet this government, in its lack of wisdom, has not made the funding available so those services can be continued. I have to say there is something wrong with its priorities. It is something that should be looked at to make sure those who need help are sure to get it.

I briefly want to mention the problems with the school board. There have been letters. I want to quote briefly from some of the letters from the chairman of the York Region Board of Education. It is part of the Growth Boards Coalition. They wanted a meeting with the Premier to discuss the problems they were having with lot levies, in order to implement what was Bill 20, to collect the money that will be used for new buildings, new schools, new lots. Here is the letter:

"Lot levies will help us to keep up with the growth and to have the new residents who move into our areas pay for new schools. It is imperative that the Premier meet with us immediately to resolve this matter," said Mr. [Name] back on February 7, 1990.

I have to say it is only in the last week or so, some six or seven months after that letter, that they finally resolved the problem, not in the time frame that it should have been resolved, and there never was a meeting with the Premier. So many people are clamouring for an opportunity to meet with someone senior in this government to address and resolve problems, and no one seems to be available?

I challenge this government. It is responsible not only for the funds to administer programs but also to meet with the people who have concerns about them to see what it can do to help balance it off, meet their needs, adjust them, make the changes that are required, fine-tune them. I challenge the New Democrats to be more open with the people of our society who are asking for that opportunity.

Another example where there is a failure in communication has to do with the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who failed to respond to letters from York region for months. It had to do with what the region felt it needed, and that was a guarantee or some change to the Regional Municipality of York Act that would allow the region to proceed with the 911 exchange. In correspondence with the minister, they sought that kind of legislative change that would permit the region of York to go ahead with the 911 exchange.

Because of the extraordinarily long delay by the Minister of Municipal Affairs, York region has delayed the implementation of its 911 exchange by something like six months, purely an administrative delay by this minister. As it turned out, the region did not have to have a change to the Regional Municipality of York Act, but in the meantime, the failure of the minister to deal with this issue, where a letter was sufficient rather than a change in the act, has in fact caused a delay to an important need to our community.

The member for Leeds-Grenville raised issues today with the Solicitor General on the 911 exchange. I raise it now on another level with the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who has failed again.

I point to this government. It has a chance to support another airport in the Metropolitan Toronto area. The town of Markham has tabled a proposal with this government asking for support to finance the acquisition of the Buttonville airport so that the Buttonville airport, which is a very viable airport—I think it is the seventh largest in Canada—can continue to serve the needs of our communities in York region and northeast Metro.

The fact of the matter is it would appear to me now that the Ministry of Transportation is not going to proceed with the approval of Buttonville airport. It is the kind of win-win situation where the ministry looks for outside financing first. If that is not there, it should come back and review again the viability of maintaining Buttonville airport.

I strongly believe in the need for that airport. The alternative is not nearly as good as Buttonville. They are looking at the possibility of expanding an airport up on Highway 48 and it is going to end up bringing an awful lot of traffic over the existing community of Markham. I just cannot accept that view as being sensible.

This government has a chance to continue to accelerate Highway 407. If there is anything we need, it is to make sure we build in and around the greater Toronto area an infrastructure that allows for traffic and people to keep moving. Highway 407 is proceeding but not at the pace it should. It needs to be given a far greater priority.

I cannot believe the people who are building these roads and highways. If we had people working a little bit more around the clock in the summertime, instead of seemingly only having to work on those projects for five or six hours during the day—it is probably longer. As you drive by and see the coffee break or the milk break or the rest break or the sun break, you begin to wonder how much urgency is attached to the projects under construction on the roads which cause you to detour all around them.

If the government began to say, "Look, we want to get people moving around here; we don't want to hold them up," it would start having some of these jobs worked on over a 24-hour period so that we could get the traffic going again. Every dollar spent on transportation nets out to be $10 more that it generates within the community.

I am saying transportation is an urgent need within all our communities. Certainly it is within mine. We need to see an acceleration of the work done on Highway 407 and we also need to see something done about the grade separation for the rail transportation systems, with the north-south route intersecting with the east-west route. There will have to be a major grade separation on the rail tracks on either the Thornhill line or the Unionville-Stouffville line. We realize the high cost associated with that is something in the order of $70 million, to build a grade separation of the kind I am talking about, but what we need here is a rail service provided to the areas north of Toronto so that people have something of the kind of day-round service that is provided on the east-west circuit through Oakville and Oshawa. We deserve, we need and we are paying for the kind of services that would give us far more service during the daytime through Richmond Hill, Thornhill, Langstaff, Stouffville, Markham, Unionville and Milliken.

One could go on with a number of other areas where this government needs to understand the application of funds. I represent a community that is very fast-growing. We are an area that is different from those that are stable, that have been established for a long period of time. Somehow this government has to understand that we have different needs than those that have been established for a longer period.

I hope we will find ways in which this government can work out that kind of equity. I do not think it is easy. I wish there would be a chance in which we as a Legislature could sit around a table and work it out together. Instead, I do not see that at all. I see it as an increasingly adversarial system where the anger from those in opposition is being increased by virtue of the disregard the government shows to our issues. Personally I have not sensed the depth of anger that I feel in this House today and more recently. It has to do with the breakdown of communications, the breakdown of working relationships.

The ministries are showing an increasing disregard for the processes of this House. The Ministry of the Environment makes announcements outside the Legislature, not in here, and it continues to do it. I ended up having to wait for two days to receive information about what it was the minister had announced. I was able to get it in the Toronto newspapers, but I was not able to get it from the minister herself. That is the kind of breakdown that leads to increased frustration and the increased set of tensions that are making this place a more unpleasant place to work.

There are other issues. The money is going to be there. They are going to get it approved. I know that I am not about to disagree with the fact that the civil servants' salaries have to be paid. The government must go on, but it is important to put on the record that there are a number of things that are wrong in this province. The government has a chance to correct them. It should not radically overhaul it, but let's work together to try to make it a better place to live.

Mr Hope: One thing I always do when the member for Markham speaks is listen to what he has to say, because he raises some good points at times. Then at other times he gets a little lost in political partisanship and that is unfortunate.

The member raised a number of concerns dealing with the Ministry of Community and Social Services, the lack of funding, the direction, but these problems have not occurred just in a year. They have been problems of funding mechanisms that have been there for years. We understand the rapid growth he talks about around the Metropolitan Toronto area, but one of the hardest things we have to understand in the Conservative Party, and also in the Liberal Party at times, is that they are telling us to spend and then they are telling us not to spend. It is hard to get the direction.

I know the member for Markham really speaks sincerely about the community he represents, but in the tough economic times we are faced with today in Ontario, if he wants us to help those community groups and the community service programs that are out there, I think it is very important he makes sure he does not waffle on situation here. If he wants to spend, we can make arrangements to straighten out the funding mechanism to make sure that the service programs he has talked about, children's aid funds, for instance, are addressed on those issues.

One of the unfortunate things that I must say to the member for Markham is that these are not problems that have just occurred in one year; they are problems that have escalated over years. It has now become a financial barrier to those service programs. We will be addressing a lot of them, and I am very confident that this government, through its communications that the member so eloquently said we are not doing—we are communicating with those groups and are trying to make sure we can address the needs of the communities not only in Markham but in the communities throughout.

Mr Bradley: I am always interested in the speech of the member for Markham, because he has a wide variety of interests in issues confronting the House. One of them is that he did not confront with a degree of specificity, as John Clark used to say, that I would have liked to see was the issue of being able to see him on TVOntario at night. We are very fortunate—this is the fifth anniversary, I believe, of television in the House. I recall putting a resolution before the House with a lot of support from Elie Martel, a time the member for Sudbury East, about televising House.

Once one becomes a member of the government it is always that good an idea, but I know that the member Markham, and probably it slipped in his notes, would have wanted to say he wanted to see TVO, the television work of the province of Ontario, showing question period back at the old time of 11:30, when most people could not go up at night and watch what went on, because not everybody can watch this on cable, not everybody can afford it. The NDP has long said that it is a supporter of lower-income people, so I know that the people in the NDP will be asking TVO to put the question period on at 11:30 at night or even earlier at night.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: I know that the French version is on earlier in the evening and I try to remember my high school French well enough to understand what questions are being asked and which are being answered appropriately. It does not seem to make much difference whether it is in French or English in any event.

Nevertheless, I hope that all of these people who say they are protectors of the interests of lower-income people will make representations to that person who is so successful with the spending of government dollars, the chairman of TVO, to ensure that we have it back on at 11:30.

Mr McLean: I just want to comment briefly on the member for Markham's comments with regard to the monetary policies of this government. He touched on the subjects which are very close to my heart. One of the main ones is where he talked about the school funding, where this government campaigned on increasing the costs of education back to 60% over five years. I believe that the government has reneged on that promise. It has not been moving forward.

He talked about the garbage situation in Ontario and when we look at the flip-flops that have been made it certainly leaves cause for concern. It has even been announced lately that the minister may be wanting to increase the GTA so that she can get rid of the garbage in the surrounding areas and still be classified as under the GTA. It is something to watch for, because it may happen, and it may be on some agricultural land where the Minister of Agriculture and Food may have some concern.

The member for Markham also talked about the Toronto-Buttonville International Airport. I think this government should be looking at being a partner in that facility, because it is an area where it is needed. I think the remarks that he made with regard to the Buttonville airport were very important.

The member also remarked regarding transportation and the GO trains. When members look at what has taken place in this province in the last few years and when we look at the road systems we have in this province, we have to ask the question, who put those roads in this province over the past 40 years? We all know who did it—it was the taxpayers—but it was the leadership that was shown that made it happen. I say to the government, and I compliment the member, that greater emphasis must be put on the expansion of our major highways.

Hon Mr Buchanan: In the spirit of the member's comments, towards the end of his speech he talked about the spirit in this Legislature. I would like to make a few very brief comments. I would like to pay tribute to the way he conducted himself. He was able to say some positive things about what the government has done. He was able to criticize some of the things we have done in a fairly constructive way. This government, of course, is not above criticism. We sometimes may make mistakes, and the opposition is here to remind us of those things. We appreciate that when it is done in a constructive way.

I would also say that the member addressed the topic that is before us today from a different ministry's perspective and from the municipality and riding he represents. I think if all members in the House when they are speaking to a bill would try and address the concerns of their constituency, this would be a much more positive place in which to work. I would like to compliment him on the way he conducted himself. If all members did the same in this House, we would have a much more positive place in which to work.

Mr Cousens: First, I want to thank the Minister of Agriculture and Food for his remarks. I sincerely believe we have to try to work together, and when we do that, we will somehow make this a better province. The spirit has to be there and we have to continue to try to find that spirit. I appreciate the minister's remarks, and that is certainly where I want to come from.

I also want to thank my friend and colleague the member for Simcoe East for his eloquent statements. I think there is a real sense of understanding when you can have someone from way up north of Metropolitan Toronto understanding the needs of those who are our suburban residents around the greater Toronto area. So I thank him for that support. I think that is part of the thing we also need in this House. We cannot just have people saying, "Hey, I want something for Toronto," without also recognizing that northern Ontario has great needs and agricultural Ontario has needs and we have to balance off those needs with one another.

That leads to the problems I have with my friend the member for Chatham-Kent. He fails to see the balance that has to take place. When I pointed out that we have immediate problems right now with the Water Street seniors' home, the Holy Trinity Square, the Family Life Centre, the children's aid society, those are all very strong current issues that are before this ministry and this government in the Ministry of Community and Social Services. I am saying get on the ball. There is still hope, and members cannot just keep saying, "Blame it on the Liberals." I think they are to blame for an awful lot of our problems, but there are issues right now which this government has to get hold of and take seriously and respond to.

My final remark is I did not know until the member for St Catharines just told us that it is the fifth anniversary of this telecast that people are watching. How painful for those 250,000 people to watch this group of amateurs standing up and doing our bit. All I can say is that I agree with them: It should not have to be something you have to pay for. Why not put it on CTV at 11:30?

Mr Ruprecht: Our debate on interim supply is coloured by one realization: We are broke. We are unable to pay our bills. In fact, it is so bad that our debt is now in the neighbourhood of $9.7 billion—

An hon member: And rising.

Mr Ruprecht: —and rising. If most of us were to operate on the same basis as this government, we obviously would be unable to pay our bills, we would be unable to pay our mortgages and we would be out on our ears. The problem here is that this government is concentrating not on wealth creation but on wealth distribution. They simply cannot and they will never be able to get out of debt if they are unable to concentrate on wealth creation.

What does this government do to keep us competitive? To be fair, there is one good thing that happened just last week, and that was the Minister of Skills Development realizing that we obviously needed the necessary skills to be competitive with other countries around the world. What the government should be concentrating on—and obviously we can play a part in this—is ensuring that the brain power is being channelled not simply into paying and increasing welfare costs but into looking at what we can do in order to access a market of 270 million people.

It is an opportunity we have. While most of us would probably disagree in terms of what has happened with free trade—the point must be made—we have to look for opportunities to access that market. This government is changing the whole focus of what it ought to be doing, looking at the opportunities, and not the other way around.

The question should be raised, how do we get out of this debt, since we are broke and cannot pay our bills? It is obvious, I think, and we have talked about this a number of times. For instance, we all know that if we want to be competitive, we have to ensure that we create jobs.

I recall and I know my colleagues will recall one of the promises this government made not too long ago: “We’ll produce jobs, jobs, jobs.” It almost sounded like our Conservative friends, but the promise of jobs, jobs, jobs never came true. In fact, the opposite happened. What has really happened is that we have seen the jobs that were promised fleeing the marketplace, fleeing the province, and consequently it is not as my colleague says, “More jobs, jobs, jobs,” but less jobs, jobs, jobs. Who is going to pay our bills? Who is going to pay for this interim supply bill today?

Obviously we are being overtaxed, and money is fleeing the province. The reason is that when some of the European people who have had millions of dollars invested in Ontario saw the NDP coming in to take over the government, they equated that with communism in Europe and consequently said, “We don’t wish to take a chance on this and we’re pulling our money out.” That can be documented and I am really sorry to say that has indeed happened.

I do not wish for this to happen, but the question has to be, how do we pay our debts? There is no doubt that what we have to do and what we have to concentrate on is ensure that the creation of jobs is totally connected not only with the idea of natural resources, shipping them out and going back to the old concept of Canada being the nation of hewers of wood and drawers of water; the point has to be that we have to create labour-intensive industries. That is the only issue here. That is the only way we are going to get our bills paid. No other way is possible.

What ought to be done is that this government has to have a shift of attitude, and the shift and the concentration have to be towards job creation, labour-intensive industries. Let’s look at the statistics. We have lost a hell of a number of jobs, but some people, some gurus, some pig heads, as some of the members call them, are saying “Well, maybe it’s not so bad. We haven’t quite lost as many jobs as we were expecting.”

The point is that labour-intensive jobs are necessary and while there may be an increase in some sectors of the economy in terms of job creation, the question has to be raised, what kinds of jobs are being created? It is not the kinds of jobs we want; it is not the union kinds of jobs we wish for. They are not the kinds of jobs that pay mortgages. The jobs are part-time, they are not labour-intensive. The jobs in the service industries, which pay a minimum wage, cannot pay mortgages. It is clear what we need and it is clear what this government ought to be concentrating on at this time—not wealth distribution but wealth creation.

The reason people are leaving this province as well as that they are not only seeing increases in taxation, they are also seeing how their money is being applied. The question for this government should be, “Are we spending our money effectively?” It is obvious what the answer should be. It is not effective. We have lost a number of jobs. We know it is a fact today that you can make more money being on welfare than having a job. When people work all hours of the day, and some even at night, see their money and try to pay their taxes, which in some instances are up to 40%, 45% or 50%, and then see the money being wasted in a way that is not being productively creative, it is wasted to the point where they find thousands of dollars being spent on liquor and wine in some of the ministries that cannot create jobs that will pay enough, then we know it is a sad day for Ontario.

It has to be pointed out that the government still has a chance. It is not too late. How long are you going to be here as the NDP government of Ontario? Two more years would you say; three, four or even five?

The Deputy Speaker: Order. Address your remarks to the Chair.

Mr Ruprecht: I just want to point this out because it is not too late to pay this interim supply bill. The government still has a chance to shift its attitude from wealth distribution to wealth creation. If it does, we will help the government. This is not a partisan remark. I know my colleagues would all agree with what we would like to see this province turn into.

This province should be the flower of North America. It ought to be, when all the emigrants across the world are looking to Ontario as a place where they want to settle, not cause our cities are crime-ridden but because there are jobs here. The only thing that will attract people to Ontario is if we invest money in it is if there are jobs, if there is a stable economy, our force and if people can get a return on their investment. Those are the facts the government ought to be concentrating on—job creation, not job losses. That is why I think it still has a chance.

The government might have two more years to go before the next election; it might have three more years before the next election. In fact, if it is running right against the wall, it might even have four years before the next election. They had better have one thing clear in their minds, one thing for sure, because the voters out there and the residents of Ontario will judge them badly and the responsibility will be on the shoulders of the government if it bankrupts this province. They are already doing it in a big way. The one thing they should remember is that the debt is clear; it is $9.7 billion. What will the government do next year? I am hoping that with our help the shift will take place and the debts will be reduced, but obviously they need some co-operation.

Let me just address two more issues that are important to me in my own area. I recently sent a letter to the Minister of Housing. Do the members know why I did that? Because she said to me one day: "At 1215 Queen Street West we've got a wonderful program. We're going to give you 97 supportive housing units which will house, obviously, some ex-psychiatric patients, which all of us would support, and those who need housing. It's great." I said, "Why would you want to put it on that corner?" All the residents are upset, not because of the not in my backyard syndrome; in Parkdale we take more than our fair share and we greet people with open arms from all over Canada. That is not the point. The neighbours have said this does not fit into this community, not only architecturally. If the Minister of Housing will give us an answer, what will she say with the area and with the apartments or houses people will come from when they move into this new unit?

20 It is one thing to say it is great for Parkdale, and most of the people who will go into these new units will come from Parkdale, but obviously that cannot be the answer. The answer must rest with one fact, and that is that we must improve social housing in the areas where people are. We must look at these slum conditions people are living in presently and improve them. If we do not do that, if we simply supply new housing and say, "Your residents are going to be helped," the question should then be raised: What happens if they move out from slums into the new ones? What will happen to the slums?

What is the answer? What will happen to the slums? The NDP government does not have a policy. It does not have an idea. It does not have the initiative to do anything about this. It is leaving the slums as they are and not improving them. All this government is doing is spending good taxpayers' money, millions of dollars, without looking at the community, without seeing what the community wants, without being effective. That ought to be one of the reasons the NDP has come into this place and the government.

My final point is on drugs. Let me simply make a recommendation to this government. When we were in office, we had established the provincial anti-drug strategy. They know it because they applauded the Liberals previously for establishing a provincial anti-drug strategy, and even today we occasionally get some comments from them saying that was a great idea.

The provincial anti-drug strategy obviously must be overhauled, because conditions keep on changing. It would also be incumbent on this government not simply to take the Liberal ideas we brought forward when we created the anti-drug strategy, but to overhaul it, to make it more effective. Obviously that is one of the prime targets in some areas of Metro Toronto. We all know there are crime hot spots. We all know what the police tell us. We all know the police say crime is very much connected with the illicit drug trade. If we have to spend millions of dollars because criminals are on the street and because they are on drugs and drug trafficking is taking over some neighbourhoods and people are feeling unsafe, and if prostitution along with drug trafficking becomes a situation that is unbearable for some neighbourhoods, obviously this government ought to do something specific.

One thing I would recommend specifically, as the critic for the provincial anti-drug strategy, is to look at the recommendations that were made: the recommendations we have made, the recommendations Metro council has made, the recommendations the city of Toronto has made. Essentially we have to be tougher and we have to have the treatment centres. As my colleague the member for Scarborough-Agincourt said, we need the beds. Simply cutting off access to the US is supported by us, but that cannot be the end result. When you cut things off, you have to produce the beds and the treatment centres that are essential to deal with people who need the services. That is necessary. The money obviously has to flow in the direction in which it is most needed to help those who are on drugs and who want to get off drugs. It is obvious.

I am asking this government today to ensure that the necessary funding is in place, that the necessary effective programs will be in place to deal with drugs, and this would include a number of ministries. For instance, the Minister of Transportation, the Solicitor General, the Minister of Health and the Minister of Correctional Services all have a very direct role to play in terms of fighting the illicit drug trade. We will be addressing ourselves again to this issue.

Finally, let me simply say that there will be no disconcerting opposition from us if the government follows some of the guidelines it has set previously. We wish them well, but we wish as well that they would look at the recommendations the opposition has made and act on them, because it is in the interest not only of the NDP or of the Liberals or of the Conservatives, but of all of us, who really represent all of Ontario. While we necessarily have to co-operate on some of these issues, it would pay this government to think about what the opposition is saying and to ensure that some of the recommendations we are making are being instituted.

Ms Poole: I am pleased to join in the debate today as we talk about interim supply and the importance of a positive fiscal policy for the people of this province.

I came across an article in the Toronto Star the other day that to me epitomized much of my own thoughts about the current government, because when you are looking at fiscal policy, you have to go beyond that. You have to look at the beliefs of the party involved. You have to look at its history. You have to look at its ideology. Then you understand what formulates that fiscal policy.

The article I am going to quote from is by George Fallis, who chairs the department of economics at York University:

"Everyone was surprised when the New Democratic Party was elected with a solid majority in Ontario and most were optimistic that a social democratic party could provide fresh analysis for the challenges in the 1990s. The NDP offered a greater concern for unemployment, the environment and social justice, and we welcomed this. However, optimism has quickly turned to dismay as each policy emerged—the budget, labour law, waste disposal, the housing framework and so on. These were not fresh thinking, but heavy-handed application of approaches discredited elsewhere.

"It is a puzzle: Why have the NDP programs been so wrong-headed?

"In part, it is simply inexperience in governing. Many of the caucus and even the cabinet had never before held elected office, let alone run a government. New governments tend to distrust the advice of the civil service. Also, it is caused by the disorientation of shifting from an opposition mentality to a governing mentality. This is especially a problem for the NDP.

"However, the causes run deeper. The NDP is not just a political party; it is a social movement with a 'we-they' world view. There is much wrong with the world and 'they' are to blame and 'we' will fight to correct it. In its crudest form, it is the old class struggle between labour (now called ordinary Canadians) and capital (now called big business). It's 'us' against 'them.'

"The we-they mentality means that the NDP never instinctively thinks about the financial cost of any program. If the program must be paid for, just raise taxes on 'them.'

"But most significantly, the we-they world view has meant the NDP has misunderstood what has been happening in Canada and in all Western countries over the last 15 years....

"One of the most obvious, yet painfully learned, lessons of the last 15 years is that financing social programs and fighting a recession with massive deficits is not a sustainable long-term strategy. At the very least, the government gives up necessary fiscal flexibility in the future. The Rae government gave up fiscal flexibility for the rest of its mandate in one budget. Fiscal restraint will be the order of the day for the next few years. As the NDP considers raising taxes, it becomes clear that there aren't many of 'them.' 'We have met the enemy and he is us!' cried Pogo. Two lessons learned.

"The central dilemma for democratic socialists is how to pursue social justice with fiscal discipline. The ends of full employment, a clean environment and empowerment do not have to be abandoned. But the means must be rethought and the constraints recognized—especially the fiscal constraint and the fact that people and capital are increasingly mobile. The intellectual left in Ontario is failing the very constituency it claims to serve by refusing to acknowledge this....

"Ontarians will pay the taxes for high-quality public services and social protection if the government provides the services efficiently, pragmatically and with fiscal responsibility. The first months of NDP government are eroding this willingness as fast as the pernicious teachings of neo-Conservatives.

"We ordinary people can only hope that history is reinterpreted"—

Mr Wiseman: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to apologize first for interrupting the member, but there really is an obnoxious odour emanating from the desk of the honourable member for Markham and I think we should ask him to remove it. I think he has made his point about pollution.

The Deputy Speaker: It is not a point of order.

Ms Poole: Actually I was just at the last line of this article and then I have a few other comments to make. The closing remarks of Mr Fallis were, "We ordinary people can only hope that history is reinterpreted and the rest of the lessons of the last 15 years are learned—quickly."

From this article, which I heartily concur with, I think it is obvious that a party's history and ideology do affect its fiscal policy. But where this government has got into trouble is that it has not put the planning in place that one needs to have the proper programs, to have the proper fiscal planning and to have the proper spending.

Just yesterday while I was sitting at my desk, I made a list of areas in which the NDP has shown that its planning has been non-existent and, because of this, has had to retreat. They had to change their plans, such as they were; they had to change their minds and come out in full retreat. One of my colleagues recently said that every time the NDP retreats, the whole province breathes a gigantic sigh of relief, and so it is for many of their policies.

Look at the list of retreats from NDP promises: first of all, the heart and core of the NDP, auto insurance. Driver-owned auto insurance a pipedream? Yes, because this government realized that its pipedream was not realizable.

Second, the area I am very familiar with, the area the government promised to present to the people, real rent control: one guideline increase per year based on inflation and nothing else, no extra bonuses for capital or for financial considerations. That is not what the people of Ontario got. They did not get real rent control.

Another area of housing where there has been a recent retreat, which again gets back to the fiscal policy, is that in June this government very proudly announced that it would make affordable housing its first priority for government lands and when it is getting rid of surplus land. But because the budget was so devastating, because the deficit was so devastating, recently the NDP government has had to backtrack on that and now it is saying that surplus land for affordable housing will have to be sold to help pay off the deficit. Again there is no planning.

Look at the labour legislation. First they introduced Bill 70. Then, to appease the business community, which rose up in arms, they had to gut Bill 70. Also in the labour area, they have been stalling pay equity legislation, which they promised in the spring. It is now almost November and still not here.

Look at their retreats in the area of energy: first of all, withdrawals of sections expanding Hydro's mandate in Bill 118, a total retreat by the government; second, in their campaign promises—I think members all remember this—they promised no new nuclear facilities but also the phasing out of existing reactors. Where is this policy? Again a retreat. They backed down on Eliesen's salary.

Going on to the environment, this has been one of the biggest disappointments in the retreats by this government. I remember the current Minister of the Environment when she was in opposition and when she was promising to require the strictest of environmental assessments and protections for landfill sites. Now what do we find? She has completely reneged. I remember her also criticizing the Liberal government for not enforcing the 30% quota for glass pop bottles. The problem has only got worse since that time and this Minister of the Environment does nothing.

The NDP promised an immediate ban on CFCs in flexible furniture, foam and rigid foam insulation. An immediate ban? Where is it? They promised a clean air bill within six months. They promised an immediate environmental bill of rights. They promised they would pass the Ontario Safe Drinking Water Act right away. Yet what do we hear? We either hear nothing or the fact that they are going to study it or commission on it for another year or two or 10.

Then we get down to Treasury. During the election, the NDP promised all sorts of things, such as a speculation tax, a wealth tax, new corporate taxes, new minimum wages, all sort of things. Yet what do we find? They have siphoned them all to the Fair Tax Commission and said to the people of Ontario, "You have to wait."

They have retreated on the gas guzzler tax, which was an incredibly ill-thought-out scheme in the budget.

If members remember this—in fact, the Minister for Northern Development and Mines is sitting here right now and I think it was in her brochure—they promised they would reduce the sales tax from 8% to 7% immediately. It was in the minister's brochure.

They promised to lead the tax revolt against the GST, again a campaign promise, but what happened to the revolt? It just sizzled down to nothingness.

We get to education. You might say they have done nothing on education, and that would probably be a worthy comment, but what they did promise on education was 50% funding by the province. Where is this promise? In thin air as well.

Sunday shopping: They promised a common pause day, but if there is a common pause day in their current legislation, I challenge them to tell us what that common pause day is. Recently when they bowed to demands to help save our business community by allowing stores to open during the Christmas season, they said, "We're going to do this, but only for the month of December." They were willing to abrogate what they called a common pause day in December but not the rest of the year. It is poor planning.

Transportation: It seems again they are changing their mind on the Red Hill Creek Expressway. They talked about GO Transit to Peterborough and Brantford and how they were going to expand that, but I have not seen it yet.

The Ministry of Revenue is another area with which I am quite familiar. When they were in opposition, their party had a policy where they would not support the further introduction of market value assessment in Ontario. Yet this same Minister of Revenue stood up in this House this spring and said that they are proceeding with the Metro market value assessment proposal.

Universities and colleges: This was the party that first promised to eliminate tuition fees, and then it promised to freeze tuition fees, but instead what it did was raise tuition fees.

Finally we get to the whole area of social services, where the NDP promised to put food banks out of business by fighting poverty. I remember the Minister of Community and Social Services standing up last November and saying to the opposition, "Give me three months to end poverty." I only wish it were possible, but to me that represents the idealism, and some unkind people would say the naïveté, of this government, that it could eliminate poverty in three months. What I want to know is, what are they doing? What steps are they taking to eliminate poverty?

Also in the area of social services, they promised 10,000 new non-profit child care spaces and subsidies on 10,000 spaces in each of the first two years. This year 5,000 spaces were promised, but the problem is that this government's ill-conceived viewpoint of how to deal with the commercial child care sector has meant we have lost as many commercial sector spaces as we have gained in the non-profit sector. The net result for the child care community is that it is badly suffering and it is looking for a signal from this government that it is going to act to change this.

Both from its fiscal policy and its social policy, this government has to learn that planning is essential in government. You cannot have a sham of a consultation process that is not meaningful, that does not allow enough time, that does not involve all the parties, that does not listen to the input, that rushes things through and then expects to have not only a good fiscal plan but a good social plan. The people of this province over the last number of months have indicated quite strongly that they want this government to shape up, or in three to four years from now it will be shipped out, because they are not willing to sustain taxes. They are not willing to look at the camouflage of this government that has a $10-billion deficit.

But that is not the worst of it. That in itself is horrific, but look at the fact of next year, the year after and the year after that. Look at the deficits they are projecting to incur for the next four years. In the next four years this government is going to double our provincial debt, and I do not know whether the people of this province even realize that.

I think many of them do. Certainly in the business sector they realize this and it is one of the reasons this government has no credibility in the business sector. They have no credibility because of the budget this year but also because of the flagrant, irresponsible and wild spending projected over the next four years.

People could accept that in the time of a recession things are different, that perhaps there would have to be some deficit incurred. I think we are willing to concede that to the government. This was not going to be the year of the balanced budget, but one thing is clear: The people of this province expected constraint and restraint. Of course the NDP responded eventually, some six months later, by saying it was going to restrain. What they did was to freeze MPPs' salaries. That is a nice symbolic gesture. It is always very good to do that. The public is fully supportive of freezing politicians' salaries, but they froze 2% of the salaries. What did their buddies in the union get, 6%? This is what is called collective bargaining. You hammer the symbolic few and meanwhile the fiscal situation rages out of control because you are not getting at the root of the problem.

I think it is obvious that the people of this province are at an all-time low in tolerance. They are not willing to entertain high taxes. They are not willing to carry a $10-billion deficit. They are not willing for this government not to have a long-term plan. The Treasurer, our master storyteller from Nickel Belt, for whom I have the greatest imagination—not imagination, that is not the word; respect—that is what I have for him.

An hon member: He uses his imagination.

Ms Poole: He uses his imagination; that is right. The Treasurer and I share at least one thing and that is our lack of height. That has not impeded us in any way. I ask the Treasurer, is that not right?

Hon Mr Laughren: It has not hurt our relationship at all.

Ms Poole: It has not hurt our relationship. I am not sure it has enhanced it. Nevertheless I am sorry, Treasurer, you were not here to hear the other comments I made.

The Deputy Speaker: Please address the Chair.

Ms Poole: I am sorry, Mr Speaker, particularly when we have such a fine upstanding Speaker. Far be it from me not to make my remarks through you. I apologize.

When I make references to the Treasurer, I have a lot of admiration for him, but unfortunately I think by the time he figured out what Treasury was all about and what the whole idea of fiscal responsibility was all about—

Mr Sola: And what reality was all about.

Ms Poole: And what reality was all about, as my colleague the member for Mississauga East says. By the time he found out what this was all about, the cat was among the pigeons, the horses were out of the barn.

My leader has just arrived, so people will be most delighted to know that I am winding up my remarks.

I just say to the members of the NDP, fiscal responsibility is not a luxury these days, it is a necessity. I hope they will look again at their fiscal responsibility. I know when my leader gives his words of wisdom to them, they will listen, because my leader will try to guide them, to be helpful and co-operative. I know that is what this NDP government needs. They need advice and they need to listen.

Mr Bradley: The speech was excellent, as we always expect from the member for Eglinton. I was wondering why she did not include in her pleas to the government for permissions and so on the reinforcement of the position of the members for the Niagara region in favour of a CAT scanner for one of the hospitals in that area. She probably neglected it at that moment because she knew others would raise it.

One of the other things I wondered whether she would talk about was that I hope I have been able to assist her and the government in saving at least one job in the province of Ontario. I noticed that when I asked the question of the Premier this afternoon about the member for Welland-Thorold and the member for Lincoln, who had been fired from their jobs by the Premier because they dared to dissent from the government, the government House leader, the chief government whip and the member for Lincoln all disappeared into the back room.

I was hoping as a result of this intervention on behalf of my colleagues from Niagara, because I have a lot of empathy for them, that perhaps by the time they got out to the scrum, the Premier would have reinstated the member for Lincoln to his position of Chair of the standing committee on finance and economic affairs of the Ontario Legislature. I hope that is the case. If my intervention has assisted that member in retaining his job, I hope I can be equally successful with the member for Welland-Thorold, who dared to dissent in the standing committee on administration of justice from the line that was spouted by the government and those enforced by the whip of the government. He happened to say he was disappointed because he felt the people who had voted NDP on the Sunday shopping issue had been betrayed. I hope the member for Lincoln has been reinstated to his position and I hope the member for Welland-Thorold will be reinstated to his.

Mr Elston: My interventions will be brief; there is not much time left. Part of that is my difficulty. I want to thank my colleagues for holding forth with pearls of wisdom which all have taken in. I have been doing an awful lot of conversing with people right around the province these last few weeks. Even before, when I was not the interim leader of the Liberal Party, I was talking to the folks at home in Bruce county, and never before have I felt a time when there was need for leadership, both fiscal and otherwise, in this province to the degree that there is now.

There is an attitude in this province that it is no longer a joy to live here, that in fact it is onerous to be successfully in business in this province, that it is a very real insecurity now to be a working woman or man in the businesses in our province, that it is a very serious problem for those who are suffering from illnesses or whatever, unlike the past. That goes over a whole series of years, not just the last five. There is an insecurity attaching to the personal outlook of so many people in this province that it scares me something fierce.

I am worried that successful people are looked upon as being women and men who have somehow done something wrong. There has to be in this province a sense that this government honours people who have done good things, who have been successful in employing people, who have been successful employees in the workplace, who have been successful students in our schools. There has to be a time when the budgetary work of this province and the policy work of this province is conducted by people who take time out of their schedules to pat somebody on the back. There is not that in this province.

It distresses me more than ever that when we speak about the brain drain we are not talking about some historical perspective on the 1960s, when that was a real debate, but about the 1990s when people are thinking of leaving this province in larger numbers than ever before. This is a reflection of a lack of leadership from a fiscal and economic point of view in a way that has undermined the real drive this province used to have to be successful. There is nothing wrong with being a successful Ontario. There is nothing wrong with being a successful businessperson. There is nothing wrong with being a person who is successful and skilled in the workplace. There is nothing wrong with being a successful volunteer. But somehow there has been a removal of the drive to allow people to be happy and comfortable in being successful.

Hon Miss Martel: I've heard it all now.

Mr Elston: The member for Sudbury East is of course downplaying this sort of stuff. Listen to these people yapping over there about, "You've said it all now." All we have said is that there is no encouragement for people to do stuff right any more. There is nobody standing up for traditional Ontario values about leading the country economically, politically and culturally—

Mr Abel: They're nodding their heads, the bunch of lumpskins.

Mr Elston: —in a way that makes sense for the people who are down and struggling with real-life problems of job security, insecurity in their homes as they are ripped apart by people invading their personal homes and insecurity because they are not sure they can have access to good-quality health care or education.

I am only trying to say today as we debate supply, this is one small snapshot of their fiscal planning, that there is not for us the leadership that allows people to feel positive about themselves and the future of their business, their job and their children. If there is anything government ought to do it is strike a balance in this province that allows people to feel good about themselves and about being here, not about moving someplace else. We want them to be here. We want them to be in Ontario so we can have real jobs created.

Mr Abel: Say yes. Say yes.

Mr Elston: We want to have really successful people feeling they are appreciated for being here. We want men and women who believe they are secure in their homes.

There are some people who mock our concern for the way our province has gone. The folks across the way are doing that because they are supposed to. That is what their job is, to belittle the concerns raised by real men and women like us who are in our places as opposition politicians. I have committed myself to co-operating at whatever time I can with the Premier and to supporting him in his initiatives with respect to the Constitution because our very existence as a nation is under assault. I have pledged myself to say good things when something good can be said, but the people across the way have to listen when I express the concerns of men and women who are talking to me, and talking to them, about whether their 35-year history of retailing in any small town in the province or any one of our streets in this large city of Toronto or in London or wherever it is at risk.

All I am saying is that if these people do not change their ways and find a new balance, we will find ourselves in very serious difficulties. We will lose the edge. We will lose the people whose brains have been driving us as a leading factor in economic and political debates in this nation for well over 100 years. I despair. I wish to use interim supply, these brief few moments, these last seven or eight minutes, merely to issue the warning. That is all I wish to do.

I wish to find, with the Premier, the new balance. There are many types of workplaces that can contribute to the economic resurgence of Ontario. There are very many forms of business structures that can allow us as a province again to develop a leadership roles in helping Canada resume its rightful and aggressive economic posture in international fields. There are ways to manage our expenditures so that we are not placing the Ministry of Community and Social Services against the Ministry of Health in looking for needed dollars. There are ways to manage the dollars that are being brought in from taxpayers all over the province to ensure there is equity and fairness in the distribution of those resources so that each of the areas of our province can be looked after in a reasonable and honest fashion.

I might say, if I had the time, that one of the biggest problems for the people who are out there on the streets is that they cannot find the way to provide more money for the job government does. They are besieged at a time when they do not know that their job is going to exist, that their business is secure and that their very person is secure. They are trying to figure out how in the world they are ever going to make the payments for new taxes. All I am doing is telling the government that this caucus is prepared to work constructively, without finger-pointing, in a fair fashion, giving credit where credit is due, but also wanting to make a contribution in a critical fashion where policies are announced.

We hear, by the way, that the Minister of Health will be in Kingston tomorrow at 9:30 to announce long-term care in that area. When she returns here to deliver that same message to us, that there is a long-term care strategy, we will be pleased to congratulate her for at least making the first step after more than a year of dithering. But I hope to have her here. We can only be of help if we are allowed to speak, and to speak freely, in this place and in other places where we choose to take our message.

That is at the very background of the freedom of speech we all stand for in this House. I exercise it today to tell these people to wake up and re-establish the balance or stand to lose it all. For a woman or a man who is not sure he or she will be working, all can be lost if the government does not find a balance. For children who need education, all can be lost if it does not strike the balance. For government members and me, as politicians, all will be lost in our attempt for public administration for the good of the public if we do not find a balance.

One last line: If we are to be successful, this government has to stop campaigning and start governing.

The Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of Mr. Laughren's motion will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1800.

Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Table des matières

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au (416) 325-7400.

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi que celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1, page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

ELEVATING DEVICES AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES ASCENSEURS ET APPAREILS DE LEVAGE

Mr Ruprecht moved second reading of Bill 139, An Act to amend the Elevating Devices Act.

M. Ruprecht propose la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 139, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les ascenseurs et appareils de levage.

Mr Ruprecht: The item of elevators in Ontario is extremely serious. As you know, Mr Speaker, and as all members of the House by now know, since this has been up for discussion here, every year thousands of people are affected by accidents in elevators. We all know that this means that many more tenants are forced to climb 10, 20, even 30 stairs—and storeys—to reach their apartments.

In Ontario, non-fatal elevator accidents grew from 70 in 1978 to almost 1,000 since the NDP government took office. In a letter from the Toronto Fire Department, it was disclosed that the fire department rescued over 1,100 people from broken-down elevators in 1990, since this government took office. That is a very serious indictment of how elevators and the subsequent inspections and the problems arising therefrom are operated in Ontario. I only wish that with the introduction of this bill the minister were here. To my great surprise, she is not present this morning to talk about Bill 139 and why she would think it is or is not a good idea to introduce this legislation.

Before I continue, I wish to thank the many people who really helped me in writing and researching this bill and ensuring that indeed it gets to see the light of day. It points out how serious this matter has become for Ontario residents who have to travel every day in elevators.

I wish of course, first of all, to thank the Toronto Fire Department for having done yeomen's work in supplying a good deal of research and information on the broken elevators; the city of Toronto department of buildings and inspections; the Ministry of Housing; the researcher for our library, Mr Hill, who has done the actual bill; and, indeed, a number of other people who are directly involved in elevator maintenance in this province, including the mayor of Toronto, who has also written a letter to me and supports this bill. But more about that later.

According to a 1990 report by Ontario's elevator inspectors, Ontario has the worst ratio of inspectors to elevating devices in all of Canada. In the last little while there indeed have been a number of accidents that caused serious injury. I am looking at this time at the Ontario Public Service Employees Union report which most members have heard about.

The real question is, what does the minister responsible for elevating devices have to say about this public hazard? I have asked the question in the Legislature, and she said, "Yes, Mr Ruprecht, we are aware of the difficulty and we're doing some kind of"—what?—"risk management." In other words, simply because there are not enough inspectors around, we have to inspect only those elevators which indeed are the worst ones in the province and which cause injury and in some cases even death.

We as Ontario residents should never be exposed to an elevator which is not functioning and indeed never be exposed to an elevator which gets stuck between floors. I have with me a number of signatures of people who have been stuck and have been seriously hurt to the point where they have been so afraid for their own lives that from then on they are psychologically scarred. They may never again step into an elevating device because of the fear of not being safe.

The minister then says to us, "Well, don't worry, folks, you cannot crash because what we're really interested in is ensuring that no one dies while riding in an elevator." I suppose that is not the major point of this bill. Bill 139 goes to the heart of the elevating devices problem in the province.

We know what the problems are. I will outline them for members: in the city of Toronto alone over 1,000 accidents since this government took over; over 2,228—I think the number is exact—people have been rescued in the last two years from elevators that have been stuck and the fire department has had to be called in. Every time the fire department is called in, we know that obviously it is at a great expense to the taxpayer.

There is no reason why the fire trucks should come out to rescue people because they are stuck in elevators. There is no reason for that if there is a service contract. This is what this bill speaks to specifically: a service contract in Bill 139 that outlines specifically what the elevator maintenance crew would have to do. All we are saying in Bill 139 is that the owner ought to get into a kind of service agreement with a bona fide elevator contractor. That agreement would stipulate how many times there should be inspections and maintenance performed.

I am looking at the Residential Rental Standards Board's recommendation and information available to the public. It says very clearly in here that as it stands now, the person who owns a high-rise building and who consequently is responsible for elevating devices in this building obviously does not have to provide elevating devices in that building.

If the elevator is not functioning properly or if it is unsafe, all the owner would have to do is say "I shut the thing down," and there is nothing anybody can do. The provincial inspectors come out and say, "I'm sorry, but you've got a bunch of senior citizens here, there are 50 of them in the lobby and they're trying to get to the 50th floor," and they cannot get to the 50th floor. Why? Because the owner says, "There's nothing in the law that makes me have this elevator back in service."

I am not making this up. It is here in the Residential Rental Standards Board booklet that is open for everyone to see. We are not asking, with Bill 139, to hire more inspectors. We are not saying, "Hire hundreds more inspectors," because that is what the ministry would have to do to ensure the safety of elevating devices; we are not asking for that. We are simply asking for a service contract to ensure maintenance is being performed before the problem arises, before the elevator gets stuck, before someone is killed. That is very simple. It is not such a big deal simply to say to the owner, "Get yourself a service contractor and have that man come once a month or at regular intervals to inspect the elevator," not to shut it down, but to make it functioning for the seniors and all those whose lives might be threatened by broken-down elevators.

I feel very sorry indeed for the minister, because the minister apparently does not understand her own legislation. She says to my response—and I think I might be hearing from my colleagues across the floor—"Under section 22 of the Elevating Devices Act...every owner of an elevator must ensure that the device is maintained and inspected by a contractor registered with the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations." The emphasis here is not on maintenance, the emphasis here is not on fixing the elevator, the emphasis is that the inspector has to be registered with the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. That is the emphasis of this legislation that is presently on the books; that is the secret here.

It is not that maintenance should be performed, when the minister says, "We've got it all in the book; it's all working." If it was working right now, how come thousands get stuck in elevators? If the legislation is so clear to the minister, how come thousands of people are at risk? This is not clear.

All we are saying under Bill 139 is: "Let's have it clear. There is no reason for anybody to be stuck." If the legislation is clear, how come the mayor of Toronto, how come the department of municipal inspections, how come the Ministry of Housing is saying not only that it does not have a clear concept of what the legislation says but is telling us very clearly there is a problem and, "We wish to fix it." Bill 139 is set out to fix the problem of elevating devices and to clear up the law. I would hope that most members would be in support of it.

Mr Tilson: My friend the member for Parkdale has made several how-come comments. He has also indicated the number of tragedies that have occurred in the last number of years up to the time when the NDP took power, and they are tragedies. Some very serious tragedies have occurred over the years. The question I have to the member is, why in the world is the member for Parkdale standing up now? When the Liberals were in power, they had every opportunity to make amendments to this bill. There was one amendment made by the Liberal government. That amendment, as I understand it, was to extend the limitation period for proceeding under the act from six months to a year.

So on the one hand I concur on the issue of safety. There is no question that there needs to be extensive overhaul of the Elevating Devices Act. I do not think the bill goes into a whole slew of areas. We have had tragedies, we have had coroners' inquests, we have had reports that have been made to the Liberal government, which did nothing. They did absolutely nothing. They made one amendment to extend the limitation period from six months to one year.

Mrs Caplan: That is not nothing.

Mr Tilson: It is. A coroner's inquest took place in 1988, for example, a tragedy at the Scotia Plaza, where there was perhaps one of the longest and most complex inquests ever held into Ontario industrial accidents. Statistics can be given to this House and to the people of this province in regard to the seriousness of what needs to be done.

What came out of that coroner's inquest were a number of recommendations: safety devices that would prevent elevators from speeding upward, logbooks that would detail the maintenance history of every elevator, mandatory health and safety committees on Ontario construction sites, more provincial elevator inspectors, certification of all critical elevator components by the manufacturer and mandatory accident reports that would be circulated throughout the industry.

Certainly the member can be lauded—he is a little bit late; he should have done it while he was in power—for putting forth legislation like this, but it is not extensive enough, and I challenge the government to go even further than the member for Parkdale.

There was a submission made to the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations by the elevator all-industry committee in January of this year, in which considerable recommendations were made. This was a committee which was formed in 1989 for the purpose of developing an industry position on the issues of major concern to the entire elevator industry. It speaks on behalf of 85% of the industry's manufacturing and contracting companies. This report was made available to this government. Again I applaud the member for bringing this issue forward, because certainly the government should take a serious look at the issues.

A number of recommendations were made in this report. There are specific, very important issues that the industry is currently facing:

The urgent need to respond to the training and retraining requirements and set qualification standards for elevator mechanics. That is not dealt with in this bill.

The need to review and clearly establish the role of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations in the regulation of the elevator industry. Should there be more government control or should it be more privatized? That is not dealt with in this bill.

The need to establish how the industry and government can move to retrofit existing elevators with new safety devices. That is not dealt with in this bill.

There was the subject of privatization, a very extensive report on the whole matter. What has been raised by the member for Parkdale, although admirable, does not go nearly far enough towards what our party has been advocating, that is, the safety of the elevator industry in Ontario.

There are a couple of other things I would like to draw the House's attention on the subject of training. Training of all elevator mechanics should be compulsory. My understanding at this particular time is that it is not.

There should be compulsory training programs for elevator mechanics that reflect the three distinctive categories of skills required in the industry: (1) the installation of new elevators; (2) the maintenance of elevators, which is the very subject which this bill is talking about of course, and (3) the modernization and upgrading of older elevator units.

I recommend that all members of the House read this report, and certainly I hope that the member will read the report and that more extensive amendments be made to the bill than are being put forward by the member.

Certainly the bill deals with two separate issues. One is with respect to maintenance agreements. The bill calls for landlords of residential premises to enter into service contracts for the regular service and maintenance of elevators contained in their buildings. That is certainly admirable, although I would point out to the member that the regulation, the current law, already says what he is putting forward.

Regulation 229/81, subsection 22(1), states, "Every owner of an elevating device shall ensure that the elevating device is not used or operated unless it is maintained by a registered contractor in accordance with the requirements of this section." That is what the member is asking. I assume, therefore, and perhaps he can clarify this, he is asking that what is in the regulation be put in the act. It is not that we do not have that law; we do have this law in the form of the regulation.

What we do not have is a whole series of matters that could be made amendments to the act that are all set forth in this report, which would provide more safety to the people of this province who use the elevators more and more. There are more and more elevators all around this province, and there is a fear for safety. All we see is the minister's signature on the elevators as we are riding up and down, and I think we all wonder, "What does that mean?"

The bill certainly requires landlords of residential premises to keep elevators in service, except during times when they have to be taken out of service for maintenance, repair or replacement. Currently, the act deals with the safe operation of elevators. The amendment does not appear to be congruent with the existing legislation inasmuch as it appears to require landlords to keep the elevators in operation.

From a public safety perspective, we certainly support the intent of the bill, but I can say that it does not go nearly far enough. I will be interested in hearing from some of the housing experts across the floor and from members of the Liberal Party who are supporting Bill 121 because, if Bill 121 passes, the whole issue of safety will be dealt with in one piece. If you do not fix your elevators, you are going to have your rent knocked down. That is what Bill 121 says.

Generally speaking, I can say I support the intent of the bill. What I do say is that the bill does not go nearly far enough and that the government should be encouraged to make substantial amendments with respect to safety.

If landlords are forced to enter into maintenance agreements for their elevators, there are a lot of other problems we have heard, specifically during the housing hearings that have gone on throughout Bill 4 and Bill 121, serious problems with respect to concrete falling off walls, with respect to boilers, with respect to underground parking garages and roofs leaking. How far does our government go? Should landlords be required to enter into regular contracts to inspect those things?

We have landlords come to us and say they cannot afford that because of the draconian laws that are being put forward by this government, and there are a lot of major problems as far as the practicalities of what my friend is recommending are concerned. I encourage him to bring forth bills of this type, but I would hope he would go much further than he is doing.

When we study the bill, we do not know, for example, how often the inspections should be made. Obviously inspections with respect to elevators that are only six months old might not be nearly as great as inspections required for elevators that are perhaps 10 years old, so I think the bill needs much tidying up before I personally support it. We do not know specifically how long these contracts are to last or over what period of time the inspections are to take place. The regulations seem to be quite clear in many areas, but need to be tightened up.

In conclusion, I would submit that I am not in favour of the bill as drafted. I am in favour of the general intent of what the member for Parkdale is putting forward, as I am sure we all are. We are all concerned with respect to safety.

Mr Fletcher: First, I would like to commend the member for Parkdale for his thoughtful presentation of this bill. When it comes to safety, I think we all agree that is one of the paramount things we should be looking at in elevator services. I am not here to point fingers and say, "You should have done it or you should have done it." When it comes to safety I do not think we can start pointing fingers. It is something we all have to take our blame for.

As far as elevators and escalators are concerned, they are machines and they are going to break down just like cars or anything else breaks down. Once they do break down, I think people start to say: "Hey, I depend on this elevator. I need this elevator." They often feel penalized or shut out if an elevator does break down.

Should the public be concerned about safety? Of course it should. Everyone should be concerned about safety, but first let me assure members that elevators in Ontario are safe. In fact, if you compare them to any other form of transportation, elevators are probably the safest way of moving people. This has been the case in the past, and it is still the case today.

It is also important to note that Ontario's Elevating Devices Act and the Canadian Safety Code for Elevators are widely considered to be the best in the world. The ministry's elevating devices branch, in co-operation with industry, has played a large part in developing safety devices for Ontario elevators and in some of the success stories about what we have done with elevators. This is from previous governments, so let's not start pointing fingers again. The successful examples are elevator passenger door safeties, anti-joyriding devices, and safeties to control the speed of elevators.

Should there be legislation requiring landlords to have an agreement with a contractor for the maintenance of elevators to keep devices going? The Elevating Devices Act already requires an owner to have maintenance performed by a contractor registered with the ministry.

The reality of this whole situation is that landlords sometimes remove elevators from service for non-safety reasons, such as selective use for building maintenance. There are also disputes over payment for service. This results in the contractor refusing to perform work pending resolution, leaving the elevator shut down. I agree that people should not have to walk 10 or 15 storeys with groceries, but that does not come down to the act. The act is not the problem. The problem is the dispute between a landlord and a contractor.

Although people, especially the disabled and seniors, have been adversely affected by elevator breakdowns, let's face it, our primary concern is their safety. The requirement to keep elevators in service is not going to prevent any breakdowns. In fact, it could increase the frequency of breakdowns because of the requirement to minimize the downtime for maintenance. Municipalities have enacted such bylaws. I think the city of Toronto had just such a bylaw, but it has proved to be unenforceable.

The ministry does inspect its elevators. It inspects them on the basis of assessed risk rather than routinely inspecting them every year or two, regardless of their age, the equipment, and the use and quality of the maintenance. Recently it has become harder to recruit inspectors because of the industry's shortage of qualified mechanics, as well as the discrepancy between wages paid by the government and the industry.

As far as fatalities are concerned, could they have been prevented with more frequent inspection? It is hard to say, because accidents are seldom caused by component failure. What they are caused by is human error. Actually the incidence of elevator passengers being injured in normal use is almost zero. However, we know that one accident is one too many.

Ontario's excellent elevator safety record does not stop our ongoing efforts to improve it. Following the inquest into one of the fatalities in 1989, the ministry established the Elevator Safety Task Force with government, industry and labour representatives. A task force report based on the jury's recommendations laid the foundation for initiatives that are currently in the works. For example, a certification and training program for all elevator mechanics in Ontario is being developed by the MCCR and the Ministry of Skills Development in partnership with industry and labour.

We are also adding a new chapter to the Canadian Safety Code for Elevators detailing the minimum requirements for the maintenance on elevators and escalators. The code, which is enforced in Ontario, will also introduce mandatory recordkeeping requirements.

Again I commend the member for introducing the bill and for trying to help the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations to develop some concrete policies. I am concerned about something that could happen as a result of this bill, and that is the fear that is growing unnecessarily among the public. Some people call the ministry and ask if it is safe to get into an elevator that has not been inspected over the last year. We say yes. Elevators are inspected based on their age, equipment and usage.

It is important to note that the Ontario legislation regarding elevators is widely considered to be among the best in the world. I cannot support the bill. I do not think the bill is going to do anything as far as the safety and operation of elevators are concerned. As I said before, I commend the member for Parkdale but I do not think his bill goes far enough. I do not think his bill is right. It goes in the wrong direction.

Ms Poole: I am very pleased to speak on this bill put forward by the member for Parkdale on an issue of great importance to tenants. I cannot stress enough how important this issue is to tenants. In my riding of Eglinton, approximately 60% of the makeup is tenants. Over the past four years, without a doubt the two number one issues in my riding have consistently been elevators and maintenance, but until recently I did not have any hard data to back up my belief that this was a very important problem.

Just last fall—September, October and November 1990—the United Tenants of Ontario race relations committee decided it would choose north Toronto as a target area to do a very extensive survey. The survey had two purposes: first, to see whether tenants were experiencing discrimination in their building related to race, creed, religion or other matters; second, to determine the level of tenants' satisfaction with their building.

It was quite enlightening. Several hundred tenants were surveyed in 12 different buildings; as I said, it was an extremely extensive survey. What they found when determining the level of satisfaction with their buildings was that 11.4% were very satisfied with elevators, 31.7% were somewhat satisfied with elevator performance and 55.7% were dissatisfied with the elevators. It was by far the number one cause for complaint.

I will give the members the other statistics because I think they will find them of interest. The second one was building security; 34.2% found this a level of dissatisfaction. The next one was relations with the landlord, 17.7%; the superintendent, 11.4%; rent, 13.3%; maintenance and renovations, 10.8%.

When you go to the next question, it becomes even more obvious. It asks, "If you were the owner of this building, what would be the first thing you would improve (choose one only)?" To this, 27.2% said they would choose to remedy the elevator situation, the top reason; the second one, 26.6%, was maintenance and renovations; and perhaps surprisingly enough to the government, 8.2% would choose rent as being the first thing they would improve in their building. Elevators were the number one reason for complaint. Elevators were the first thing tenants would choose to remedy.

I have a situation in my riding with which I would like to illustrate how the member for Parkdale's bill would help. It is a building on Soudan Avenue in my riding with a high proportion of seniors. It is a walk-up with, I believe, around 70 or 80 units. With this building, the elevators were out of repair for an extended period of time. The ownership of the building was in litigation. The city of Toronto came in and used its authority to repair the elevators. The problem was that they could not get the elevators going again because the ministry said at this point that there was no maintenance and service agreement with the owner company, so it would not allow the elevators to proceed.

If under the member for Parkdale's bill we had a provision from day one, when that elevator was licensed, that a maintenance and service contract would be in place, we would not have to wait until there was a crisis situation to look at the issue. It would have been in place. It would have been serviced. It could have been added to the tax bill, in the same way as the city of Toronto put the repair in the tax bill.

I know the minister quoted a section of the act where he said there is already protection, but it is not in the act; it is in the regulations. Not only that, but it is at the will of the landlord whether he or she chooses to have a maintenance and service agreement. So I cannot emphasize enough how important it is that we get these amendments. The member for Dufferin-Peel mentioned that it did not go far enough, although he supported the principle. Maybe it does not go far enough. I am sure there are other things we could do to improve the Elevating Devices Act, but I say to the member for Dufferin-Peel, Support Bill 139, get it to committee and we can then add other provisions that would strengthen the act. It is a starting point.

The member for Parkdale focused on two problems he has had in his area, which is why he brought forward this bill, but I am sure the member for Parkdale would be most open to expanding the protections to other areas, so I urge the member for Dufferin-Peel to support this bill. This is totally important to tenants in this province. Many of our buildings have elevators, and as the member for Parkdale has pointed out on a number of occasions, just in the city of Toronto there are thousands of instances every year when the fire department is called upon to try to rescue some poor individual or individuals from an elevator. This cannot be tolerated. We need to provide people with more protection, the protection of making sure there is a regular maintenance and service contract, and ensuring that the landlord is required to keep the elevator in service except for such reasonable time as it takes for repair.

This government has said consistently that it believes in tenant protection. If members of the government vote against this bill, they will have proved that their commitment to tenant protection is nothing but hollow rhetoric. As for the minister's comments last week that they were not going to intervene, that it was not their business to intervene, this government has intervened in every facet of Ontario life. Why would they hesitate to intervene when tenants' safety and in some instances their lives are in jeopardy?

I urge all members of this House to support this excellent bill. I commend the member for Parkdale for bringing it forward and I hope we can work together to make this province safer for the tenants of this province.

Ms Carter: Elevators are very close to my heart, because I do not know how my heart would stand up to climbing the 30 flights of stairs between ground level and my apartment. They are very close to me when I get there too, because I can hear them running all night long. I am willing to climb one, two or even three flights of stairs, and I believe it even does me good, but beyond that, of course, an elevator becomes essential even for those of us who are able-bodied. I am totally dependent on the ups and downs of this gadget. Also, my office is on the 13th floor.

I have been inconvenienced many times by the long-drawn-out renovations to the elevators in the building where I reside—there has been an apologetic sign on display for months—but an elevator always comes eventually and has never in my experience malfunctioned. The time my husband got stuck in an elevator he was, I believe, in Winnipeg, not in Ontario.

I believe we are doing something right here in Ontario. Safety has to come first. To put pressure on landlords to keep elevators in service at all times unless actually under repair, as this Bill 139 would do, risks increasing the operation of unsafe elevators. Even if the bill became law, there would be no magical increase in the number of people available to service and inspect elevators or in the amount of money available to do it. If I had to choose—heaven forbid—I would rather sleep in my office than risk ascending to the 30th floor in an unsafe elevator.

To many disabled and elderly people in our society, elevators are more than just a convenience or a lazy option. They are an essential part of being able to come and go at all. I was proud to assist at the opening of an elevator in a Peterborough church last Sunday. Church funds had been matched by an access grant from the Ministry of Citizenship to make this possible. Elderly and disabled people were acquiring the freedom to participate, without assistance, in the life of their church and their community.

Of course, that elevator and hopefully many more like it must be kept running, but not if there is the slightest doubt about their safety. I am sure the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations will continue to deploy its inspectors in the most efficient way possible, given financial and staffing constraints. As my colleague has said, a certification and training program for all elevator mechanics in Ontario is being developed by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations and the Ministry of Skills Development, in partnership with industry and labour representatives. A new chapter is also being added to the Canadian Safety Code for Elevators, detailing the minimum requirements for the maintenance of elevators and escalators.

The province is taking effective action to improve its already excellent record on elevator safety. As one of many whose life here in Toronto would be quite impossible without these devices, and as one concerned about those who need them for even minor changes of level, I do not support this Act to amend the Elevating Devices Act, although I appreciate the concern it embodies.

Mr Curling: Mr Speaker, I want to thank you very much, and also my dear colleague the member for Parkdale, for giving me the opportunity to speak in support of his bill. He has done extensive research on this matter. He does not speak only from his heart; he speaks from knowledge and he has put forward to the government and to the opposition statistics on which they can base their support of this bill.

I was quite surprised and concerned that my dear colleague the member for Dufferin-Peel began his remarks with finger-pointing at who has not done enough with regard to this bill and who in the previous government had not done sufficient in ensuring the safety of elevating devices.

I had hoped also that some of my comments would fall on the ears of a minister, but I am disappointed that no minister is here. That immediately tells me that the interest they have taken in the concerns of tenants in this province is just lipservice. However, I do have faith in quite a few of the backbenchers—I hate to call them backbenchers; my colleagues who are not in the august circle of the cabinet, which carries such words of concern.

The member for Dufferin-Peel pointed out that there are a tremendous number of omissions from this bill of things that should have been there and therefore he is unable to support it. I have yet to find any bill that is presented that is a perfect bill. We put it forward, and then if there are any additions or amendments that members want to put forward, they can do so in committee. To support it in principle but not vote for it is a contradiction. If you support it in principle, you support it and vote for it; then when it gets to committee, you make your necessary amendments.

It was brought very vividly to my attention. My riding of Scarborough North has quite a few elevating devices. A gentleman was going for surgery on his back, and the elevating device had broken down. Mr Richard Cohen, the gentleman in question, had written to me and phoned me and had phoned the ministry and could not get any response. He had phoned every ministry—the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, the Ministry of Housing—and he said he could not get any response. He had phoned me, and of course I tried to get some response out of those offices too, and to relay this gentleman's concern.

His concern was that, coming back from the hospital, realizing that he could not get back to the seventh floor by walking up seven floors was quite a traumatic experience for him. For two days in his building those elevators did not work. He phoned me concerned for the senior citizens who had to walk five, six, seven floors in order to get to their homes. He talked about people with heart cases who were concerned that they may have a heart attack in that process.

Before I tell members what the bill would have done, I will tell them what it has not done. My colleague the member for Parkdale wrote to the Minister of Housing with this concern and it responded to him. The manager from police and programs spoke about, "There appears to be no mechanism to provide the elevating devices branch with the ability to make the necessary repairs and charge the cost back to the owner." He also said, "There is no provision in the legislation to require an owner to make the necessary repairs."

This bill states very simply, one, that the landlord shall enter into an agreement with a bona fide contractor "for the maintenance of the device at regular intervals" and, two, that the landlord ensures that "any elevating device intended for the use of tenants...is kept in service at all times."

It is important, at a time when this present government speaks of access and it says that you have a home and you cannot even get to it. As a matter of fact, even to get to your home may cause you some hardship, maybe death. I hope it is not so.

I was surprised that my honourable colleague the member for Guelph said that it is one of the safest elevating devices—I do not know if he said the world or if he was comparing it with something else. I am very disappointed that he ignored the statistic that talks about over 1,000 incidents that have happened since the NDP—no, because of their fault but just as a matter of measurement—has taken the reins of government. He ignored that and said it is one of the safest. Six deaths, I gather, have happened. These are things that come back, the agony that could have been avoided if we had had proper elevating devices in place. To say, "Let us not do anything about it because we are one of the safest"—we are not trying to be one of the safest; we are striving to be safe.

I would like to acknowledge the fact that, especially in private members' bills, it gives the members an opportunity not to go with the government, the Minister of Housing, who has called them and said, "Please don't support this," but to think individually of their own concerns and the concerns of their constituencies and vote for this. If they want amendments, as I said, if it is not adequate, they should put forward their amendments to improve on this bill. We have seen in the past, of course, that members would like to have supported a bill on their own principle and moral obligations and they are then coerced in many ways by ministers and by premiers not to do this. But I urge them to stand on their own principles, to stand on the principle of the safety of tenants that they advocated for a long time, and I urge the honourable member for Dufferin-Peel to do so too.

Mr McLean: I want to comment briefly on Bill 139, An Act to amend the Elevating Devices Act, with regard to the bill's requiring landlords to enter into agreements for regular maintenance.

Some time ago, back in 1986, the member for Leeds Grenville asked some questions in this Legislature of the then Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, the member for Wilson Heights, with regard to some of the problems that had taken place in this province with regard to deaths in elevators and the many joyrides that were taking place. From that debate there was a study mandated, the Final Report of the Ontario Elevator Safety Task Force. That report indicates much along the line of what this bill is talking about. It says:

"The Ontario regulation should require that every elevator owner must secure continuously a full maintenance contract that would include replacement parts or have equipment thoroughly examined periodically, at a maximum 12-month interval, by a registered contractor who must certify that all components are fit for safe operation. This would trigger a renewal of the licence for a 12-month period. Prior to expiration, a further examination and certification must be carried out."

That report really says what the member is indicating here today, to amend the act to allow for that very section to be put in.

I really thought this was covered in the act now with regard to staff training and safety. Upgrading of elevator units in apartment buildings I guess is one of the major concerns that many apartment dwellers have. I do not see where, in this bill we are talking about, there is anything with regard to the upgrading of elevator units. Maintenance agreements, I would have thought, are already within the act at the present time. Failing that, I would anticipate Bill 121 would include much of what the member is speaking about here today.

When we are talking about elevators, it gives us a chance to express some of the concerns that have been brought to our attention within our own constituencies, and especially in Metropolitan Toronto, where you have the large high-rises. We ride them every day and take it for granted that they just work. Sometimes we have to wait longer. The member for Peterborough was talking about the time she sometimes has, and I live in the same building so I know what it is all about, but only once have I ever had to walk down those 31 flights of stairs.

Mr Curling: What about going up?

Mr McLean: Going down would not be bad, but walking up would certainly test my ability.

Anyhow, the presence of this bill here today brings a debate in this Legislature and brings to the minds of the people just how serious this is and how important the elevators are in the buildings and how important this is to our seniors. In the constituency I represent, we have had elevators put in Royal Canadian Legion branches with the help of the taxpayers. I think those types of things are important when we are talking about elevators and the safety within them. But the staff training is important. More inspectors and better-trained inspectors would be important.

I think today what we are doing is debating a piece of legislation that I would have anticipated would already have been in any bill, and the bill would require landlords of residential premises containing elevators to enter into agreements for regular maintenance of the elevator. I know of hardly any building that would not have that in its contract. It requires landlords of residential premises to keep elevators in service. I would think this is in place already.

The Deputy Speaker: You have spoken on this issue already, have you not?

Mr Fletcher: Yes, I have.

The Deputy Speaker: You cannot do it again.

Mr Fletcher: Okay.

The Deputy Speaker: There are four minutes and 34 seconds left for the government side.

Mr Ruprecht: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: If I can get the extra time, that would be appreciated.

The Deputy Speaker: If there is unanimous consent, I will give it to the member for Parkdale. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: Two minutes left, the member for Parkdale.

Mr Ruprecht: I want the public to know today that when we talk about the seriousness of the elevating devices, this NDP government—that is how really generous it is—did not permit giving me two more minutes to talk about the elevating devices and the problems we are facing today. They should be ashamed of themselves, not being generous enough to give their colleague two extra minutes. They would rather sit there, stony faced, ashamed of themselves because they are unable to sympathize with the seniors and with the tenants of this province. Every time they stand in front of an elevating device that is not working and they have to walk 20 flights of stairs, I want them to think about this bill and that they have said no to this legislation.

Let me just refer very briefly to what the member for Dufferin-Peel said. I appreciate his remarks, and he has indicated that we should go farther than the proposal of my bill. Obviously I think he has a point. Nevertheless, this is the first step and I assume that he would support this as a first step. Once it gets into the committee we can go much farther, and then obviously I would agree with him.

The same goes for the member for Simcoe East, who somehow, along with the member for Guelph, is under the mistaken impression that section 22 already provides for maintenance-of-service contracts. It does not. There is no provision here that ensures that elevators are being maintained, and certainly there is no provision here that an owner is required to make the necessary repairs.

In short, I would hope that the members who are assembled here today would ask a question of the minister, who is probably stuck in an elevator, because she is not here today.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. The time for the first ballot item has expired.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR L'ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE

Mr Arnott moved second reading of Bill 111, An Act to amend the Legislative Assembly Act.

M. Arnott propose la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 111, Loi portant modification de la Loi sur l'Assemblée législative.

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 94(c)(i), the honourable member has 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Arnott: I am very pleased today to be here in this crowded chamber once again in private members' hour to bring forward my views on a private member's ballot item, Bill 111, An Act to amend the Legislative Assembly Act.

The basic intent of the bill is quite simple. The bill would amend the Legislative Assembly Act by requiring each member to take an oath that the member will not only be faithful and bear true allegiance to the Queen but also that he or she will obey the laws of Ontario and Canada and that he or she will conduct himself or herself with integrity in carrying out his or her responsibilities as a member and, subject to his or her own judgement and conscience, seek to represent the views of those who elected him or her.

The oath would replace the oath that is set out in the Constitution Act, 1867. The bill amends only the English version of the Legislative Assembly Act. The Legislature has not yet adopted an official French-language version of this act.

I would like to start, I suppose, by reading the present oath, because I was quite surprised, when I made my views known that I was intending to propose a change to the oath, at the number of members who came over to me and asked me what the oath is at present. Essentially, what oath did they take a year ago? I was quite struck by that, so I will read it again:

"I, ..., do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second (or the reigning sovereign for the time being), her heirs and successors according to law.

"So help me God."

As I say, that is the oath we presently take.

I will read at this time the specific oath I am proposing, an amendment, section 24a, of the Legislative Assembly Act:

"I, ..., do swear (or solemnly affirm) that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second (or the reigning sovereign for the time being), her heirs and successors according to law, that I will obey the laws of Ontario and Canada, and that in carrying out my responsibilities as a member of the Legislative Assembly I will conduct myself with integrity and that, subject to my own judgement and conscience, I will seek to represent the views of my constituents.

When you are proposing something new you always have to justify why. That is the first question, why do we need a new oath? I believe we need a new oath. I think back about a year ago to the heady days of the fall of 1990. I was at Convocation Hall watching the new government, their Agendas for People clutched in their hands proudly as they were sworn into government.

At approximately the same time I was sworn in as a member of this Legislature, and my friends and family came down to Toronto to be present at what I felt was a very auspicious occasion in my life and something I was very excited about. I took my oath, the picture was taken and so forth, as every member did, but I was somewhat struck about how quickly it was over.

I felt at the time that there could be a more substantial oath. Not that there is any problem with the existing oath, but it could be made more substantial. There could be things added to it to give it more meaning and purpose. I believe the new oath would be an important addition because it could become a symbolic testimony of why we are here. A solemn promise made before the clerk with the Bible and before God is a new, important addition we could bring to this, a promise made to represent our constituents and to do various other things beyond just the oath to the Queen.

Doing some research about oaths, I came across a quote from the 17th century, Samuel Butler. He wrote a brief phrase that I think is telling: "Oaths are but words, and words but wind." I see that as a real problem. There may be an opinion that this is true and perhaps we need to counter that and put more faith in the oaths we take. I think there needs to be more substance to remind us of our responsibilities, our duties, why we are here and whom we serve.

I will take members through the new oath I am proposing phrase by phrase and indicate why I have added parts. First of all, the allegiance to the Queen is exactly the same as the existing oath, which I believe is very important, especially today. We have a situation in our country and in our province where people feel they have very little certainty and very little to grasp on to. The monarchy still remains a very important role in our society and we have to maintain and reaffirm that, I believe.

Second, I think it is very important to give an indication that members are willing to obey and uphold the laws of Ontario and Canada. I find that in the past it sometimes was overlooked. If we do not have a commitment to the laws we make here, we have a big problem. We have a direct influence on how the laws are changed. I do not believe in civil disobedience. I think we should take the attitude that if we do not like the laws, we will work to change them from our place here.

It is important also to have a reminder about conducting ourselves with a great degree of integrity. Some might argue that integrity is a very subjective matter. It may be to some people, but I think everyone has a personal standard of integrity and we often have to be reminded of our own standard, because in the heat of the moment or the day we may take steps towards deviating from that standard we have set for ourselves. I believe it is important that we are reminded of this.

It is very important to talk about the next part, "subject to my own conscience and judgement, I will seek to represent the views of my constituents." I think that goes without saying. There is such a malaise in the land today that members are not representing their constituents. We know we try every day to represent our constituents to the best of our ability, but the people do not seem to know that. If we encourage this in our oath, it can have an effect out there and hopefully add some respect for this institution.

I do not believe Bill 111 is going to change the world. I see it as a very modest and small step in the right direction towards a new path we should be taking. I believe reforms are drastically needed in this place and in this legislation in the way we conduct our own affairs. I am very disappointed at times, and I have been guilty of it too—I do not want to sound as though I am never involved in interjections, because I am—because the decorum in this place has been abysmal in the last few weeks. I think we have to keep that in mind.

We have to work towards enhancing the status of the private member at the expense of the executive because we are elected as well. Private members are seen by the people as being weak. We have to enhance our ability to work on behalf of our constituents. We have to work towards restoring the public's faith in this institution of Parliament because we are going to keep the institution but in my opinion we have to reform it from within.

I think we need to encourage the media towards a more positive portrayal of the work we do in this place. It concerns me that they seem to focus on the negative and do not report that we often work together in a common effort to solve the problems of the province. I think this bill in some small way might open the doors of this place. As I have said, in caucus all of us work very hard on behalf of our constituents and passionate views are exchanged, but people do not see that. If we took this oath promising to represent the views of our constituents, many of us would feel freer to express our views publicly in this forum.

I would like to close by talking briefly about where our commitment originates as members. Many of us have brought our ambitions to this place. We have ideas we want to bring forward to enact into law to improve this place and to improve the province. We have devotion to various causes. We have devotion to our constituents. All of us bring ideals to this place. Often our ideals and our passions are somewhat tempered after a period of time when we see the realization of what can occur, but we also have our instincts that we bring forward on views.

If we started with a new oath, if we defined the origin of our commitment with this new oath, it would be a big improvement. I would like to propose this solemn oath before God and before the Legislature, and I hope we can get some support.

Mr Mills: I am very proud and privileged to stand in my place in the House today and speak to An Act to amend the Legislative Assembly Act, Bill 111, proposed by my colleague opposite.

I would like first of all to speak briefly about Durham East, the riding I represent. Traditionally, the best we could do as New Democrats in Durham East prior to 1990 was, give or take, about 5,000 or 6,000 votes. This time around we were able to increase that figure by roughly another 5,000. As I stand in this House today, I recognize that I represent at least 4,000 or 5,000 who are not traditionally New Democrats. They do not profess to be, nor did they ever profess to be. I recognize that fact here in my decisions daily.

I would like to speak briefly about the amendment and my colleague's words here: "I will seek to represent the views of my constituents" and "I will conduct myself with integrity." I would like to think that is my personal oath to the people I represent in this House.

To go one step further, I would like to let people know that when insurance became an issue in this House—I campaigned on public insurance—I was bombarded by people in my riding who complained about it, about the loss of jobs, about what it would do to the economy. I went personally to the minister on two occasions to report my displeasure with public auto insurance and about how it would affect people I represent in Durham East who were not necessarily New Democrats. I think I have a duty and a right to do that.

When we met in Honey Harbour about this I stood in that room and again voiced my displeasure at public auto insurance as it affected the people I represented—

Mrs Caplan: But you ran on it during the election campaign.

Mr Mills: The member for Oriole interjects and says I ran on it, and that is true, I did. But getting back to the private member's bill, I temper that with representing the people in their broad spectrum of political views. I think that is what the member today is saying we should do. I am saying that I do that, and when the member for Oriole speaks I will not interject and upset her train of thought and I hope she would do likewise.

When we came to the Sunday shopping bill, again one has to recognize that we represent so many people—I do in Durham East—who were opposed to that legislation. I spoke my piece on behalf of the constituents I represent there, and I do this constantly. I do not see that my principles have been changed and I do not really need an oath to tell me that I have to represent the views of my constituents.

Having said all of that, when people elect me they know that I represent the New Democrats and they know the New Democrats stand for certain things. I like to think that—I see the member for Oriole shaking her head, I do not know why. People do elect people based on the party they represent basically.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: There will be ample time to debate the issue, so I recommend that members remain quiet.

Mr Mills: Given the election process, I think it is very fair to say that when you run for a party, the goals of that party are very up front and that the people who vote for you recognize that you will, if I may put it in these terms, uphold the party line to a degree. That does not stop you from speaking out on behalf of the constituents you represent, in particular the many I represent in the riding of Durham East.

I am going to cut short my comments because another colleague in our caucus needs to speak to this bill. But before I close off, someone said to me from the news media when I completed my first year in office, "What are your goals?" I said, "I have one goal, that at the end of this present term of my office in this Legislature the people of Durham East, Conservatives, Liberals, or New Democrats, can look upon me and say that they got representation of the finest and best quality regardless of party politics."

That is what I intend to do in this House, and I thank members for the time to debate this. I will be supporting the member's resolution, although I think it is a little after the fact. On a matter of personal record, I will support it.

Mrs Caplan: I am pleased to rise and participate in the debate today in private members' hour, but when I first saw the resolution, the bill that was brought forward by the member for Wellington, I looked at it and wondered why he had brought it forward.

At the present time in the standing orders, as the member has read out, we have an oath that pledges our allegiance to Her Majesty the Queen. At first I thought his bill was designed to embarrass the NDP government, which had changed the oath for police officers in this province. I thought perhaps the member's proposed bill was to guarantee and ensure that members of the Ontario Legislature would continue in the British parliamentary tradition in this province and continue our pledge of allegiance to Her Majesty the Queen.

I read along a little farther and I saw words in his proposed piece of legislation that I think all members of this House could agree with. Certainly it is the reason we all run for public office and stand to serve the public. In his opening remarks he talked about the need for members to take their responsibilities and duties seriously. I think what he has raised for us is an issue that goes far beyond the very simplistic approach this bill is proposing. He is a new member of the House and I have come to like and respect him. I think his goals are very similar to mine and probably to the goals of most of the members of this Legislature who stand for public life; that is, to try to make a positive difference in this province.

The question was raised about why we need to change the existing oath of office. I would ask that question as well. It seems to me that the reason, the need right now is that in Ontario my constituents and the people of this province do not like politicians very much. They think "political" means self-serving, as opposed to serving the public interest. They are cynical and concerned, and I do not think just changing the words of the oath of allegiance that a new member of this Legislature takes is going to solve that problem.

I have spoken in this House on numerous occasions about the issue of cynicism in our society today. It concerns me greatly. I have also spoken about the need for greater integrity in public office. During election time we all talk about integrity. I have said in my remarks in this House that integrity is saying one thing during the elections and doing the same thing after you are elected. Integrity is doing what you say you are going to do. Integrity is staying true to your principles.

One of the things people in this province do not realize is that there are very specific partisan differences between the political parties in this province. The reason we often sound the same is that we have the same goals. We all enter public life to make a positive difference, to serve the public, to serve the public interest. We do not on the whole generally—there are always examples of the few bad apples who tarnish us all—enter public life for ego reasons, not most of us anyway. Most of us do not see politics and partisan politics as a self-serving exercise.

We believe in our philosophical partisan approaches. The New Democrats, the socialists, have a very different philosophy and a very different approach to public policy issues than do the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberals. We can discuss what those philosophical differences are and we can see in the approach to public policy development how the different approaches of those parties are put forward.

I think the member for Durham East raised a couple of very good examples. During the election campaign of just over a year ago, the New Democratic Party was very clear about where it stood on auto insurance. Its approach was very different than the approach that had been offered by the then Liberal government and very different from the system that had been in place under the Progressive Conservatives in this province. The people of this province expected that if there were a Progressive Conservative government, one thing would happen, that if there were a Liberal government, something different would happen, and that if there were a New Democratic government, still another approach would be taken.

Public cynicism is going to flourish in an environment where a party once elected says: "We're not going to do that. We didn't mean it. We didn't expect to get elected." That is an issue of integrity. That is what turns people off, when they hear them stand and say one thing during election time and then they do something very different once they have the opportunity to implement those things they talked about.

I believe very strongly in the traditions of the parliamentary system. I believe very strongly that you do not change those traditions lightly. I was concerned with the way the new government changed the oath for police in this province. It was not debated in this Legislature. It was done by a stroke of the pen at the cabinet table, by order in council, with no debate, no discussion—an important tradition.

I said we have important issues of public policy to debate. One of the concerns I have is that in private members' hour, when members are free of party discipline—I say this very specifically to the member for Durham East, who has stood in this House with other members of the government caucus during private members' hour when the whip has been on. That means the members have been told they must vote for or against certain members' resolutions during private members' hour. We have seen it time and again. When members should be free to speak on behalf of their constituents or use their own judgement or put forward their own ideas to debate public policy issues of the day, new members of this House in the government caucus have been told how they are expected to vote during private member's hour.

We see what happens to members of the government caucus when they do not toe the party line. We saw an example just yesterday when my colleague the member for St Catharines raised a question about the firing of the member for Lincoln, the Chair of one of our standing committees, who was fired after he voted against a government bill.

I have been in government and I have seen members of government caucuses, on points of importance to their constituents, vote against a government bill and there was no retribution. But coming from this government party we have seen a cabinet minister fired for disagreeing with the policies of his party and we have seen a committee Chair fired and then reinstated when the issue was raised in this House.

I think these are the things the member for Wellington is questioning in suggesting a change in the oath in this House, but I would say to the member that changing the words of the oath is not going to change the behaviour in this House. It is not going to change the way we treat each other, the lack of respect we sometimes see, and it is not going to change the role of the individual members and their ability to speak out within their caucus or within this House during private members' hour, because in the British parliamentary tradition the role of the party, the role of the caucus, is also a very important role.

When we stand for public office in the provincial elections in Ontario, we run as a member of a party. We can also choose to run as an independent. The member for Wellington chose to run as a member of the Progressive Conservative Party, and he stands for all the things the Progressive Conservative Party stood for during the election. He is accountable to his constituents for the promises and commitments the party made about the approaches it would take.

The members of the New Democratic caucus, the government caucus, the now governing party, are accountable to their constituents for the promises it made during the election. That is the way our system works. They are members of a government caucus, and as a member of this Legislature the role we undertake as a member of our party and our caucus is to speak out on behalf of our constituents with integrity in a passionate way on the issues of the day, those things that we believe in.

We enter public life because we want to make this province a better place. Within our philosophy and our principles, we want to bring forward suggestions and ideas for new legislation, new laws, new regulatory regimes or schemes or funding priorities. But each party sets forward not only its goals; it also sets forward its priorities.

I guess the concern I have is that we are not taking advantage in this House of the opportunity, even within private members' hour, to diverge, to free ourselves from caucus discipline, to free ourselves from the yoke of the whip. I can tell members that within the Liberal caucus, both in opposition and when we were in government, each of our caucus meetings was a reminder to our members that private members' hour was a free time for members to speak their minds. We did not whip our members to support a government position.

The members of this House will know there were sometimes very important issues of debate. Some of those, I would suggest, were framed by the opposition parties to embarrass the government. That sometimes happens in private members' hour. But it was a very good opportunity for us to speak our minds, free of party discipline, free of the yoke of the discipline of caucus.

I would say to the member for Wellington that changing the oath is not going to solve that problem. He has pointed out some of the problems that exist, but I believe that if we simply change a tradition in this House, we will send out a suggestion that we have fixed the problem. My concern is that we will just increase the cynicism we find in this province by suggesting that an oath is going to change anything.

I believe the public, if they are going to have respect for what happens in this Legislature, have to see question period for what it is, which to a large degree is theatre. One of my children said to me that when they watch question period they really think of it as the Young and the Restless, one of the soap operas of the day. I tell them the important debates happen in committee where you often find a lot of co-operation, where people put forward their ideas, usually in a thoughtful way. You find it during private members' hour and through the debates in this Legislature.

I would say we could have an important debate on the enhancement of the role of the individual member, finding ways to permit additional free votes, finding ways to allow members to speak their minds on behalf of their constituents, but as I sum up today, I really believe that simply changing the oath of office, while it is well intentioned, is no more than just a meaningless gesture to solve what is a very serious problem in our society. I think if we each pledge ourselves to take the message to our constituents that what happens here is important, that we are all people of integrity although we may differ in our partisan approaches, then hopefully the people of Ontario will have more respect for all of us in public life.

Mr J. Wilson: I am very pleased to stand and support the resolution put forward today by my colleague the member for Wellington.

Unlike the member for Oriole who just spoke, I know what the word "cynicism" means and I know that voters out there are cynical. They are cynical about politicians and they are cynical and somewhat disrespectful at times of the monarchy in Canada.

This past week we had a visit from the royal family, His Majesty Prince Charles and Princess Diana. I was standing on the docks at Harbourfront last week watching the royal yacht Britannia go by when Princess Diana and Prince Charles were waving to the crowd. There was a young family there, a young couple with three small children. I overheard the husband say to the wife that they were glad to see the bums leave.

I was very saddened to hear two Canadians—I presume Canadian citizens—standing at Harbourfront wishing ill of the royal family. The view out there is that the royal family does not work and does not pay taxes, therefore, some people believe it is not worth while having a monarchy. Today's debate is very good in the sense that it enables us to have a few minutes to explain the role of the monarchy and the importance of the monarchy in Canada.

I say the proposed wording of a new oath by my colleague the member for Wellington is excellent. It not only contains our current oath, which is a swearing of allegiance to our sovereign and the monarchy, but it also very importantly says, "I will conduct myself with integrity and that, subject to my own judgement and conscience, I will seek to represent the views of my constituents."

The Liberals were kicked out of office because voters were tired of Queen's Park telling them what is good for them. We have the same problem on the federal level now. Ottawa is constantly telling voters what is good for them, rather than the way Burke and the great philosophers designed the democratic system, which is that we as elected members are to go to Queen's Park and stand up and fight on behalf of our constituents to the best of our ability.

Unlike the member for Oriole, I think it is important that we include in the oath that reminder and that we swear allegiance to not only the monarchy but to upholding our responsibility as elected members to voice the concerns of our constituents on a daily basis in this Legislature. The oath needs beefing up and the member for Wellington has done an excellent job, together with legislative counsel, of coming up with what I think is a superb new oath, and I ask all members to support it.

I want to make a point about swearing allegiance to the monarchy, to the sovereign. I raised this point on April 17, the day after I heard on CFTO news that the NDP had made a closed-door decision to remove the reference to Her Majesty the Queen in the oath taken by Ontario's police officers. At that time—and I will read it again because it is worth stating—I read a quote from June 26, 1973, of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, Queen of Canada, at a state dinner. In this quote she talks about her role as the constitutional monarch of Canada:

"But it is as Queen of Canada that I am here, Queen of Canada and of all Canadians, not just of one or two ancestral strains. I want the crown to be seen as a symbol of national sovereignty belonging to all. It is not only a link between Commonwealth nations, but between Canadian citizens of every national origin and ancestry. The crown is an idea more than a person and I want the crown in Canada to represent everything that is best and most admired in the Canadian ideal."

I think that sums up very well, from Her Majesty, the role of the Queen in Canada. One of the primary roles, particularly at this crucial point in our history, is the unifying symbol that the Queen represents to all Canadians of all ethnic backgrounds. It is a unifying symbol that is most needed at this time, and I do not understand, but will not belabour the point, why the NDP, which seeks in these constitutional talks, and certainly states in these constitutional talks, that it is going to defend the interests of Canada, that it wants a united Canada, why it would take a unilateral, secret decision to remove the reference to the Queen in the oath taken by Ontario's police officers.

I suggest it was done because Susan Eng, who was appointed by the NDP to be the new chair of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Services Board, refused to swear an oath to Her Majesty, so she would not administer that same oath to police officers. I remind the government that the Parliamentary Oaths Act of 1866 imposes a penalty of 500 pounds for any parliamentarian who sits in Parliament but refuses to take the oath. It also declares that parliamentarian's seat vacant. So you have no choice in the matter; if you want to sit in Parliament, you must swear allegiance to Her Majesty the Queen. Also, in addition to declaring the seat vacant, it says that the seat is also vacated in the same manner as if the parliamentarian were dead. I suggest it is a good thing Susan Eng got an appointment and did not run for Parliament, because she would be treated as if she were dead in this chamber by refusing to swear allegiance to Her Majesty the Queen of Canada.

I want to touch briefly on some points that are raised in a book called The Crown in Canada. It is written by Mr. Frank MacKinnon and it talks about why a strengthened oath to the Queen is a good idea. It says:

"The crown has helped to reinforce the sovereignty of Canada. The presence of the crown in Canada has prevented Canada and its provinces and territories from experiencing a situation where the question of legality arises regarding the government or of the political power itself."

On that, I point to the NDP government and remind the government, as I did on April 17 in my point of privilege, that our allegiance to the Queen separates us and distinguishes us from the Americans, a point that the NDP normally takes great pride in on other matters, and that our power and our legitimacy to govern are derived directly from the monarchy. As Michael Valpy said in the Globe and Mail on, I believe, 16 April: "Politicians exercise power only on sufferance. The power is on loan to them."

I suggested at that time, and although I was ruled against by the Speaker I still contend that I was right, that the government's unilateral move to remove the reference to the Queen in the oath undermined the legitimacy of Parliament, the legitimacy of this chamber and the legitimacy of our right to govern on behalf of the Queen and for our constituents.

I also make the point that the government itself only got a little less than 40% of the vote in Ontario in the last election. If members really think about it, it is the legitimacy to govern under the monarch that prevents opposition parties from questioning this government's legitimacy and its legality as a government.

Members may want to read some books on the topic. I have not time to go into it today, but this government's legitimacy to govern on 38% or 37% of the vote and our inability to question its legitimacy is all devolved from the crown and from the monarchy and from the tradition of Parliament which this government has shown very little respect for in this chamber and in its actions.

I also mention finally that the important part of changing the oath is, again, not only the swearing of allegiance to the sovereign but also the fact that we are here to govern on behalf of our constituents, to take their advice and to bring that advice forward. It is not unlike the monarchy itself. We are able to accommodate change in this province and to accommodate the views of our constituents against the backdrop of a very solid tradition of the monarchy. There is stability in our country, unlike in the Soviet Union and in China, because we have a monarchy that, as a symbol, unites Canada, unites Canadians; and members of Parliament do not have the authority nor should ever have the will to change that. If you do not have the authority because your authority comes from the monarchy, you do not have the authority to tamper with the monarchy and its symbol and its purpose in uniting the country and uniting Canadians.

I commend the member for Wellington for an excellent new oath. I believe it is a step in the right direction in bringing decorum back to this Parliament and ensuring that members realize—as I know the NDP member for Lincoln who voted against a tax bill the other day and was penalized for it by his Premier; that was a good example of a member voting in line with the wishes of his constituents. That is what we are here to do. Let us never forget it.

Mr Drainville: It gives me great pleasure to rise in the House today to speak to this private member's bill, which I will be supporting. As I look at the form that has been put forward by the honourable member for Wellington, although I would like to see perhaps a little different form, on the whole it is substantially better than the oath we presently make and on that basis I am willing to support it. As I have said on a number of occasions, we always find ourselves, when we rise to speak at private members' hour, quibbling with this point or that point, but ultimately a person has to put forward a position and we look at that position. I believe it is in the interests of making better legislation that this be put forward. I have no difficulty with most of it. I will make some substantive comments at this point.

I notice it says, "I"—member's name—"do swear (or solemnly affirm) that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second (or the reigning sovereign for the time being), her heirs and successors according to law." I have no difficulty with that. I have been a supporter of the monarchy all my life. That is not going to change at this point.

Some of the comments that have been made by the honourable member for Simcoe West I agree with in terms of the importance of the crown to our system and how the powers of the crown have devolved over the years to Parliament. It is one of the single factors which distinguishes us, in our parliamentary form of government, from the congressional system in the United States. In my view it makes us a far more representative kind of system, and all because there is such a role as the crown or the monarchy. I want to affirm that. It is appropriate that we begin with an oath as we become members of this place and representatives of the people who have elected us. It is very important to affirm that.

It goes on to say in this form of the oath that is set forward in Bill 111 "that I will obey the laws of Ontario and Canada." I want to speak specifically to that because of some history I have in my life, and that is, before I was a legislator, I actually was involved in an act of civil disobedience. I make the point that it was before I was a legislator. When you become a legislator, your life becomes different. The way you live your life has to be different.

In fact at my trial, where I was eventually convicted for working with the native people in Temagami and supporting their cause, I was the only one of the people going into the trial who put in a plea of not guilty. The other people with me did not put in a plea because they questioned the whole process. I put in a plea because I was a legislator at that time. I felt that if I did put in a plea, I would be saying that I did not recognize the court. How could I do that as a legislator? Long after I had actually committed the act that I did in working with the native people in Temagami, I decided as a legislator that I now had to approach this very differently. So I did put in a plea, albeit not guilty.

In terms of the oath here and what the honourable member is stating, "that I will obey the laws of Ontario and Canada," it is incumbent upon all those who attain office and who become representatives of the people that indeed they do follow the laws of the land, and I want to affirm that again. I agree with the statement that is here in this oath, "and that in carrying out my responsibilities as a member of the Legislative Assembly I will conduct myself with integrity."

With all the cynicism and negativity that has been brought forward by the honourable member for Oriole, she perhaps is right in saying that a new form of oath is not going to quell that negativity or cynicism. I can agree with that, but there does come a point when it is incumbent upon us as human beings, not just as representatives of the people, that we take seriously our responsibilities as citizens. Surely the days are not past that when we make an oath it represents truly what we believe.

I affirm the efforts of the honourable member for Wellington when he brings this forward because he is accurate and right in saying that there needs to be a focus for our commitment to the state, to the crown and to the people. Saying these things in a ceremonial form means we recognize their importance. They are things that are going to affect the way we think, the way we live and the work we do in this place. Again I affirm that particular point of view.

I am glad the member phrased the final part of this—"and that, subject to my own judgement and conscience, I will seek to represent the views of my constituents"—that way because there is a great discussion afield today about recall. If a member votes a certain way on a particular bill and there seems to be, according to some standard which is undefined, a great crowd of people who disagree with the member on this bill within his own constituency, somehow that person is not representing those views. I want to read into the record Edmund Burke's recollections on this. He said:

"Parliament is not a congress of ambassadors from different and hostile interests; which interests each must maintain, as an agent and advocate, against other agents and advocates; but Parliament is a deliberative assembly of one nation, with one interest, that of the whole; where, not local purposes, not local prejudices, ought to guide, but the general good, resulting from the general reason of the whole. You choose a member indeed; but when you have chosen him, he is not member for Bristol, but he is a member of Parliament. If the local constituent should have an interest, or should form a hasty opinion, evidently opposite to the real good of the rest of the community, the member of that place ought to be as far, as any other, from any endeavour to give it effect."

In other words, what Edmund Burke said was that of course we have to represent our constituents. It would be wrong indeed if any member of this House did not on a very regular basis go back to his or her constituents and seek to understand their needs, aspirations and understanding of the pressing issues of the day. For instance, last Saturday I was with the dairy farmers in Victoria county. I am not an expert in agriculture, yet it is vitally important that I as the member for Victoria-Haliburton have an opportunity to address very concretely the issues and needs they raise.

In terms of representing the people, I must go speak to them and know their needs and represent those things. But I must also, in debate with my other colleagues in this House from whatever party, attempt to address the larger issues of the day and make decisions for the common good on the basis of the debate and the discussion.

The member for Oriole talked about the Liberal Party not whipping votes when it came to private members' bills. I have right here the Votes and Proceedings of the last couple of years of that Parliament and what we see, in many instances, is that the Liberal government often voted against private members' bills that came into this place. I do not know where the honourable member for Oriole was on those votes.

Mr Jordan: I am especially pleased to have the opportunity this morning to speak to Bill 111. It has been put forward by my colleague the member for Wellington. To me, he is an excellent example of a member who has been raised and brought up through society in such a manner as to develop a character that has respect for the Queen, the oath to the Queen, the laws of Ontario and the laws of Canada. I am talking about a member who is actually in the next generation, you might say, to me. It is good to see in that age group that responsibility and interest in coming here to serve.

Relative to the bill, I think it has been pointed out that words alone will not change us. I agree. I do not have the time to go on at any length but I would like to make the point that I am definitely in favour of the change and of each member having to take that oath.

I was pleased to hear from the member for Victoria-Haliburton. I thought he made good references to it in many different ways. I would like to tie into the opening of the Legislature each day. If members think about what the Speaker says when he opens this House each day in the form of prayers, it is a reminder to each member of how we should conduct ourselves in this House and then see what happens as the debate develops. I think we should try to think back to the opening of the House and try to apply it to our thinking as we work in the Legislature during the day.

I had the pleasure yesterday to have present in the gallery a person who sat in this House as a member from 1959 to 1971. His parting words were, "I have never in all my life witnessed such carrying on and disrespect for this legislative procedure and this building."

Mr McLean: I want to comment briefly this morning on the resolution of my colleague the member for Wellington. The member for Wellington is following in the footsteps of his predecessor, Mr Johnson. Mr Johnson was always a gentleman and very well respected by every member of this Legislature for his ability to be sincere. He was one of the quiet ones, like myself.

Mr Curling: Hear, hear.

Mr McLean: That is right, I say to the member for Scarborough North.

I want to compliment the member for Wellington on his resolution. I hope it will put some decorum back into this Legislature. The part of the oath I really would like to talk about is, "I will seek to represent the views of my constituents." That has always been my view in the more than 10 years I have been here, to bring their views here, whether it be in committee or caucus, regardless of where it is.

I certainly had some problem when the reference to the Queen was taken out of the oath police officers take. I think that is one step in the direction the government wants to take, to do away with further oaths to the Queen. We even see today amendments to the Education Act with regard to prayers in the schools. I have had many constituents bring to my attention the problem they have had when parents agree with religious education and the school agrees with it for noonhour, but this government is taking that right away from those people.

We have a Premier who wants to look at a social charter. Is that social charter going to have anything in it with regard to allegiance to the Queen? I commend the member for bringing this resolution forward and hope members will see fit to support it to put some decorum back into this Legislature. I hope that when members take their oath of office that will mean they will represent all their constituents.

Mr Arnott: I am very pleased to take a few moments to sum up and respond to some of the comments that have been made.

I would first like to thank the member for Durham East for his participation this morning. He spoke as eloquently as usual and I appreciate his comments.

The member for Oriole suggested that perhaps this is not needed, that perhaps it is not all that necessary and would not change things. As I said in my initial comments, I do not expect it to change things overnight but I do believe the symbolism of the idea is very important and is a step in the right direction.

The member for Simcoe West talked about the importance of the monarchy. I know his very sincere commitment to those ideas and what he brings forward in this House is something very special.

I would like to respond briefly to a couple of things the member for Victoria-Haliburton said. He agreed with the central idea and I appreciated that. I was quite pleased to hear him quote from Edmund Burke, who some members may know was the father of conservatism in the western world. His comments ring true today.

I certainly appreciated the comments of the member for Lanark-Renfrew. He talked about meeting Mr Gomme yesterday, a former member for Lanark and a former Minister of Highways. I was very impressed to meet Mr Gomme. He was a very fine and distinguished gentleman. I recall him saying the same thing the present member for Lanark-Renfrew indicated: This place seems to have degenerated to a low that we have to get out of.

I appreciated the kind words of the member for Simcoe East. He talked about the former member for Wellington. Some of the members may know that I used to work for the former member for Wellington, Jack Johnson. He was a symbol of decency and integrity. I certainly hope to emulate some of the fine qualities he brought forward.

I hope this bill passes and goes to the standing committee on the Legislative Assembly for further discussion. I am certainly open to discussing amendments. These words are not written in stone, but I do think it would be an improvement if we expanded the oath we take.

ELEVATING DEVICES AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES ASCENSEURS ET APPAREILS DE LEVAGE

The House divided on Mr Ruprecht's motion for second reading of Bill 139, which was agreed to on the following vote:

The Deputy Speaker: A majority of the House not being in agreement with the request of the member, this bill—

Ms Poole: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: There appear to be members who did not vote. It was my understanding that if members are in their seats, they are required to vote.

The Deputy Speaker: The table has reported to me that there is clearly no majority; therefore, I acted accordingly.

Bill ordered for committee of the whole House.

The House recessed at 1208

AFTERNOON SITTING

The House resumed at 1330.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

DONALD WILLARD MOORE

Mr Curling: I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to a truly remarkable Canadian. This Saturday, November 2, Donald Willard Moore will celebrate his 100th birthday. To celebrate this event and to honour an individual who has given so much of himself to so many others, last week members of the black community held a dinner for Mr Moore. Also in attendance was my colleague the member for Willowdale.

Mr Moore, or Uncle Don as he has come to be affectionately known, first joined Toronto's then small black community in 1913. From the early 1920s onward, he was actively involved in voluntary service on behalf of black people. In recognition of his contribution to his people and his country, Mr Moore has been named to both the Order of Ontario and the Order of Canada.

Among the many causes to which Mr Moore has dedicated his life was the fight he led against Canada's unjust and discriminatory legislation in the 1950s. Donald Moore was instrumental in pointing out the inequalities and discrimination of Canada's immigration policies and seeing to it that these laws were reformed.

Along with another great black Canadian, Harry Gairey, Mr Moore was also committed to improving the working conditions of domestic servants from the Caribbean and elsewhere, who were often subjected to the worst kind of exploitation.

Mr Moore is a courageous man and a compassionate man, a man impatient with injustice and discrimination in all its forms, a man unafraid to speak out and fight for the freedom and dignity of blacks in this country. Mr Moore, happy birthday and thank you very much.

PLANT CLOSURE

Mr B. Murdoch: On Monday Sklar-Peppler furniture manufacturers told more than 200 salaried and union workers that both plants in Hanover were being closed. Last night I attended an employee meeting hosted by the company to explain this distressing situation to more than 250 concerned and affected people. The company explained that as furniture sales have decreased severely, the banks have given it no option but to close the factories. They also explained that salaries and vacation would be paid, but this alone is not enough.

The company has developed a restructuring plan whereby a new company would be established with the assets of the two plants in Hanover. The employees, if they wish, may, alone or with a third party, buy this company. The owners of Sklar-Peppler have been working with officials of the Ontario Development Corp to find a solution. They are meeting again today.

This company is one of the major employers in Hanover. Given the difficult economic times that are certainly being felt in my riding, every option must be examined before we allow 200 more people to become unemployed.

The workers of Sklar-Peppler will be voting on the company's restructuring plan on November 18. If both the salaried and unionized employees vote to accept this proposal, I would like assurance from the government and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology that the ODC will do everything within its power to approve a reasonable and fair financial plan to assist these people in my riding to get back to work as quickly as possible.

INTERVENORS AND SIGN LANGUAGE INTERPRETERS

Mr Malkowski: I am very pleased to inform members of the House that the Ministry of Colleges and Universities has today released its interim report. This is in response to resolution 13, which I presented in the House May 16, 1991.

The ministry is co-ordinating a provincial review of oral and American sign language and langue des signes québécois interpreter, intervenor and captioning services for deaf, deaf-blind, and hard-of-hearing and deafened persons. Three task force committees have been established: oral and sign language interpreter services; intervention services for deaf-blind persons, and text-based services for deafened and hard-of-hearing persons. The committees include representatives from service providers, consumer groups and trainers, and those groups are in the process of collecting information to prepare their reports. The recommendations will then be drafted to obtain feedback from interested parties all across the province. The final report is expected in the spring of 1992.

This type of review is the first ever that has happened in North America and we are very proud of the Ontario government for taking this important first step. They have involved the community, consumers, advocacy groups and educational facilities, and we hope we will arrive at a comprehensive and practical solution.

The interim report is proof that the ministry is on the right track and we look forward to the final report in 1992.

CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

Mr Offer: I make this statement profoundly disappointed with the Premier. It is one that other members may not recognize but which bothers me a great deal.

As a member of the select committee on Ontario in Confederation, we have conducted a great number of meetings throughout the province, listening and responding to people's opinions and concerns over the constitutional issue. The Premier has on a number of occasions complimented the committee on its work and non-partisan basis, and that is well appreciated.

Currently we are conducting hearings over federal proposals. One issue not contained in these proposals, but which in my opinion will be commented upon is the social charter proposal by the Premier. To date, the Premier has cancelled a meeting before our committee to explain this issue and did not appear before the federal committee this last Monday. As members of that committee, we do not know what the Premier means by his proposal, its implications and its impact, and he has not shared this with us.

He has found the time for some back-door meetings with the Prime Minister and other premiers on this very issue. Surely, if the Premier has the time for these meetings, he must have time for the Ontario provincial committee. We are going to be dealing with the federal paper and his own charter proposal. We need to know what his position is on his proposal. I am very disappointed in what I believe is his lack of respect for this committee and its work on this very important issue.

NON-PROFIT HOUSING

Mr Stockwell: I would like to speak today on a housing issue affecting some of my constituents on Martin Grove Road and Hedges Boulevard in Etobicoke. An application has been approved by the Ministry of Housing for the Martin Grove Baptist Homes Corp to build a multi-unit development in the middle of a residential neighbourhood under the non-profit housing program.

My residents have never been given an opportunity to comment on, review or analyse this application. They feel they have been left out of the process and have been forgotten. Let me be very clear: To approve a site in the middle of a residential neighbourhood on slightly more than an acre of land with a density of 35 units is absolutely insane from a planning point of view. It does not meet the planning guidelines of the city and no planner in his right mind would recommend it. Whether it is co-operative housing, commercial and industrial development, high-priced condominiums or stack town houses in this neighbourhood, it would never be given any serious hearings by the city.

The province has now granted them financing so they may go ahead with this development, which has no planning grounds and absolutely no public input. If any private developer attempted this kind of end run it would be given the bum's rush out of Etobicoke.

It is wasteful and insulting to my constituents to use their hard-earned tax dollars to move forward on a project the government refuses to tell them anything about. It refused to show them its plans and it refused to open it up to public scrutiny.

The planning process in the city of Etobicoke has worked for decades and decades. Why is it that everyone has to live within that process except the socialists at Queen's Park who were once the purveyors of process?

LANDFILL SITE

Mr Wiseman: I would like to comment on an issue of great concern to my constituents today. It is the Interim Waste Authority and the process it is following to find a landfill site.

The first stage of this process was to set up the corporation and its officers. They were then given the responsibility to move forward on the process of finding a long-term dump in Durham. Bids were tendered by various consulting firms to do the site selection process. Within this process, public consultation was mandated. In order to facilitate this public consultation, a document was created setting out the criteria to be used for site selection. The public was then asked to comment on these criteria and to offer changes where necessary.

My constituents were somewhat hesitant to participate in this process, given the long history of landfill in my riding. However, they have participated and are finding this approach to be more open and more likely to find a suitable landfill site than previous methods.

The major change in this process is that criteria for landfill sites were determined before the selection process, and unsuitable sites will be eliminated by the criteria and not against one another. This will ensure the best site and not the best of a bad lot.

A strong component of this process is this stress on waste management and the need to recycle and reduce. As we all know, there is much each of us can do to reduce waste. We can use the blue box and we can compost.

APPOINTMENTS PROCESS

Mr Daigeler: I wish to draw members' attention today to another case of blatant hypocrisy by the NDP. The government continues to claim undeserved credit for having opened up the appointments process to Ontario's agencies, boards and commissions. The government has placed numerous ads across the province advising people to submit their names for possible public appointments. In good faith, many Ontarians took the NDP at its word and sent in their résumés.

As it is, however, the government's self-professed openness is a cruel hoax. People in my riding and elsewhere are wondering why they have heard nothing in response to their applications. For example, two people in my riding sent in their résumés last July for the Nepean Police Services Board. It is now October 31 and they have not even received an acknowledgement of their letters.

If this government cannot handle the applications it receives, it should stop boasting about its fake openness. Advertising for public appointments has turned out to be a complete charade. It is time for this government to come clean and admit that the new appointments process is a total failure.

HOLOCAUST EDUCATION WEEK

Mr Harnick: We must never forget. This week is Holocaust Education Week, which is sponsored by the Holocaust remembrance committee of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto. Holocaust Education Week sensitizes all of us to the horrors inflicted on the Jewish people in Nazi Germany. As the sands of time run out and the generation of Holocaust survivors comes to an end, it is important that we remember and deepen our understanding of this dark period in history.

We remember not only the victims but other testaments to human courage. We remember the resistance. We remember the liberators. We remember the spirit of survival of the witnesses. We remember the righteous among the nations. Holocaust Education Week is a significant and vital community event that enables all of us to deepen our understanding of this dark period in our century.

The goal is awareness. The lessons derived from the Holocaust must not be wasted. Millions of deaths must not have been in vain. The lessons of the Holocaust have contemporary implications that are not confined to the Jewish people but have meaning for all of us. Remembering and understanding what life was like 50 years ago will help to prevent all forms of racism, hatred, bigotry and prejudice today. The lessons of history will guide us to shape our children's future. We must never forget.

SMALL BUSINESS

Mr Christopherson: I rise today to highlight to all members of this House the role small business plays in our economy and at the same time applaud the economic contribution of this crucial sector. Modern economies consistently look to small business as the engine for economic growth. During the 1980s, fully eight out of 10 new jobs were created by small business. It is important for all members to note that small firms make up over 90% of the companies in every broad industry category.

One of the key responses of this government to the challenges facing small business is the formation of a committee of parliamentary assistants under the able leadership of the member for Norfolk. The member for Norfolk, who has been appointed by the Premier to be the parliamentary assistant responsible solely for small business, will ensure the committee dialogues directly with the small business community. As co-chair of the committee, I am pleased that the input we receive from the small business community will play a significant role in identifying a number of priority areas that will be tackled in both the short term and the long term.

Along with my 10 PA colleagues from related ministries, we will also examine the regulatory and financial environment for existing business, as well as the potential role of entrepreneurship in the province's economic renewal. We invite the small business community to work with us in these difficult times and advise the government on new ideas and initiatives. Together we will make our province a strong and prosperous place for small business.

VISITOR

The Speaker: I invite all members of the House to welcome to our midst this afternoon, seated in the Speaker's gallery, Mr Doug Martindale, member of the Manitoba Legislative Assembly. Please join me in welcoming him.

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE

Hon Mr Rae: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I am very conscious of these things, and I want to take the initiative to correct the record. Looking at something I said yesterday, I realize that if the paragraph were taken literally and out of the context of what I was saying in the previous paragraph, it could possibly mislead the House, and that is not my intention. I hope members will accept that.

It is in response to the question I was asked yesterday by the member for St Catharines. I said in that answer, "Nothing that would be done by this government would be intended in any way to intimidate or harass or prevent a member of the opposition or any member of the Legislature from carrying out his or her responsibilities."

I then went on to say in the next paragraph, "No police investigations have been ordered or directed by this government." What I should have said in that answer, what is the case, is that no police investigations into the conduct of members of this Legislature on any side have been ordered by this government. I hope members will accept that correction in the spirit in which it has been offered. I am sure there will be more to be said later on.

The Speaker: I thank the Premier for correcting the record.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

NATIVE EDUCATION

Hon Mr Wildman: On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Education I would like to outline for members three initiatives regarding native education. The minister is attending a day-long meeting with native leaders and is therefore unable to be here to deliver this message in person.

The initiatives I will be outlining for members are the native languages policy, the release of the Native Studies Guideline and the availability of a computer software program for the Cree language, which is a syllabic language.

First, I am pleased to announce the new policy regarding native languages. Members may be aware that a policy regarding native as a second language has been in place since September 1987. In that policy, the provision for native language instruction was optional for school boards. Beginning in September 1992, school boards will be required to offer a native languages program where the parents or guardians of 15 or more students request instruction of a native language and a qualified native language teacher is available. A school board may offer the program for less than 15 students after considering the feasibility and cost of the program.

Native language classes are to be offered during the instructional portion of the school day. If the parents or guardians wish their children to participate both in native languages and French-as-a-second-language programs or anglois programs, school boards will have to make arrangements to accommodate both programs.

A native language credit course can be recognized to replace the French-language credit course or the anglois course currently among the compulsory credit course offerings leading to the Ontario secondary school diploma. There are six native languages offered through the program: Ojibwe, Cree, Deleware, Mohawk, Oneida and Cayuga.

The Ministry of Education will continue to provide financial assistance to school boards to offset operating costs of the native languages program, and five-year support, at the rate of $200 per pupil, for development costs to new boards offering the program. The new regulation governing native languages will be in place in the spring of 1992. Following the new regulation, a policy-program memorandum will be sent to school boards by the Ministry of Education outlining the new policy in detail.

I would like to turn now to the second of these initiatives, the release of the new Native Studies Guideline. The Native Studies Guideline, intermediate division, 1991, outlines a program of native studies for grades 7 and 8 that explores community organization, social change and social conflict from a native perspective. The guideline also outlines two courses for credit that may be offered in grades 9 or 10. One of the new courses can be used to replace the compulsory course in history. In addition, it provides teachers with a foundation for integrating a native perspective across the curriculum. Native studies courses are available to native and non-native students alike.

The third and last initiative I would like to talk about is a software program for the Cree language. The Cree syllabic text editor is a user-friendly software program which not only displays the syllabic text but also speaks to the user. An audible voice pronounces syllabics which appear on the screen so that the user learns both visually and aurally. The program utilizes both eastern and western Cree syllabic texts and was developed in conjunction with Cree peoples in Attawapiskat, Fort Albany, Kashechewan, Moosonee and Moose Factory.

The text editor is currently being tested in three schools in northern Ontario. It is available to all publicly funded schools in the province, as well as in schools administered by the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs and band-operated schools. Funding for the development of the text editor and the Native Studies Guideline was shared between the Ontario Ministry of Education and Indian and Northern Affairs Canada.

Through these initiatives the Ontario government has demonstrated its commitment to improving the educational experiences of native students. These initiatives will provide the opportunity, in communities where there is demand, to build towards some fundamental improvements in the quality of native education.

These changes to native education follow in the spirit of the recently signed statement of political relationship between the province of Ontario and native communities to deal with each other on a government-to-government basis. I would like to congratulate my colleague the Minister of Education and the Chiefs of Ontario for this advance in education for native people in Ontario.

LONG-TERM CARE

Hon Mrs Boyd: Today the Ontario government is launching a series of public meetings and consultations province-wide to discuss long-term care services and programs.

Long-term care is the joint responsibility of three ministries. I am making this statement on behalf of my ministry, the Ministry of Health, which has now taken the lead in this endeavour, and the Ministry of Citizenship.

This morning the Minister of Health made a similar statement in Kingston at Providence Manor Home for the Aged. Just about an hour ago, the Minister of Citizenship also announced the release of the consultation paper at Copernicus Lodge in west-end Toronto. This location was chosen in order to reach out to our multicultural community and encourage dialogue with groups that have traditionally been left out of our deliberations and whose voices often have not been heard.

Our purpose is to review the proposed redirection of long-term care through discussion with the people who use long-term care services, their care givers and workers in the long-term care system. We have produced a document called Redirection of Long-Term Care and Support Services in Ontario, which is designed as a consultation paper. Members received their copies this morning.

This document presents the various issues involved in long-term care, what services are needed and how to ensure that services are available to those who need them. It incorporates the proposed new directions in long-term care announced in June by my predecessor.

Let me briefly recall for the House those directions:

Expansion in funding for community support services, with flexible funding arrangements and assurance of greater community participation; better co-ordination of services through new service co-ordination agencies; realignment of funding policies to further shift the emphasis from institutional to community-based services and to reduce regional disparities; increased funding for supportive housing, and no charge to consumers for services in the home.

This Redirection paper will be widely distributed to people who have an interest in long-term care. We are asking them to read it, talk about it and think about it. Then we plan to hold meetings and workshops in communities throughout the province.

As I mentioned, the response of people who use long-term care services will be particularly valuable, and this will certainly include the consumers: those in nursing homes, homes for the aged and other care giving facilities, those living at home, those in the community and their families. We are going to do our best to include everyone with an interest in long-term care in these discussions. That means people who provide care and people who work as advocates. It means labour groups and women's groups, cultural and racial organizations and representatives of federal, provincial and municipal governments.

We are going to make sure that aboriginal peoples and the francophone community in Ontario have an opportunity to talk about their concerns and needs. We will be guided by aboriginal organizations in designing a separate consultation to plan for long-term care supports for aboriginal peoples living both on and off reserves.

These are some of the topics for consultation:

Reduced reliance on institutional care. We are planning major funding increases over the next five years to build up a solid base of community supports in home and family settings.

New links and relationships between health services and social services to allow easier access to the programs people need.

Reduction of the regional disparities now existing. No matter where people live in this province, we want them to have access to appropriate long-term care services.

This government is determined to make the consultation process both open and accessible. We are committed to listening seriously to every participant and considering all points of view. The redirection of long-term care and support services promises to be exciting. I invite the interest and support of all members of the House as we plan for the future of long-term care in Ontario.

AGRICULTURAL LAND

Hon Mr Buchanan: A number of members have recently raised questions about our government's response to proposed revisions of the Niagara region official plan. As members may recall, these revisions are intended to relax the severance policies in agricultural areas, including a provision to allow severances to tender fruit growers for economic reasons. Under the proposed policy revisions, a tender fruit grower could get up to seven severances on a 70-acre parcel of land.

Niagara region is to be commended for its past endeavours in land use planning and in particular in its efforts to protect the agricultural land base. We understand the region passed the amendment with great reluctance. In taking this course of action, we also realize council had the interests of the area's farmers in mind.

However, we do not feel the solution to Niagara's tender fruit economic problems will be found by fragmenting the land base. In fact, we believe such actions will create further problems for agriculture in this area. We cannot forget the servicing, environmental and other problems that result from scattered development.

This government is committed to the protection of agricultural land in Ontario, including the unique Niagara fruit lands. The province does not approve of the weakening of long-standing regional policies to protect these unique, irreplaceable lands.

As the Minister of Agriculture and Food, I place great importance on the economic needs of fruit farmers in the Niagara area. I believe we have demonstrated our commitment to agriculture. In spite of tighter budgets, cabinet recently approved an additional $6 million for horticultural crops to assist farmers this year. We are working with the farm organizations to have longer-term programs in place for next year.

In addition, the Ministry of Agriculture and Food has initiated other means of supporting Niagara area tender fruit farmers by examining alternative safety net programs and providing marketing assistance. I have also instructed the ministry's Innovation Agriculture unit to address alternative crops and markets for the Niagara area.

The federal government has allocated $100 million for horticulture and other crops across Canada. In my discussions next week with the federal Minister of Agriculture, Bill McKnight, I will be pressing for Ontario's fair share of this funding, which would directly assist horticultural producers in the Niagara area.

Within my ministry, we have a committee looking at other options to help the tender fruit industry, many of which were presented in the Niagara task force report.

I want to share with the House, as we have already done with the regional chairman of Niagara, Mr Wilbert Dick, our initial response to the region's proposals.

It is important that the government respond quickly to these proposals because the region has decided to implement the amendment after November 1. This means that the region's land division committee could grant severances under these new policies after November 1.

1400

We are advising the region today, in a letter signed by the Minister of Municipal Affairs, that the proposed policies for economic severances for tender fruit growers, severances for family members, the creation of new lots for infilling in the unique agricultural areas and the removal of the existing grandfathering provision applicable to retirement lots cannot be approved.

We have also decided to defer the decision on the proposed policy that allows downsizing of tender fruit operations, as more time is needed to evaluate this option. We have instructed our staff to meet with regional officials and the farm community to discuss the implications of the downsizing proposal. A decision will be made on this issue very soon.

We have also instructed staff to appeal all severance applications which do not meet the currently approved regional policies to the Ontario Municipal Board.

I hope the members of the House understand the reasons for our actions today. The long-term solutions to economic problems facing our agricultural communities are not achieved by paving over or fragmenting irreplaceable farm land. We will continue to pursue solutions to the economic problems before us, as our collective resources will be needed to improve the viability of farming. In Niagara, we hope these collective resources include the region, the farm community, the federal government and all members of this House.

RESPONSES

LONG-TERM CARE

Mrs Sullivan: I am responding to the statement relating to long-term care. I am surprised the minister did not wear a clown costume into the House today, because it is Hallowe'en and in fact she is treating this House as a masquerade party, because in this announcement there is nothing behind the mask.

More than two years ago, the then Treasurer announced the commitment of the government to changes in long-term care that would be the most important developments in social services since the introduction of medicare. There was a funding commitment behind that, and I refer back to the introduction of strategies for long-term care. The government of Ontario in the fiscal year 1990 committed $52 million towards reform specifically to strengthen community services. Those new expenditures would rise to $640 million annually by 1996-97, and the total would represent an annual expenditure of $2 billion over the next six years.

That announcement was made two years ago. With that announcement came a consultative document called Strategies for Change, an important document that asked consumers, care givers, institutions and facilities to participate in a serious process of consultation to bring needed change to how we care for people with lifelong disabilities, ationalizing services and making them responsive to the needs of changing demographics and concepts of care.

The document that the minister has spoken about today simply envisages a consultation on consultation, meetings on how to meet and talks on how to talk. We know how his government consults. It makes unilateral decisions, and it has already done so in this field. It has made decisions already on who can have a place on service access agencies. Public health departments have been told they cannot be part of that process. It has made decisions on level-of-care funding based on the Alberta model without consultation with chronic care hospitals. It has made decisions on cutting hospital beds and cutting services, saying that services will be provided by community agencies with no money, no guidelines and no system of support.

Hallowe'en is associated with trick or treat. There is no treat here. This is a trick.

AGRICULTURAL LAND

Mr Bradley: The news that is brought to the House by the Minister of Agriculture and Food will no doubt cause a revolution among farmers in the Niagara Peninsula. The reason for that is that while farmers, I am sure, would be prepared to accept that there would not be modifications to the official plan, and those who want to preserve agricultural land in the province would indicate that they would be against the severances which were proposed, on the other hand they will be deeply disappointed that in compensation for these concessions, they will receive nothing from the government of Ontario.

We have a Treasurer in this province who is looking to sell off certain things in the government, certain properties and other things in the government, to meet its financial obligations, but the Minister of Agriculture and Food does not want the farmers to be able to do so. He is prepared to pave farm land so the Ministry of Agriculture and Food can have its weigh station for trucks, but he will not allow farmers to develop their land. He refuses to act upon so many of the suggestions that have been brought forward in task force reports by farmers and by agricultural representatives across the province.

Those of us who live in urban areas will be delighted with the fact that the minister is refusing to grant severances, that he is refusing to make changes to the official plan. But farmers and those of us who understand the plight of farmers in this province will be deeply disappointed that there is not an extra dollar for the farmers of the Niagara region, who are going to be forced to stay on the land, forced to farm land uneconomically because this government, which seems to have a lot of money to help other industries in the province and seems to have lots of money to help other parts of the province, will not devote that same money to the people of the Niagara region—that investment in people, that investment in farmers, which will allow them to be part of those who would be applauding rather than attempting to criticize this particular announcement by the minister.

NATIVE EDUCATION

Mr Beer: I rise to comment on the belated announcement made by the Minister of Natural Resources with respect to native language policy. I think, as the minister knows, that there is an excellent foundation on which this policy is built, and I would note the role played by my colleagues the member for Scarborough-Agincourt and the former Minister of Education, Chris Ward.

I think what is particularly important is that the minister recognize that this costs money and that, when he is asking school boards to carry out these programs, he makes certain they have the money so that they can go on. These are important initiatives and they have to be properly funded.

Mr Harnick: I am responding to the minister responsible for native affairs. I have nothing but praise for the statement he has delivered here today. What he is doing is preserving languages, culture and history that are very important to preserve, and I praise what he has done.

AGRICULTURAL LAND

Mr Villeneuve: I want to thank the Minister of Agriculture and Food for making this statement in this Legislature, where statements should be made. I thank him for doing that. The statement he has just made, however, does not alleviate a great deal the major problems that are out in rural Ontario. His second paragraph says that he is allowing policies to allow severances in tender fruit growing areas. Then he says, "Well, all of these won't be allowed, and we've also instructed staff to appeal all severance applications which do not meet the currently approved regional policies of the OMB."

How much money is he going to spend on that? The millions that were spent in Ottawa to fight Terrace Investments and the Ottawa Senators was money thrown away on a purely political exercise, and I do not think we need that right now with the way agriculture is.

I was in Lucknow when over 1,000 farmers told us they are in very, very desperate straits. I was in Leamington and spoke to a number of farmers who have had three bad years out of four. Things are not good in the great southwest. I was in the Niagara area and I saw plenty for-sale signs, as I am sure the minister is aware. Thank goodness he is recognizing it, but he really has not done a thing.

Common sense has to prevail. Yes, we want to preserve the Niagara fruit land; we also want to preserve the people who operate those farms. They are just as important, if not more important. We need common sense across the province. I come from rural eastern Ontario, where things are not much better than anywhere else. When we have marginal land for which an application for severance is requested and his ministry is fighting it tooth and nail as a purely political exercise, that is wrong. He should look at it across the province.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr J. Wilson: I cannot believe we waited for more than a year for this document concerning long-term care from this government. The Minister of Community and Social Services already announced last June the $647 million. I guess that announcement was made in a vacuum, because today the government tells us it is going to consult about consulting. This is not redirection; this is no direction from the minister's government.

The report released by the former government also recommended more consultation, and that was 18 months ago. When is the government going to take some tough decisions in terms of long-term care? The district health council and the Simcoe County District Health Unit have already told the minister that she does not need to set up 40 new co-ordinating agencies. What she is doing today is telling us that she is going to set up a huge bureaucracy across this province: 40 new agencies in communities that already have district health units and district health councils that can co-ordinate these services for her.

I am surprised the minister is not taking a more in-depth look at this right now, rather than telling us she is going to consult about consulting. It is sad, and I just want to say I am sorry that seniors and persons with disabilities and their families have waited so long for so little.

Mr Jackson: I would also like to comment that this government has false-started announcements on four separate occasions. If this is what we have been waiting for in terms of the minister's direction on long-term care, I agree that it is no direction whatsoever. There are groups in this province which are being assaulted by her funding cuts today, and yet she says she is going to talk about it for the next two years before we will have a budget plan in place to deal with long-term care transition in this province.

The truth is that $37.5 million was ripped away from chronic care hospitals in this province in order to pay for this study and for the ongoing consultation for the next two years. Some 13,000 chronic care patients—these are children who have been in car accidents, our grandparents who have made their contribution to society, and they are stuck in these institutions—and what has her government said? It has said she will not get any redevelopment dollars in the next two years unless she redefines her beds and cuts beds.

That is the agenda for this government in long-term care. It is to cut services and to cut beds without providing alternative support services. The member for Bruce two days ago brought to the attention of the House the true agenda. Let me just simply say that the Premier's agenda to con the people has now become the socialist agenda to harm our senior citizens. The government had better look at this document, because that is exactly what it does.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

Mr Miclash: Mr Speaker, I would just like to bring to your attention yet another example of this government not allowing me to express my privileges here in the House. Just moments ago, I was informed of an announcement that is going to be made in Sudbury, I believe. This is an announcement to be made by the Treasury on Monday to announce a Canada and Ontario joint initiative for northern Ontario.

I would look forward to being able to make some comments on that announcement, should it be made here in the House, and I cannot believe the Treasurer has taken that announcement to Sudbury on Monday morning, when I will be on my way—

The Speaker: Will the member for Kenora take his seat. The member will know that the Speaker has dealt with this matter before. It is not a point of privilege.

Mr Harnick: I am delighted to see that the government is starting to make statements again in the Legislature, but it is doing it in a very selective way. I notice that the Attorney General has been out making announcements today about Bill 17.

The Speaker: Would the member take his seat, please. There is nothing out of order.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr Elston: I appreciate that the government was kind of full in its statements. There were a lot of things happening today, and I appreciate that some of its ministers were able to make it back to make their announcements here. I seriously do appreciate that. It gives us a chance to respond to some of the things that are happening.

I would like to ask a question of the fellow whose picture was the lead so that Diane Francis's column could be read in the current issue of Maclean's magazine. It is our own Premier on there among the three New Democratic Party people, the lean New Democrat from Saskatchewan and the pragmatist from BC. I want to know a little bit more about our own Premier, Mr Speaker, if you will allow me.

This gentleman has decided, and his minister, the Solicitor General, said yesterday that there could be nothing done to save the 3,000 jobs in the drugstore industry that were talked about yesterday. Yesterday they also indicated that they were prepared to intervene and help save the jobs, and in fact even create some new ones, at de Havilland, where there were problems. They also intervened to save some jobs in Kapuskasing, and temporarily, some in Elliot Lake, but they were not able to do anything to save any of the jobs at General Tire or at Kolmar in Barrie, some 300 jobs. I would like to know from the Premier exactly how he determines which jobs will survive to participate in his economic recoveries and which ones will not.

Hon Mr Rae: First of all, let me say to the member that we try to respond in those areas where it is very clear that everyone involved—the companies, the workers, the creditors and the community itself—is prepared and everyone out there is willing and able and wants to participate in either a restructuring of the company or in some kind of creative proposal.

If the member is asking me what is it that drives us, for example, with respect to de Havilland or with respect to Spruce Falls, the answer is very clear. It is the fact that everyone involved—the federal government, the provincial government, the companies themselves, those who are seeking to sell and those who are seeking to find an arrangement—needs to have some creative work done by this government to help find a solution. That is the approach we have taken in the critical situations the member has described.

Mr Elston: It is an interesting summation that basically there is no overall strategy. If one of the people mentioned appears to have a veto, it seems to me the Premier has just said he is unwilling to intervene to help save any jobs.

Hon Mr Rae: No, that isn't true.

Mr Elston: He indicated he had to have everybody along for the ride or he was not going to participate.

When the Treasurer of the province spoke with some eight or more women from State Farm Insurance, he told them in their encounter in the hallway that there were far too many jobs in the private insurance business sector and that some of those would have to be lost. This was prior to the government's indication that it was not going to take over the business. I wonder if the Premier can tell us which part of his long-awaited industrial strategy will deal with which jobs are, in essence, worth saving and which ones are not.

Hon Mr Rae: First of all, I should tell the honourable Leader of the Opposition that the Treasurer does not accept the views that have been ascribed to him by the member. Since he prefaced his remarks by attributing some remarks to the Treasurer, I thought I had an obligation to at least get him a chance, if not to clear the record, at least to equal the record with respect to the comments the member has made.

I would say to the Leader of the Opposition that saving jobs is a very important part of the strategy—it has to be—making sure that we are saving as many of the jobs as we can. The honourable member knows full well that was a very much part of the reasoning behind our decision with respect to insurance, and I make no apologies for that. That is the reason we made the decision we did, as well as the question of cost. Saving jobs where they can be saved is a very important element of any economic strategy for this province. It has to be.

Mr Elston: While the Premier responds today that saving jobs is a priority of his, he was here when the Minister of Health celebrated that some 217 beds were closed at Toronto Hospital and some 250 nurses laid off, saying, "It was effective management of the system," and, "We are going in exactly the right way." Surely the Premier must recognize the inconsistency between his policy of spending millions of dollars to save some jobs, on the one hand, and the declaration by his Minister of Health that nursing layoffs are going in the right way. I wonder if the Premier can tell us how many more jobs he will let his ministers cut as part of his strategy of economic renewal.

Hon Mr Rae: I like the Leader of the Opposition—do not ask me why—but he stretches the spirit of affection which is there in me when by putting together two sentences that are totally different, he attributes views to the Minister of Health that are totally unfair. No member of his cabinet, no member of the government, no person in his or her right mind would celebrate a situation facing hospital workers where potentially their jobs are at risk.

Nobody would celebrate that and the member's use of the word "celebrate" is most unfair to the Minister of Health.

It is not an easy time for the economy. There will be some changes in some sectors. There will be some changes with respect to government services. This is a tough reality that we have to face. The fact of the matter is that we are trying to save as many jobs as we can as effectively as we can, and we are also trying to manage the taxpayers' dollars as fairly as we can and create the most effective health care services we can across the province.

Mr Elston: I only observe that there was a certain touting by the Minister of Health about what effective managers they were in cutting all those beds, and as a result all those people lost their jobs. The Premier knows that and they know that.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Elston: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services, who arrived here to deliver the message the Minister of Health delivered a little bit earlier in Kingston. Today, with the release of the long-term care strategy paper, we were really expecting to see the yardsticks being moved a considerable distance by this government. What we received instead was a further delay on service improvements and improvements in quality of life that the people of Ontario expected from this New Democratic Party government.

We now know that we should no longer expect any action on long-term care until well after next year. In fact, the line that amazed me was that there were community groups being established to advise the ministry people on how to consult on the issue. What is the point in consulting when instead of a road map to recovery, all these people are offering to anybody is deadend consultation? Why is it, and what is the real reason they are delaying the improvements in community care for people with long-term care needs?

Hon Mrs Boyd: The reason we need to consult again is that we have made significant changes in terms of the redirection of long-term care. In the spirit of wanting to consult and ensure that we have a consensus in Ontario on the care of the elderly and the disabled, we felt it was essential for us to go back to the community with our new vision.

Our vision is quite significantly different. It involves much more flexible funding arrangements. It involves a system that has no charge to consumers for services that are provided in the home, quite a considerable difference from what was proposed by the previous government. We intend to use the substantial investment we are making in supported housing programs to supplement the kind of care we are offering.

We are reallocating funds from the hospital sector and we have been very clear about that. The only way to improve the community base of long-term care to get it out of the hospital care area is to reallocate funds. That is a direction that requires considerable consultation with the workers involved, with the administration of those facilities and with the communities.

Mr Elston: I would like to ask the minister how she can stand here and deliver a story like that when really all these people are doing is disguising the fact that they are unwilling to put any money into community services. Quite the contrary, as part of their restraint program they are requiring the Minister of Health to cut back on delivering services that are needed in the community. To show us she has done something, would the minister tell the House how much her ministry and the Ministry of Health have put into community services and improved institutional services as new money for this current fiscal year?

Hon Mrs Boyd: I think the member opposite is quite aware that this is a long-term plan and that a lot of the delivery systems are projected into the future in terms of the kinds of dollars we will be spending. One does not enter into a consultation process and be redirecting the money. What we are looking at over the long term, by 1996-97, is a total of $647.6 million more per year for long-term care and support services. In that whole package is a reallocation from the hospital budget, revenue in terms of the accommodation costs in long-term care facilities, and $460 million will be in new provincial funds.

Mr Elston: It is pretty obvious that the long-term care here is long-term care of the program consultation, and nothing to do with the people who need services. I would like to ask the minister why they are going on this consultation when they have already made decisions on key elements of reform, like the service access organization, like the levels-of-care funding issue. Is it not a little bit remote, as the minister's colleague the Minister of Health stated this morning, in the name of "consultation" to set up advisory groups to advise her people on how to consult?

In reality, nothing is happening with those people. Gerard Kennedy is right when he says the New Democratic government "hasn't done anything yet that makes any sense." While the minister is busy tearing apart the system, why does she continue to evade the need to do something to put services in the community, at the same time as she applauds the Minister of Health who is tearing down hospital services?

Hon Mrs Boyd: The member opposite has characterized the action of the government in a way that is not at all fair. We have continued the consultation at the request of our communities. We had a focus group that involved all the groups I have mentioned with which we will be consulting, which said very specifically that what they needed from us was a longer period of time to make known their needs, particularly consumers, community organizations, native groups, and racial and cultural groups, which did not feel included in the previous consultations that had gone on. They felt their needs had not been assessed.

When the member talks about tearing down hospital services, he is of course quite incorrect. We are reallocating resources and we will have to reallocate those resources gradually to ensure that those now in long-term care in hospital settings are still cared for while we are moving to a community base.

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE

Mr Tilson: I have a question for the Minister of Financial Institutions. This morning the minister gave a speech to the Insurance Brokers Association of Ontario. In that speech he said he was not convinced of the merits of restoring a right to sue. Last December, when the minister voted for the member for Leeds-Grenville's private member's bill restoring the right to sue, he was convinced then. Last year during the election campaign, the member was convinced of the right to sue. When the Liberals tore the guts out of the rights of the individual to sue, he was convinced of the right to sue. Why is he no longer convinced?

Hon Mr Charlton: Let me say to the member that consultation—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Would the member take his seat. The member for York Mills.

Interjection.

The Speaker: Well, good line or not—and we still like each other, right? Okay. The minister.

Hon Mr Charlton: Let me just very briefly say to the member that consultation can do wonderful things when you sit down and listen to those who in fact ultimately have to receive the benefits of whatever system you put in place to deliver benefits to accident victims. One of the things we learned during the course of our consultations over the last year is that a large number of victims have never been adequately served by the legal system, and our conclusions after listening to those victims—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Take your seat. When the House has come to order, then perhaps the minister will be able to continue and the Speaker will be able to hear what is being said.

Hon Mr Charlton: Our conclusion, after listening carefully to the victims we spent a considerable amount of time talking to, is that we can much more fairly and effectively and adequately deliver benefits to those victims in a benefits package to which they are entitled without having to wait three or four or five years for court action.

Mr Tilson: Interesting policy. This morning the minister told the insurance brokers that the reason he was no longer convinced is that, "For the majority of consumers, the tort system is slow, unpredictable and stressful." That is the new word, it seems, the new S-word.

I suggest that the problems created by the justice system are the responsibility of the Attorney General and not the Ministry of Financial Institutions. Because the system is slow in remedying the rights of the individual, you do not simply cancel his rights.

The minister said this morning he would like to reinstate the ability of more innocent accident victims to sue for pain and suffering. He did not say all innocent accident victims would be able to sue for pain and suffering, just more. How many more innocent accident victims will be able to sue for pain and suffering—10%, 30%, 70%? How many?

Hon Mr Charlton: The member has already raised this question in the House and the response to the question is quite simple.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Would the minister take his seat, please. The member for Dufferin-Peel posed a question. I assume he would like to hear the response. He would be able to hear the response if the member for Willowdale would allow him to hear the response.

Hon Mr Charlton: As I have said to the member across the way and to some of his colleagues, we are in the process of reviewing the threshold—a threshold which we believe is too difficult—set by the Liberals in the former piece of legislation. When we are ready to table our legislation, the member will know the answer in terms of what the threshold will be and how many people will pass through that threshold. But I am not about to announce the legislation in this House until I am ready to announce the whole package.

Mr Tilson: The minister obviously does not know the answer. He seemed to know about a year ago, but as time goes on he is asking for more and more time. The wheel is going to fall off.

What the minister does know—because he obviously does not know the answer to that question—is that the real need for seeking redress to the courts is the failure of his insurance scheme to accommodate economic loss. It seems more and more clear that he is not going to accommodate the issue of economic loss. Can the minister tell us why he does not intend to reintroduce the right to recover for economic loss?

Hon Mr Charlton: Again, I am not going to waste a lot of time on this because the member has now asked this question three times in the House. We intend to deal with the economic loss questions in the benefits package in first-party benefits.

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr Harris: On September 23 the Premier said, “Renewing our economy must be the centre of focus of our work as a province.” I agreed with that statement then and agree with it now.

Today I released a document called New Directions: A Blueprint for Economic Renewal and Prosperity in Ontario. In the absence of what this House has been given as a comprehensive plan from the government to date, and since on September 23 the Premier asked “the advice of the House,” I ask the Premier if he would agree to seriously consider the proposals I sent to his office this morning in the spirit that they were drafted.

Hon Mr Rae: Of course I will. Let me say by means of preface that I have had a chance to read this proposal from the leader of the third party this morning. There are some interesting ideas in it. There are some ideas with which I think we are moving in the same direction, particularly in the training area. If I may say so, I think we are all agreed there.

We just negotiated an agreement with the federal government in which this government has succeeded in achieving an increase of more than 80% in funding from the federal government for training here. I have appointed a deputy minister, Naomi Alboim, with the particular responsibility of pushing the strategy through the bureaucracy and continuing the consultation process with business and labour on that subject.

There are some other areas with which I take issue with the leader of the third party in terms of the net effect it would have on the economy. I very much appreciate his having sent this to me and I think there are some ideas which I will not only scrutinize myself but will ask our officials in Treasury and elsewhere to have a good, hard look at.

Mr Harris: One of the things the Premier said in the September 23 statement was that saving jobs was important. I agree, and this document was prepared in that context. He said, “Our industries have to be able to buy and sell in Canadian and world markets at competitive prices or they will not be able to survive.” I agree, and this document was prepared in that context. He also said we need a sustained effort to get people off welfare and back to work. I agree, and this document is a reflection of that.

We really have not seen a comprehensive plan or solutions that seem to address those specific statements. I know the Premier has been busy with other things. New Directions is based on what Ontarians have been telling me and my caucus. It is consistent, I believe, with what I have been saying all along, that the government of the day seems to be moving in a direction that is different from answering those concerns and those questions.

Would the Premier agree to stop heading in directions that are counterproductive to answering those questions and not only truly examine these proposals but, in the spirit in which they were given, have an all-party committee, or have the three of us sit down and work with these proposals that come from Ontarians themselves, who want answers to those very same questions the Premier raised on September 23?

Hon Mr Rae: Of course there will be ample opportunity here to debate the suggestions made by the honourable member. I would only say that I take issue with him, for example, when he says that the steps this government has taken have been contrary to or against the interests of getting Ontario back to work.

I would argue very strongly that the efforts we have made in terms of the budget, in terms of what we have done, while they have been criticized by some, I think many people, including people in the business community, recognize in their private moments that if we had not taken the steps we have taken, the recession in Ontario would have been far more serious than it is right now.

Mr Harris: I truly want to be as non-partisan as I can in this. The Premier’s statement on September 23 also said, “Finger-pointing is a luxury our economy cannot afford.” I respect that and I agree with him.

It is in that non-partisan spirit that I ask the Premier and the Treasurer to sit down with me and perhaps members of my caucus—if the leader of the Liberal Party and members of caucus wish to participate positively, I suggest they be involved as well—to discuss Ontario's economic crisis, the fact that we cannot compete today at the taxation, regulatory and spending levels that we are at, and truly look at how we can set the priorities to get us to that level where in fact we can compete.

I ask the Premier if he will make that commitment. He has said in response to the question that we will have ample opportunity to debate the proposals. I accept that. He knows I do not have a vehicle, nor does my party, to put this document on the agenda for debate, but the Premier does. If he would even follow up on that suggestion in his response and have this document referred to an all-party committee, that report can then be called by his House leader and we can have a chance in a non-partisan way to debate it in the Legislature. I would accept that offer if he were sincere.

Hon Mr Rae: There is a committee responsible for the pre-budget consultation and not only would I have no objection, I would encourage the committee to discuss the member's paper as well as other suggestions coming from the public with respect to economic changes which are going to be necessary.

One small fact the leader of the third party may not have been aware of but which I am sure he would want me to share with the House is that Statistics Canada and Investment Canada this week released information with respect to foreign investment in Canada over the past while. The overwhelming evidence, and it has been trumpeted in the Quebec media but not here, is that three quarters of the foreign investment coming to Canada in the last while has been coming to the province of Ontario. That tells us something about the level of confidence that really exists today with respect to our government and with respect to the general level of the economy that we are heading into.

TRANSPORTATION FOR THE DISABLED

Mr Offer: I have a question for the Minister of Labour regarding the strike affecting the Disabled and Aged Regional Transit System in Hamilton, which is now into its ninth day. As the minister knows, this system provides a necessary service to 9,000 riders. As he will also be aware, last week in an article by Emilia Casella the Minister of Transportation was quoted as saying, "People have to be even more imaginative and innovative." I think the minister will agree that type of statement is lacking and unfeeling in the extreme.

He will be aware that during the recent TTC dispute he used all of his resources short of legislation to push for an end to the strike. Can he inform the House today whether he intends to take the same steps he took during the TTC strike to ensure that the 9,000 users of this transit system will have service restored immediately?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I think the question is a good one. Any situation involving a strike where the facilities that are out take care of the handicapped and some who are not quite as well off as many of us in the community is a serious situation and one that we have been taking seriously. We are looking at it and our senior mediators have been looking at that situation over the last several days.

Mr Offer: During the TTC strike the government not only ordered a provincial mediator but it also held a number of special cabinet sessions, forced an all-night bargaining session and directly supervised the final vote to resolve the dispute. During that strike the public were able to walk to work, took their cars and even rode bicycles to cope with the transit shutdown, but these are not options for the users of the system in the minister's riding.

Will the minister commit today that in the event these efforts fail, he will bring forward back-to-work legislation to provide service to those people who need the service immediately?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: The member will be aware that was a push almost from day one during the Toronto transit strike. We did not use the back-to-work order. We were able to achieve an agreement there and we hope to be able to do exactly the same in the DARTS strike in the city of Hamilton.

AGRICULTURAL LAND

Mr Villeneuve: The Minister of Agriculture and Food has just announced that he will be fighting severances granted by the Niagara land division committee by going to the Ontario Municipal Board. Given the Terrace Investments catastrophe that cost the taxpayers of Ontario probably well over $1 million, how much money does he intend to set aside to fight farmers against severances they are asking for to prevent them from going down the pipe?

Hon Mr Buchanan: As I tried to indicate in my statement, we are going to have discussions with the region in terms of the downsizing operation, but the Ministry of Agriculture and Food is trying to focus on how to help the farmer. We do not believe that the suggestions coming out of the region are the answer.

The answer, as the member said earlier, is to try to save agriculture and save the farmer. That is what we are trying to do in this government. We are not speculating about what it is going to cost to fight anybody; we are working in our ministry to see how we can assist the farmers in that area and how we can get the federal government to work with us to assist the farmers in that area and not focus on what it is going to cost to fight. We think farmers want to save the land. We think farmers do not want to sever those lots down there in that way and we do not expect to have any major fights in the area.

Mr Villeneuve: The minister will be spending millions of dollars to fight farmers for what this government is considering doing. This government is considering selling capital assets to reduce its deficit, yet when the farmer and his family are going down the financial tubes, this government will spend millions of taxpayers' dollars that should go to Agriculture and Food to fight them.

I agree that we have to save the farmers. As I showed the minister a while ago, signs have been appearing and have been prevalent in the Niagara area for several months. They are not crying wolf. Will he not look again, and instead of fighting a crass political fight, put a little common sense into it, not only in the Niagara area but across the province, and allow some severances where indeed common sense would indicate they should have them?

Hon Mr Buchanan: I think that is what I indicated a minute ago. We are interested in assisting the farmers. A targeted part of the aid package we have already announced had horticulture in there. There is a targeted part of the federal assistance package that has been announced, and we are going to Ottawa next week to ensure we get as much of that for Ontario farmers as possible. A lot of that money will eventually find its way into the tender fruit industry in the Niagara area. We very much want to save farmers and are doing as much as we can to provide the financial assistance that is necessary.

The region has had a very good track record of living within the guidelines of its own official plan. If the amendments it is proposing are not accepted by the provincial government, then my hope is that the region will continue to honour its own official plan and will not allow the severances that are put before it to go beyond the local approval stage.

INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

Mr Klopp: My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. In August he announced at the AMO conference our government's commitment to disentanglement. The municipal politicians in Huron county welcomed that. As a past councillor, I know it is something we talked about with previous governments, to try to recognize that the provincial government and the local municipalities now deal with over 100 programs. This has to be cleaned up in order to save some dollars. The minister made that announcement. Could he tell me now what further commitments there are to show that this was not just idle talk but that we are really committed and taking action? What are we doing at this time?

Hon Mr Cooke: I think one of the most important initiatives of this government is the whole issue of disentanglement. The people in this province want to know which level of government is responsible for what and pays for what so they can hold us all accountable and understand the process of government and see that we are providing government services in the province in an efficient way and are spending the taxpayers' money wisely.

Since the committee representing the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and the province of Ontario was announced a couple of months ago at the AMO convention, we have been in the process of establishing the secretariat and doing some of the impact studies within the ministry. As soon as the municipal elections are over, it is our intention, along with the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, to get on with the discussions and the implementation of disentanglement.

RESIGNATION OF COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Mr Bradley: I have a question for the Premier. I was very interested in the carefully worded clarification by the Premier on the issue of the OPP raids on opposition offices. I am going to return to that issue again, but today I am interested in the way the Premier treats my Niagara colleagues.

Yesterday the Premier denied that he had fired the member for Lincoln as the Chairman of the standing committee on finance and economic affairs for voting for his constituents rather than the government on a money bill in this House. That was the tobacco tax bill. I am looking at the committee list. If the Premier did not fire him as Chairman of that committee, then why is he no longer Chairman of that committee today?

Hon Mr Rae: I do not appoint or fire people on committees, chairmen or otherwise.

Mrs Sullivan: Watch his nose.

The Speaker: Order. The member for Halton Centre, while perhaps in a good mood, should also know that comments should be made only from where her rightful place is. The member for St Catharines is patiently waiting to place his supplementary.

Mr Bradley: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. After the member for Lincoln voted against a bill he believed would hurt his constituents, the Premier gave the member his walking papers and cut his pay by over $9,000. After the member for Welland-Thorold revealed that this government had betrayed those who voted for the NDP on the Sunday shopping issue, he was chopped from the standing committee on administration of justice.

Everyone in this House knows that the Premier and his ever-expanding personal staff call all the shots in this particular regime. What message do these two dismissals send to members of his caucus who wish to be treated as something other than subservient zombies?

Hon Mr Rae: That is an absurd comment from the member for St Catharines.

Interjections.

The Speaker: I certainly appreciate the relaxed atmosphere.

SUMMERHILL PRESS

Mrs Marland: My question is for the Minister of Culture and Communications. The minister will be familiar with the lingering problems following the decision of the Ontario Development Corp and the Ministry of Culture and Communications to give a $400,000 loan guarantee to a failing company, Summerhill Press. ODC was left with the responsibility for Summerhill's debts but managed to sell its assets to Breakwater Press.

Several authors are still owed royalties by Summerhill. While some authors may eventually have their royalties paid, the general manager of the new firm, Wayne Gilpin, has told one author that any other indebtedness to him prior to August 9, 1991, is the responsibility of the Ontario Development Corp, which took over the liabilities of Summerhill Press. This author is owed $29,000.

Given the Ontario Development Corp's apparent responsibility for the debts of Summerhill Press, does this government not feel an obligation to these authors who are owed in total about $60,000? Does the government intend to pay their royalties?

Hon Mrs Haslam: I must admit to the member that I am not totally up on all of that information but I will be glad to find out and return the information to her.

Mrs Marland: It is a very significant subject. I expected that the minister had been in the portfolio long enough that she would have been apprised of this very serious situation.

Another issue in the Summerhill sale is the authors' publishing rights. ODC sold their rights, like the rest of the firm's assets, to Breakwater. It seems very wrong for ODC to act without permission as an agent for Summerhill's authors. At least one author wants to change publishers; however, the purchaser will not release this author's rights even though it refuses to pay the royalties owed to him. The problems arising from Summerhill's sale point to the urgent need for reform, such as a requirement that publishers who are applying for a provincial loan must guarantee that authors' royalties are being honoured.

First, will the minister ask for a full investigation of the role played by her ministry and the Ontario Development Corp in the sale of Summerhill Press? Second, when will she introduce the reforms which the manager of the new Ontario Publishing Centre, Sherrill Cheda, promised seven weeks ago would be ready soon?

Hon Mrs Haslam: I am well aware that the writers are concerned about their royalties. As a matter of fact, when I announced the $5 million for the Ontario Publishing Centre, I did speak with writers at that time. However, with regard to the Ontario Development Corp, I do not have all the information on that particular issue.

When the member talks about the publishing industry, we all know two very important publishing firms went under recently, just when I came into the ministry. That is why I was very pleased to announce the $5 million.

We are looking at it. We have the papers out to both the French and English publishing firms. We have asked for input. The date is October 31. We have extended that deadline so that they can get back to us with their input on those criteria. We do hope to have the money flowing before Christmas, which is what I announced in August.

PLANT CLOSURE

Mr Farnan: My question is to the Minister of Labour and concerns dislocated Cambridge workers. The owners of Kanmet Foundries in Cambridge walked away from Cambridge Casting Centre. The workers were left without severance pay, pay in lieu of notice or statutory holiday pay. In addition, credit union money and union dues were never credited to the respective accounts. To add insult to injury, the company also failed to pay the Green Shield benefits, resulting in out-of-pocket medical expenses to the workers.

What is the status of the investigation into the wages owing those affected workers of Kanmet Foundries and why has a claim placed before the Ontario Labour Relations Board as far back as June 14 gone virtually unheeded?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: The question is a very good. One of the beauties of now having Bill 70 in place is that the workers are entitled to up to $5,000 for the severance, termination, anything that is owed in that plan.

Some of the other concerns the member has expressed are currently with the legal department in my ministry. We also have the authority, as I think the member knows, to take action, if necessary, in terms of the company and the directors of the company.

Mr Farnan: My constituents are justifiably upset. They are aware that the Burgess family, which claimed recently that it was ceasing all operations in the province, still has a corporate office in Sudbury, still owns the Sudbury Wolves of the Ontario Hockey League, still operates a warehouse plant—Saubra of Brampton—still has employees onsite at the Cambridge plant and still has traffic accessing the Cambridge plant every day as recently as today.

Why is this allowed to happen? Why is it allowed to carry on? This is especially disconcerting when this company appears to be in direct violation of the Employment Standards Act and a collective agreement. It is not taxpayers' money to pay these workers that we want; we want the company to pay the workers the money that is their due.

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I tell the member once again that this is exactly why this issue will be in the hands of our legal branch. We are aware of the responsibility and the authority we now have with the new legislation.

CONSUMER PROTECTION

Mr Phillips: My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. It flows from an answer she gave last week to one of the NDP members about making certain that when you look at contracts, you read the fine print.

A fairly large group of my constituents feel they have been defrauded and would like to know what recourse they can get through this ministry. Several months ago, after seeing an advertised offer, they agreed to a contract with a whole list of things to be done. They bought the program. Now it is several months afterwards and virtually none of what my constituents who bought this program thought was going to be delivered has been delivered. What recourse do they have through her ministry to go after someone who advertised a whole list of things and then, once the sale was made, delivered on virtually none of them? Of what assistance can the minister be to those people?

Hon Ms Churley: I suggest the member get the particulars of the case to me and my ministry and I can look into the specific case. I know we are getting a tremendous amount of these kinds of situations. I think all of us in the House are concerned about it. If he will get the information to me, I will have it looked into and get back to him.

Just on the contract, at the risk of making everybody laugh again, I am glad the honourable member raised it again, because quite often people do not read the fine print and do not see the particulars. They end up signing things and getting stung afterwards.

I thank the member for raising it and I will look into it for him.

Mr Phillips: Luckily I brought the contract along today and I plan to send it over. It is the Agenda for People. I have actually been through it and there is no fine print in it. It is all very clear. I wonder if one of the pages might deliver that. I appreciate the offer of help and I certainly will await advice from the minister on what sort of prosecution or legal action she might take to ensure that my constituents have redress done.

Hon Ms Churley: I would like to thank the member for the contract. I have to ask, I wonder if there are any contracts from members opposite that we can have a look at, read the fine print and see what happens. Just let me add again that as members know, we are soon going to be introducing the new consumer code and it will be improved. I am sure everybody in the House looks forward to the introduction of that new code. Some of these problems will be solved, but I will look into the member's case for him.

RESIGNATION OF COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Mr Sterling: I have a question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs and government House leader. Did he or his staff ask or suggest to the member for Lincoln that he resign as Chairman of the standing committee on finance and economic affairs?

Hon Mr Cooke: No.

Mr Sterling: Does the government House leader know if anyone else has suggested to the member for Lincoln that he resign? If so, who did?

Hon Mr Cooke: I think the member, of all the people in the Legislature, knows there is a process within every caucus that if there is to be any discussion at all about whether members of caucus are going to follow caucus discipline or not, it is a decision that is made within each caucus by the chief government whip or by the chief whip for the opposition parties. That is the tradition in Parliament, it has always been the tradition and it is a tradition I respect.

HUNTING AND FISHING IN ALGONQUIN PARK

Mr Drainville: The constituents of Victoria-Haliburton are rather concerned about a pamphlet that was released about a week ago. It has to do with Algonquin Park. In this pamphlet there are specific allegations made about decisions the government has made. I would like to ask the Minister of Natural Resources if he could respond in this House as regards the inflammatory and I believe inaccurate picture that is set forth.

For instance, it says in this pamphlet that all-terrain vehicles, snowmobiles and trucks will have unlimited access to the park. On top of that, it also says there will be unlimited hunting and fishing in Algonquin Park. I know, as I have sat in the House and heard responses from the government, that this is not the case, but I think it needs to be cleared up for the people of Victoria-Haliburton.

Hon Mr Wildman: This is a very important issue. The pamphlet—I have a copy of it—by the Ad Hoc Committee, RR 1, Dwight, Ontario, says in it, as the member has indicated, that there is unlimited recreational hunting and fishing and unlimited access by trucks, ATVs and snowmobiles for the Algonquins of Golden Lake in Algonquin Provincial Park. Mr Speaker, you will know, as will all members of the House, that the interim agreement with regard to hunting that was signed by the government and the Algonquins specifically gives limits to the number of deer and moose that can be hunted and taken throughout the land claim area in eastern Ontario. It also specifically limits the ancillary hunt.

Mr J. Wilson: What is the enforcement provision?

Hon Mr Wildman: If the member will allow me, I will respond to that. Perhaps he would just remain silent so I can complete what I am saying.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Wildman: The ancillary hunt says specifically that rare, endangered and threatened species will not be taken, that wolves will not be taken, that loons will not be taken. It sets out a period of the season when hunting will be allowed, sets out specific areas where hunting will be allowed and it specifically limits and prohibits the use of motorized ATVs and snow machines for hunting.

RETAIL STORE HOURS

Mrs Caplan: I have a question of serious public policy for the Premier. In the province today, on Sunday as well as every other day, people can rent and buy videos that span the whole range of entertainment and they can buy books of all kinds to read, but they cannot buy Brahms or Beethoven or an educational record. I would ask if he thinks it is consistent that you can rent a video to see and buy a book to read, but you cannot buy music, Brahms and Beethoven, to listen to.

Hon Mr Rae: I will refer that to the minister responsible for the legislation, which is now being discussed in committee; that is to say, the Solicitor General of Ontario, the member for Oshawa.

Hon Mr Pilkey: As the member can well appreciate, there are a number of exemptions under the existing legislation, which her own government brought in, Bill 113, and it did not include the use she now seeks at this late date. The government has no intention of expanding and enlarging the number of exemptions of product mixes that are in the market presently by way of exemptions for Sunday shopping. Our emphasis is with respect to a common pause day and worker protection, and is not to expand or dilute that circumstance.

Mrs Caplan: The reason I went to the Premier on this question of important public policy is that neither the Solicitor General's office nor the Attorney General's office—my constituent Mr Marty Herzog, who is the owner of a record store that sells Brahms and Beethoven, is now renting them over 15 years so that he can comply with the legislation. His concern is that he wants to be able to talk to somebody in this government. We have not asked the Solicitor General nor the Attorney General—we know they are very busy people—but we ask if their policy people would meet with Mr Herzog to discuss this important public policy issue. I wanted to appeal to the Premier to direct the policy people to meet with my constituent.

Since the Premier will not answer this question, will the Solicitor General at least direct his staff to meet with my constituent to discuss a matter of serious public policy as it relates to the ability of someone to be able to listen to music, as well as buy a book to read and rent a video to see? Will his policy people at least meet with him?

Hon Mr Pilkey: In response to the member for Oriole, the government went to many municipalities, I believe for the whole summer, receiving briefs both written and oral, and presentations. There was a full and exhaustive opportunity by the standing committee on administration of justice, including members of her own caucus who were a part of that committee, to hear those.

Mrs Caplan: So the answer is no, you won't meet with him. That is why I wanted to ask the Premier. Open government.

Hon Mr Pilkey: If this particular individual did not avail himself of that opportunity, that is regrettable. However, I would indicate to the member opposite, who is hollering across the floor in a continuous fashion about open government, that I am prepared to accede to her request and have a member of my staff meet with the gentleman in question to hear his representation.

RESIGNATION OF COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Mr Sterling: I have a question for the chief government whip, the member for Niagara South. Upon whose instruction did she remove the member for Lincoln as the Chairman of the standing committee on finance and economic affairs?

Hon Mrs Coppen: This is an internal problem within our own caucus. The member for Lincoln has said to the local news media back home that he admits to making a mistake, and because he felt it was an honourable thing to do, he resigned.

Interjections.

The Speaker: I ask the members of the House to come to order. This was just at a point where we were enjoying the greatest number of questions ever placed during question period. If members would come to order, then we could continue.

Mr Sterling: I believe a minister of the crown and the Premier and the governing party have to answer to the opposition about how they are running the government of Ontario and how they are running this Legislative Assembly. Did the government whip talk to the Premier on this matter and is she aware of conversations between the Premier and the member for Lincoln regarding his Chairmanship of this committee?

Interjections.

The Speaker: Just a minute. It appears that while a question was posed, the members of the opposition choose not to hear an answer. When the members have come to order, then there will be an opportunity to hear the response.

Hon Mrs Coppen: If I am not mistaken, a tradition of Parliament is that an internal problem within caucus is to remain with the caucus.

PETITIONS

CLOSING OF TREE NURSERIES

Mr Miclash: Mr Speaker, as you will know, I have been quite concerned about the closing of part of the Dryden tree nursery, and today I present a petition to the Legislature of Ontario which reads:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We oppose the proposed closure of the bare root section of the Dryden tree nursery due to the loss of substantial employment, the Dryden tree nursery purchase of materials and services, income dollars spent locally and the MNR local presence in Dryden."

This petition is signed by 2,128 people from a town of 6,000 people, and I too attach my signature to it.

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

Mr J. Wilson: I have the pleasure to present a petition to the Legislature of Ontario that reads as follows:

"Whereas the Queen of Canada has long been a symbol of national unity for Canadians from all walks of life and from all ethnic backgrounds; and

"Whereas the people of Canada are currently facing a constitutional crisis which could potentially result in the breakup of the federation and are in need of unifying symbols;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to restore the oath to the Queen for Ontario's police officers."

That is signed by a number of good people from the town of Stayner in my riding of Simcoe West, and I too have affixed my name to this petition.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT REFERENDUM ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR LA TENUE DE RÉFÉRENDUMS SUR LES MODIFICATIONS CONSTITUTIONNELLES

Mr Beer moved first reading of Bill 145, An Act requiring Referendums on Constitutional Amendments.

M. Beer propose la première lecture du projet de loi 145, Loi exigeant la tenue de référendums sur les modifications constitutionnelles.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Mr Beer: The purpose of the bill is to ensure that the people of Ontario have an opportunity to express their views on any proposal for constitutional amendment. Before a resolution authorizing a constitutional amendment is adopted, a province-wide referendum is required and a report setting out the results of the referendum must be tabled in the House.

CITY OF HAMILTON ACT, 1991

Mr Christopherson moved first reading of Bill Pr53, An Act respecting the City of Hamilton.

Motion agreed to.

TOWN OF WHITCHURCH-STOUFFVILLE ACT, 1991

Mr O'Connor moved first reading of Bill Pr81, An Act respecting the Town of Whitchurch-Stouffville.

Motion agreed to.

COURTS OF JUSTICE AMENDMENT ACT
(PAYMENTS TO SUPERNUMERARY JUDGES), 1991LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR LES TRIBUNAUX JUDICIAIRES
(RÉMUNERATION DES JUGES SURNUMÉRAIRES)

Mr Hampton moved first reading of Bill 146, An Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act, 1984 in respect of Payments to Supernumerary Judges.

M. Hampton propose la première lecture du projet de loi 146, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1984 sur les tribunaux judiciaires en ce qui concerne la rémunération des juges surnuméraires.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Hon Mr Hampton: This bill will withdraw the provincial government's payment of $3,000 annually to each of the judges presiding in the Ontario Court (General Division) and the Court of Appeal as of the date they choose supernumerary status. A supernumerary judge is one who has reached retirement age but chooses not to retire and continues to work part-time. Judges of the General Division and Court of Appeal are appointed and paid a salary by the federal government. When they go supernumerary, they retain their full federal status.

The $3,000 provincial payment to federal judges is now an anachronism representing compensation for services they are no longer called upon to perform such as persona designata, jurisdiction and membership on provincial boards and commissions. Only two other provinces continue to pay their judges this sum. Because we did not wish to alter unilaterally the conditions of employment of judges, we have chosen to discontinue this payment only when a judge chooses to go supernumerary. If a judge continues on full-time service until mandatory retirement at age 75, the payment will continue until retirement.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

FUEL TAX AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI DE LA TAXE
SUR LES CARBURANTS

Mr Johnson moved, on behalf of Mrs Wark-Martyn, second reading of Bill 85, An Act to amend the Fuel Tax Act, 1981.

M. Johnson propose, au nom de M^{me} Wark-Martyn, la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 85, Loi portant modification de la Loi de 1981 de la taxe sur les carburants.

Mr Johnson: This bill, An Act to amend the Fuel Tax Act, will implement tax changes contained in the Treasurer's budget of April 19, 1991. In addition, the bill is intended to counter unlawful sales of taxable motor fuels. Millions of dollars of revenue are lost annually because importers bring untaxed fuel into Ontario without declaring it for tax purposes or because of those who export untaxed fuel out of the province and then reimport it or divert it for sale to retailers in Ontario.

The amendments specify the responsibilities of collectors, importers, wholesalers and retailers to collect fuel tax. Importers, who will have to be registered, will not be required to pay tax at the Canadian border but will be required to pay the taxes upon filing their returns. This gives us greater assurance of compliance due to the bond the importer must put up to be registered. At the present time, importers who are not collectors are required to pay the tax at the border on fuel to be used in Ontario. Exporters will also need a registration certificate and will have to account for all exported fuels.

The proposed amendments will allow the detaining of vehicles to ensure that transporters and carriers are complying with the act. If a transporter or carrier fails to comply, fuel could be seized and disposed of to make certain it does not re-enter the market. The proposed amendments will increase penalties and fines for violation of the act.

In 1989, the standing committee on public accounts recommended registration and bonding of importers and exporters of diesel fuel as well as increased fines and penalties for violations of the act. I am pleased to be able to bring these measures before the Legislature today.

An information exchange on fuel tax issues among provincial, federal and state governments will complement existing anti-evasion measures and federal collection of Ontario fuel tax at border crossings. This exchange means that operator and vehicle information held by non-tax authorities such as the Ministry of Transportation will be available for registering fuel transporters.

There are also provisions in the legislation which will make it easier for a wholesaler/dealer to apply to be a collector of fuel. Previously, to be collectors, wholesalers/dealers were required to own or operate a terminal facility and to colour middle distillate fuel. By eliminating these conditions, collector status will now be available to those whose sales of middle distillate fuel are usually at wholesale level.

Improving the fuel tax compliance system by more strict regulation and penalties for non-compliance will increase provincial revenues and the Ontario taxpayer will benefit. In accordance with the Treasurer's budget, the tax on clear fuel will increase in this legislation. The proposed legislation amendments in Bill 85 are important measures in the fuels distribution network by the elimination of unfair and unlawful competition.

Mrs Y. O'Neill: I am pleased to rise today to speak to the second reading of Bill 85, the Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 1991. In his April 29 budget, the Treasurer announced a number of increases in fuel tax; I reiterate, increases in fuel tax. Increases on the tax of gas for automobiles and aviation fuels are covered in amendments to the Gasoline Tax Act, which we will likely deal with next week. Taxes on diesel fuel for trucks, trains, boats and other vehicles are covered in amendments to the Fuel Tax Amendment Act, which we are now dealing with this afternoon.

Bill 85 implements further tax increases. The new diesel fuel tax increases introduced in Bill 85 will raise over $90 million in new revenue annually. This represents an over 30% total increase. I repeat, a 30% total increase in fuel taxes for both railway locomotive and other diesel fuels initiated by a government that is interested in building bridges with business; I repeat, building bridges with business. Those two facts do not seem to go together.

The budget raised the general diesel fuel tax by 1.7 cents per litre to 12.6 cents per litre and raised the tax on diesel fuel used by railway locomotives by 0.55 cents per litre to 3.95 cents per litre, effective April 30, 1991. A further increase of the same magnitude will come into effect January 1, 1992, against much informed advice, I may say, increasing this diesel fuel tax rate to 14.3 cents per litre and the railway locomotive diesel fuel rate to 4.5 cents per litre.

These changes will make Ontario's new general tax rate the second highest in Canada. I repeat, these changes will make Ontario's new general tax rate the second highest in Canada. Is this a policy and program that will keep Ontario's industry productive and competitive? The Premier stated that his goals are productivity and competitiveness as late as September 23, 1991, right here in this very House.

I ask sincerely, is this government really going to strike another blow at an industry that is suffering, strike another blow at the transport industry, which is already in serious decline?

With this move to increase diesel fuel taxes, the NDP government again finds itself in a catch-22 situation, an anti-business situation in this case. Its mismanagement of the economy leads to unemployment and then plant closures and bankruptcies, thus lowering government revenues. To counter this loss of revenues it tries to raise more revenues by increasing taxes. This in turn forces more businesses to close, increases unemployment and leaves the government with a further revenue shortfall or overexpenditure; a nicer word, overexpenditure. This is a vicious circle of higher taxes leading to higher taxes and the ultimate victims of this policy are the Ontario business community, the Ontario workforce, and indeed each and every Ontarian.

At a time when existing railway lines are closing—we all have very personal experience of that—and the NDP government is busy jumping on the bandwagon to make automobiles environmental public enemy number one by continuing to implement higher and higher taxes on gasoline, thus attempting to change people's behaviour, how can this government justify further disincentives to the railway industry, already struggling to provide cheaper environmentally friendly intercity transportation, in a province where this service is much needed and wanted by those people who rely on the trains to take them to visit family and friends in the distant corners of Ontario, and often daily to take them to their places of employment and business activity? This tax increase will no doubt have a negative impact on the price and availability of railway travel in Ontario.

Harder hit by these increases than even the railway industry, however, and by Bill 86 in particular, are Ontario's truckers who are already feeling the pressure of increased US competition. Earlier this month, this government's own report confirmed that Ontario's trucking industry is at a competitive disadvantage with respect to its US competition. What is the response of the Treasurer and this government to this information? It is Bill 85, the Fuel Tax Amendment Act.

The Treasurer is not even going to reconsider, and he has repeated day after day in this House he will not reconsider, anything in budget 1991 that would help the competitiveness of the trucking industry by giving a trucker a break on gasoline taxes. He would rather blame the plight of the truckers on someone else. Day after day, week after week, month after month, we hear the chorus: "It's not our fault. We're doing the best we can. It's a very complex issue."

Each of us in this House knows trucking company after trucking company that is examining its future in our province. Unfortunately many and some with over 50 years of service in Ontario have already sold out. They come to the members and to me with deep regrets because they did not want to fold the family business.

Many trucking companies have driven their last mile in this province. I find that a very sad situation and I have very little to say to the people who come to me, when this government will not listen to their requests day after day to show them a symbol that they are willing to help, a very small symbol, by not implementing the second half of budget 1991 with the 1.7-cents-per-litre increase in fuel tax.

Trucking is a $5-billion industry in Ontario. For every trucker on the road in Ontario there are many other workers employed to service and repair the trucks, to load the trailers and to manufacture, sell and maintain those trucks, trailers and related parts and equipment. Members and I likely know people in that industry.

The Ontario Trucking Association estimates there are over 228,000 workers directly employed in the industry in Ontario, and that does not give any indication of indirect employment. The direct employment then is 5% of the provincial labour force. These are the jobs this government is jeopardizing with its tax policies.

Truck transportation is responsible for over 70% of our trade with the United States and anybody who has driven our highways knows that. This is an industry that must be given the tools possible to be able to compete in an international marketplace. The diesel fuel tax increases introduced in the 1991 Ontario budget can cost truckers $15 in additional tax every time they fill up their tanks. That is not an insignificant amount out of anyone's pocketbook.

The new diesel tax outlined in Bill 85 will cost independent truckers at least $4,000 a year in new taxes; I repeat, $4,000 a year in new taxes. Is this one of the Premier's and the NDP government's policies and programs to keep Ontario productive and competitive, to keep the trucking industry productive and competitive in the North American market?

When the truckers first came protesting to Queen's Park in early April, before the budget, the NDP promised to help them become more competitive. Later that same month, when the budget was introduced, the truckers brought their protest back to Queen's Park in great disappointment. We all remember what went on on Highway 401 at that time.

One of those truckers was Vernon Erb of Erb Transport. Mr Erb was unhappy about the gas tax increases introduced in the NDP budget. In an interview during the truckers' blockade, he put it squarely on the NDP's shoulders. He said, "I was surprised because the Ontario Trucking Association has been trying to get relief from taxes so we can be more competitive." Is that not a very worthy goal? But he asks whether this is the kind of result they can expect after pre-budget consultation, which they engaged in, which the Premier of this province encouraged them to do, and year after year, here they are, not being listened to.

The trucking industry is looking for specific help from Queen's Park. They engaged in the pre-consultation and they are not being listened to. They are asking again to be listened to in the second stage of the implementation of this tax; no response. They want to improve their competitiveness, but to do that they must have fuel tax cuts and sales tax exemptions.

The NDP government seems to have forgotten that it has been in office over a year now. They hold the responsibility of government. They hold the responsibility to help the trucking industry in this province compete. Yet again the NDP government has blamed every other government in North America, whether it be in Ottawa or Washington, for the problems of the trucking industry. Day after day we hear this. But it must be remembered that it was the NDP government in this province that introduced a 30% increase in the diesel fuel tax in this Bill 85, totalling 3.4 cents per litre. This is entirely a made-in-Ontario tax. This is entirely a made-at-Queen's-Park tax against an industry that is really hanging on by its fingernails.

During the truckers' blockade, the Treasurer was quoted acknowledging that the industry wants the diesel tax put on hold. He actually heard people say, "Put the diesel tax on hold." So the Treasurer has admitted that this was a made-by-the-NDP crisis. He heard but he did not listen. Rather than putting this fuel tax on hold, this government is going to increase this tax. That is hard to believe: a two-stage increase on an industry that is but barely hanging on. This tax on fuel, which will become even higher in January, will make Ontario's fuel tax the second-highest in Canada; I repeat, the second-highest in Canada. Is this going to make Ontario productive and competitive? Are these the policies the Premier feels will make this province productive and competitive? It is certainly not what we are hearing from the trucking industry, those of us who are speaking to them.

I ask if the Minister of Revenue can deny in this House that the $4,000 in new diesel tax cost facing individual truckers this year—that figure is a minimum estimation—that this really strenuous load is going to be a direct result of this government's policies? Can she deny that this $4,000 burden on individual truckers—I am not talking about major corporations; I am talking about individual truckers; I am talking about family businesses—cannot help but negatively impact our trucking industry?

In preparation for these damaging tax measures, I ask the Minister of Revenue, did she conduct any impact studies? Did she talk to truckers? Did she explain those impact studies to them? Were any studies conducted to discover just how much damage these diesel fuel tax increases would inflict on the trucking industry in Ontario?

If she did, can the minister share with the House the information she has that will tell us how many more small and large trucking firms can be expected to go bankrupt because of these tax increases? She knows and I know and every member of this House knows that this second stage of the implementation in January 1992 is going to be the breaking point for yet more truckers in this province.

I ask the minister: What new measures has this government or has her ministry initiated to offset the impact of the diesel tax increase? At first blush and certainly as of today I know of none. That too is less than encouraging.

If the minister examines these questions—I hope she will because these are questions I am being asked as I travel in the province and certainly in my own riding—she will see a clear picture that this government is a government of inaction, a government that talked a good talk in August 1990 when it promised the world to everyone in Ontario, a government which after more than a year can boast an incredible string of broken promises, as we heard in the House today. The sad part is that many of these broken promises are fiscally irresponsible policies that are going to take ages and ages to turn around.

This NDP government, which hands only further punishment to sector after sector of Ontario's economy at the worst possible time and for reasons which it does not seem worried about clearing up or explaining, continues to place hardship on industries, one of which I mentioned this afternoon.

Bill 85 is another nail in the coffin of Ontario's transportation industry, and with that unhappy note, I close.

Mr Johnson: I listened with interest to the member for Ottawa-Rideau and I think she made some attacks on our government and on this bill that quite frankly I find unjustified. I would like to remind her that when she was in government and when her government was raising taxes in Ontario, for example, it raised the tobacco tax by 222%, it raised the tax on cigarettes by 80% but, even more important, it raised the gasoline tax by 40%. Today the member stands in the House and tells us she is concerned about our increases. As a member of the government, I remind her, and I am sure she is aware, that we have choices to make. One of the choices we made with respect to revenue was to increase this tax somewhat.

How this will affect the trucking industry I think has not been mentioned correctly either. Those truckers from the United States who run through Ontario pay prorated taxes on their fuel, so they contribute by making their payments to the Treasury of Ontario by remitting their taxes. I think that is an important factor we do not want to forget. As the number of truckers from the United States increases, or if the amount of business from the United States increases, that in fact will bring in more revenues as they pay their prorated taxes to Ontario.

Mr Sola: I commend the member for Ottawa-Rideau on a well-prepared speech. I would like to emphasize what she said: that tax increases on diesel fuel will amount to 30% this year, with an added increase in January 1992, and that despite the Premier's goals of being productive and competitive, this does the opposite. It makes us unproductive and not competitive. Some $4,000 a year in new taxes is hard to take, even when things are on a roll.

For instance, the member for Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings complains about the fact that when the Liberals were in power, they raised taxes, but he must take the situation of the economy into consideration. At that time the economy was expanding. Things were on a roll. Companies were making money and could afford to pay more. That does not justify increasing taxes. The argument put forward is very hard to take.

For instance, we have had three parties in power here in the last seven years. The analogy would be that if you are loading a beast of burden and the Conservatives put on a certain part of the load and say, "That's bearable," then along come the Liberals, who put on more and say, "That's bearable," and now along comes the NDP, who say, "We have to put on as much as the Conservatives did seven years ago and as much as the Liberals did five years ago." The animal can only bear a certain burden. I think the burden this NDP government has placed on the competitive members of our economy is such that they will be broke and will either have to move out of the province or go bankrupt.

Mr Ruprecht: I too want to congratulate my colleague the member for Ottawa-Rideau for a fine presentation. What she has done is to specifically outline the problems the trucking industry is faced with. The major point I gather from the remarks is obvious: that this NDP government is not producing the kinds of legislation that will help the trucking industry. The increases in taxes can only be borne so much until the beast, as my colleague the member for Mississauga East says, goes broke.

To my colleague the member for Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings, who says it was the Liberals and previously the Conservatives who added the tax burden to our truckers, that might be the case, but he should remember one thing: He wanted to be in the seat of government. He wanted to make sure the NDP got to be on the levers of power to ensure it would make right Ontario, and whatever the opposition had done was obviously bad.

They have that opportunity now. They have total control of the budget of this province and, I might add, total control over what happens to the truckers. They cannot simply go and superimpose their ideological glasses on the trucking industry. What do they expect them to do when they go broke? It is obvious: They have to come to Queen's Park. They have to demonstrate. They have to strike. They have to get their wives, daughters and children over here and talk to the government because it has in its possession the key for the success or failure of this industry.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments? If not, the member for Ottawa-Rideau, you have two minutes.

Mrs Y. O'Neill: I find it passing strange that the only defence of this tax and this bill is that when we Liberals were in government, we passed such a bill. This NDP government was to be different. Indeed, times have changed. I used to sit in the pre-budget consultations with the present Treasurer and listen to how he said, "Oh, we must listen to this group, this group or this group," and then we would come back into this House and he would say, "You haven't listened." Now he is Treasurer, and as my colleague the member for Parkdale has just said, "Things could be different."

This time these truckers came before and after the 1991 budget. They think they have a double chance because it is a double-implementation period, but they have not been listened to. I thought there would be some response to my request, "Have there been any impact studies?" because we know times have changed. We know there is deregulation. We know there is free trade. We know cross-border shopping has picked up. The excuse I am given is, "Well, you did it in government so we're going to do it because it's a nice, comfortable source of revenue."

Companies are going out of business because they cannot pay taxes, so how are we going to increase revenues if we do not have the companies there as the base? Truckers are begging. Family businesses are failing. I have heard from them on an almost daily basis, and certainly on a weekly basis, and find it more than passing strange that no reference to that is made.

"This is just efficiency. We're going to have more revenue, folks, and it is doesn't matter where it comes from."

Mr Turnbull: This is an extremely important measure the government is taking in the sense that it has the potential for pushing truckers who are already on the verge of bankruptcy over the brink. We know the trucking industry is in serious difficulty. Indeed the Ministry of Transportation issued its own report just four weeks ago which concluded: "The Ontario truckers are at a competitive disadvantage to their US counterparts. Costs of repair, maintenance, fuel and overhead are lower in the United States."

I fail to see how the government is reacting to the problems of this industry. Indeed we know the industry is reeling from the effects of deregulation and recession. As the recession rolls along and we have less and less jobs in Ontario and less and less product is manufactured, there is less and less need for trucks to transport it. Indeed, we have excess capacity.

I fail to see how the government addresses the problem of bankruptcies, which were up by 156% in 1990 over 1989, and up by 74% in the first five months of 1991 over the same period in 1990, with this kind of measure.

As has previously been mentioned, there was extensive pre-budget consultation with the Treasurer, who was told very clearly by members of the Ontario Trucking Association that they could not afford the taxes they were paying then and that indeed they needed relief. This tax represents a 1% increase in diesel fuel, which is a substantial increase by anybody's measure.

One of the comments made about the previous speaker was the fact that the Liberals had raised taxes by some 100% during the time they were in office. I point out that the Liberals got thrown out. Indeed, we said many times in the last election that the Liberals had never met a tax they did not like. It seems incongruous that the government of the day is now reacting to comments by the Liberal Party and saying, "Well, you raised taxes." That is not the solution. The trouble we have in this province, and to a certain extent in this country, is that everybody wants to point at somebody else as being the cause of the difficulties we are having.

Fuel costs represent some 30% of the cost of operating. When the government starts increasing fuel taxes by 31%, given the fact that 30% of its total operating costs is fuel, that has a profound effect. These companies are already in a squeeze. There is overcapacity and there is a real crisis. During the roll-out of these measures the Treasurer had the audacity to suggest this was to encourage the purchase of more fuel-efficient vehicles. That is a laudable goal, but I do not know how they will pay for more fuel-efficient vehicles if they have no money and no profits. In some cases it is not just that they have no profits; they are taking substantial losses. We have already seen two very major companies go bust in Ontario. We are not going to address the fundamental problems we have in Ontario by having US truckers and out-of-province truckers transporting our goods, and that is what the effect of this is going to be.

We are in a hypercompetitive industry, and we cannot increase prices to customers. One of the problems the truckers have is with load brokers. They say, "They're bidding down our prices." That is because there is overcapacity. It is not easy to solve that problem, but the quickest fix is to at least back off on this fuel price hike.

I do not know how this government can possibly spend hundreds of millions of dollars on bailouts of Algoma and de Havilland and yet for a relatively small amount of money—it is still a big chunk of dough, but compared with the other bailouts it is small—it is just simply going to roll ahead with more taxes. On the one hand, the members opposite complain about the previous government that left the mess it is in. I have a lot of sympathy for the situation they inherited, but nevertheless we cannot fix the problems we are in now by forcing more people into bankruptcy.

Indeed the collection of fuel taxes from US truckers who come here loaded up with US fuel is a good move, but we have to have more enforcement. The government could probably get a fairly large amount of extra income if it were to have more auditors and more enforcement in the US. We have two man-years of enforcement in the US auditing and collecting those taxes that we are not getting.

Mr Mills: Get more civil servants.

Mr Turnbull: My friend the member for Durham East across the floor suggests more civil servants. This can be one of the few times that you can get civil servants to pay their own way. In fact, I would have no opposition to putting them strictly on commission, "You collect the money, you keep a percentage of it."

1600

Mr Mills: Tax collector by commission is disgusting.

Mr Turnbull: This is the problem. A member from the NDP laughs at the idea of efficient government. They simply do not understand the fact that we have to make Ontario more competitive.

The ability to pay for more fuel-efficient vehicles, as I said before, is indeed impaired by this massive increase in taxes. In the study that was issued by the Ministry of Transportation, the minister said, "Ontario-based truckers face enormous challenges due to deregulation, the recession and increased competition from the larger American carriers." He went on to say, "This government is committed"—members should please pay attention to this because this is the important point—"to assisting Ontario's transporter carriers in responding to the changing markets and increasing competition." This is a hell of a way of responding to them, by increasing their taxes.

David Bradley, the president of the Ontario Trucking Association, gave a quote in the Toronto Star in which he said, "This industry is still reeling from the first round of diesel fuel increases, and the thought of paying higher taxes in January is simply too much for many truckers."

I am absolutely flabbergasted that we are moving towards having the second-highest tax rate on fuel in the whole of Canada. By January 1, 1992, Ontario is going to share with Nova Scotia the very dubious distinction of having the second-highest fuel rate in the country. The only province which will have a higher fuel rate is Newfoundland, with 15.6 cents per litre.

The tax increases imposed by the bill are projected to raise an additional $45 million this year and $90 million in a full year. I would point out that this is substantially less than the cost of the bailout of Algoma or de Havilland. The interesting thing is that our friends across the floor always like to blame the federal government. They do not have that luxury, because the Canadian federal fuel taxes are less than the US federal fuel taxes. This is entirely an Ontario problem.

How is the Conservative Party reacting? My leader, the member for Nipissing, today announced a new program called New Directions: A Blueprint for Economic Renewal and Prosperity. Among the many recommendations are the following:

"Gasoline and fuel taxes should be immediately cut by 10%. This would benefit all sectors of the economy, including transportation, tourism and manufacturing. Combined with the reduction in the PST, these cuts would begin to address ongoing concerns and job losses associated with cross-border shopping.

"The full-year cost of a 10% gasoline tax cut would be approximately $160 million. For fuel taxes, it would be $37 million. Again, both costs are in the form of forgone revenues to the government and can be fully offset by new revenues generated by economic activity, along with expenditure controls."

Expenditure controls are of course anathema to the New Democratic Party, the new socialist party of Ontario. They only understand spending, and now they have hit the brick wall. They cannot spend any more because they know the whole burden of the debt they are piling up is such that they are just going to back up the province. If they want to have a single member left in this Legislature next time, they are going to have to start fixing the problems now.

One of the problems is that they only relate to big unions that pay money into their coffers. They do not relate to anybody in independent business. But I should point out that there are many big unions involved in the trucking industry and they are suffering too, so that might be a reason for the government to think about cutting back on its taxes.

Mr Sola: I would like to congratulate the member for York Mills for pointing out several things, but I would like to touch a little bit on the finger-pointing he was mentioning and what one ordinary member of the Canadian and Ontario public thinks, as published in a letter to the editor of the Windsor Star on October 24 of this year. It is entitled, "Ontario Suffering More Than The Other Provinces." This relates to the finger-pointing among governments.

"Well into the second year of his mandate, Premier Bob Rae has revealed much about the character of his rule. I have a strong sense of déjà vu. I reference the big changes I was expecting to see in 1984 and thereafter in Ottawa. The parallels are remarkable."

Would you believe that Merv dePendleton from Windsor sees the similarity between Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and the Premier of this province?

Later on in the letter he says:

"Ottawa lately has had a penchant for raising taxes. Remember cigarettes and the GST? The Treasurer of Ontario has been emphatic that there will be no tax breaks to anyone, border town or special circumstances notwithstanding. The provincial taxes rise on schedule for tobacco and gasoline." And I may as well add, since we are talking about Bill 85, on diesel fuel.

Towards the end, Mr Merv dePendleton says:

"Ottawa is widely viewed as having savaged the economy. Yet it is Ontario where the damage is greatest, where people are actually leaving in large numbers. Why is the rest of Canada with all its disadvantages doing better?"

That is a question the NDP government should be taking into consideration and that is a question it will have to answer.

Mr Johnson: I again listened with interest to the member for York Mills and cannot say I entirely agree with all the comments he made.

With regard to the truckers, it certainly is a concern of all of us; I have no doubt about that. We are all concerned that truckers are at a disadvantage, or at least there is the impression that they are at a disadvantage, in this province. I just wanted to share with the member that there was a report commissioned by the Ministry of Transportation which concluded that the main factors favouring US carriers are higher equipment utilization, lower unit costs for tractor-trailers and lower overhead costs. These of course are not directly related to taxes. Other material factors include repair, maintenance and cleaning costs and non-unionized-driver wages, which are higher in Ontario.

The question is asked, what are we doing for the truckers? The Treasurer is presently leading a review, prior to the 1992 budget, to see just what the problems are affecting the truckers. If additional measures are felt to be required, they will be announced by the Treasurer in due course. I might remind the member opposite as well that the Minister of Transportation did place a moratorium on trucking licences to the US—well, trucking licences in general—to make sure the problem does not get any worse. I think that is something that certainly has to be taken into consideration.

Another interesting fact is that American truckers have a better system of trucking just generally, I think, than we have here in Ontario, and they have an advantage as a result of that.

Mr Ruprecht: I want to commend the member for York Mills for producing a very interesting report. I listened to him very closely. One thing he perhaps would like to mention later on is the string of broken promises this government has made. Somewhere along this road, there has to come a stop, when these promises are being adhered to.

I remember quite clearly what my colleague the member for Ottawa-Rideau said. I think what happened here is that the Premier apparently had indicated that there would be no fuel price hikes, and the next thing we know, there is not only a minor fuel price hike, but there are major fuel price hikes.

As the member for York Mills indicated, Ontario is the province with the second-highest fuel prices in the whole country. At what point, we ask, do we become the highest in terms of fuel prices? If we do, it is obvious that not only will we not be able to be competitive with any other province, but we will be totally uncompetitive with what happens in the United States.

I would say directly to the NDP government that it obviously has the power today to maintain a trucking industry which is viable and healthy, or to ensure that another industry goes belly up. It is totally in their hands. They have to make that kind of decision. They simply cannot add a fuel tax that is already costing the operators 30% of the cost of operating their businesses.

I want to thank the member for York Mills for having produced a fine report.

Mr Villeneuve: I too want to spend my two minutes, first of all, complimenting my colleague the member for York Mills for a very good presentation. I know his riding is not located in an area where cross-border shopping is of importance, but certainly mine is. It is very interesting to note that the number one attraction for people from Ontario going to the United States is the price of fuel. The price of fuel in the town of Massena, New York, is $20 for an average fill-up of an average family-sized car. In ornwall it is $30. But a place between both New York ate and Cornwall is the Indian Akwesasne Reserve, here to fill up with gas is $16 for the exact same number litres.

Bill 85 will compound the problem of cross-border opping even more. It will be even more of an attraction r people from Ontario to go south of the border and fill o their trucks and their cars with fuel. I was on Highway 01 about 18 months ago when the truckers had a block-de at the Ontario-Quebec border. Several thousand trucks were stopped on Highway 401 and another several ousand on Highway 417, both in my riding, a situation at was caused by rising fuel costs. Bill 85 will compound at even more.

I find it interesting that this government very often ames the federal government. You know, Mr Speaker, e GST replaced a manufacturers' sales tax. I want the rmer Minister of Transportation to realize this: Truckers et their GST back. They apply to the federal government nd get their GST back. Why not set up a scale here where n the first 50,000 kilometres, a trucker pays maybe full rice, and then a reducing scale for the next 50,000 and the ext 50,000 and the next 50,000? What would be wrong ith that?

Mr Turnbull: I found it rather curious that the mem-er for Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings would sugest there was an impression that there is a problem with e trucking industry. If he would read the Ministry of ransportation's own report, it is very clear that there is a erious problem.

There are many reasons for it. Fuel tax is not the only problem; we recognize that. But fuel tax allows us to do a x at the moment so that more people do not go bankrupt.
erhaps it is the government's agenda that it wants people o go bankrupt. It is true there is excess capacity. If that is eir intent, they should be honest about it, but they should ot bring in huge increases in the fuel tax at a time when ey were told, before the budget, in the pre-budget con-ultations, that they should not, that they should actually ack off on fuel taxes; instead, they increase it twice.

The suggestion that the moratorium suggested by the IDP government is going to fix the thing is absolute nonsense. The whole problem we have is that socialists always ink of regulation. Our leader has said many times that if ey have anything that moves they tax it, and if it still moves they regulate it, and if it does not move any more en they subsidize it. That is their approach to business.
ey have to wake up. There is going to be nothing left of e province if they keep on taxing. They should not keep n pointing at other people taxing. They are wrong too. We ave to reduce taxes.

The member for Parkdale commented on the broken romises. On page 3 the House leader talks about, what about the GST? The GST is rebated to truckers, unlike eir tax.

The Deputy Speaker: The time has expired. Thank ou.

Mr Mills: It is a pleasure for me to rise in this House his afternoon and debate Bill 85, the Fuel Tax Amendment

Act, as it relates to diesel. First of all, I want to touch on the tax increase and what I feel are some pertinent points to make about that in relation to my experience as the member for Durham East. As members probably know, in the redistribution of seats, Durham East was cut up like a dog's breakfast and it made me have several centres of importance. I have a centre of importance in Port Perry, I have one in Bowmanville and I have various other locations.

When I got elected, I thought: "What am I going to do about this? How am I going to represent my constituents out there to best of my dollar ability as per the regulations we're allowed to run our constituencies by?" I decided that I would better serve the people of Durham East by having one central location with all my facilities and all my staff in that location, with the benefit of an 800 number so that people did not get into the problem of calling my office at their own expense. In addition to that, I have taken it upon myself to go out into the riding at different times during the month and rent a church hall. That way I am helping the church out with my $35 to $45 and I am also providing a service to my constituents. It so happens that last weekend I was at Manvers township on Friday afternoon or Friday evening from 4 through until 8 o'clock talking to the folks, and on Saturday I went to Port Perry and met the folks there from 1 through to 4:30.

When you let your constituents know you are in the riding, it is almost like going into a prize fight, because you have no idea what they are going to come in with and what they are going to talk about. On Saturday afternoon a gentleman came in to see me. I had no idea what was on his mind but I could see that he was a little bit agitated, to say the least, so I tried to calm him down by shaking hands and offering him a coffee or a soft drink. When he sat down, I said to him, "How can I help you?"

Mr Turnbull: What's this got to do with the fuel tax?

Mr Mills: We are coming to that.

I said to him, "How can I help you?" He said, "I'm concerned about the deficit. It's bothering me." So I said:
"It's bothering us all. What do you think we should do about it?" He said, "I think we should cut taxes for a start."
I said, "Pardon me, but what do you do for a living?" He said, "I must confess that I don't do anything."

Mr Sterling: He's probably a tax collector.

He said, "I don't do anything, Mr Mills. I am on social assistance." I said, "You come in here and you talk about the deficit and you talk about reducing taxes. Do you not realize the government I am a member of chose to support the people who were up against it by increasing the deficit so that we would be able to give you money to survive?"
He said, "I never thought about it that way," and I said,
"Those are the facts of life."

Mr J. Wilson: That's not the solution. It has been tried and tried. That's what Trudeau did for 16 years and it didn't work.

Mr Mills: Mr Speaker, I do not interrupt these members and I would appreciate it if they did not interrupt me, because I have a short—

Mr J. Wilson: Your memory is a little vague.

Mr Mills: I have a memory problem.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr Mills: We are going through this House. We are trying to raise up the level of manners and I do not think that sort of comment needs any rebuttal.

While we are talking about taxes and the self-righteous group across the road there, I always have to hit on their unique ad valorem tax which they did to diesel. They were not satisfied with the tax that was introduced at budget time. They socked it to the people every three months and added a little bit more and a little bit more. I was very amused to listen to the member for York Mills, who suggested that we return to the Roman times of tax collection and the Zachariahs et al era. That amazes me, that statement, coming from a party that claims to be Progressive Conservatives. They want to step back in a time warp to the Romans' way of harassing people so that they collect taxes on a commission. That form of collection of taxation is absolutely diabolical and unthinkable. We are in the 20th century now.

As I said last week when we debated tobacco, we live in a society that demands more and more of the elected officials in this Legislature. I do not know—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: I think you all understand the procedure. We must let him express his opinions, and after that, if you want to comment, you will do so.

Mr Ruprecht: A point of privilege, Mr Speaker—

The Deputy Speaker: You know what a point of privilege is. I will listen to it.

Mr Ruprecht: That is why I want to raise it, Mr Speaker, and I certainly appreciate your comment. If the member for Durham East, who I have listened to with great interest, will promise not to point fingers across the—

The Deputy Speaker: Please take your seat. Thank you very much. That is a waste of time.

Mr Mills: I will continue, hopefully uninterrupted. What these interruptions do is that they disturb my train of thought and I do not like that. Anyway, I am going to finish up on the point of the tax increase, because as we all know here the demands on the people in this Legislature are enormous. Personally I do not know where we should turn to satisfy the demands made on government other than through some tax increases, which those folks really became quite expert at over the years when they were in government.

I want to turn now to an important point in Bill 85 which none of the other people have ever thought of making a comment about. That refers to the provisions designed in Bill 85 to reduce the evasion of tax. I know the evasion of tax is costing the people of Ontario not a couple of hundred dollars, not a few thousand dollars, but millions and millions of dollars, and that is a fact. We have all kinds of shenanigans going on. We have trailers that are supposed to be going to the United States full of diesel fuel.

They claim the tax back and in fact the fuel never went to the United States. We have fuel that is supposed to be coloured that can be purchased in Ontario tax-exempt, which is supposed to be used here, but in fact clear fuel is loaded up and that goes across to the United States and is purported to be coloured fuel.

The evasion of tax that has gone on over the last few years is an enormous problem in this province. I can speak with considerable experience of that issue. The schemes the so-called entrepreneurs come up with to avoid paying taxes are unbelievable. You seem to be able to close off one avenue of tax evasion and another one springs up. You seem to put this person out of business and he reappears the next week with another name. Numbered companies are all over the province, and they are costing and they have cost this province millions and millions and millions of dollars. I know that from my personal experience.

This bill is addressing that concern. It is such an important concern that is being addressed that none of the other members have even thought to speak about it. That is why I am bringing it up here. This new component of the bill goes a long way to prevent the evasion of tax.

I think this legislation we are operating under now—and I knew the member for Parkdale would perk right up, because I am going to point some fingers—is an absolute shambles. When those folks were in power, they knew that this tax was absolutely uncollectable. They knew that people were finding all kinds of loopholes in it and ripping off the province and the people of Ontario by millions, so they said to themselves: "What are we going to do about this? We've got a problem here. We've got a bill. We can't collect the tax."

I remember that lovely morning when I was assigned to fan out over the province and identify all the poor, little people who were selling propane. I said, "What am I doing this for?" They said: "It's going to be a surprise. We don't want to let you know yet, but we want you to go all over the province. We want you to identify the people who sell propane. We want their names and addresses, and we're going to tax propane."

I said, "My God, I can't believe this." We had been promoting vehicles as environmentally friendly, as the member for Ottawa-Rideau complained about the trains, and then Liberal legislation directed us to go out and raise a tax roll of people who sold propane.

I remember I went into this one place and the fellow was sitting on a chair. I said to him, "Hi, how are you?" He said: "I don't like uniformed inspection people. What do you want?" I said, "I'm here to talk about your propane." He said, "What about it?" I said, "We're going to tax it." He said, "What?" I said, "We're going to tax it." He said, "I've never heard anything so preposterous in my life."

Then I said to him, "Have you got a meter?" He said, "No, I haven't got a meter." So I said, "You're going to have to pay tax on everything you buy." He said: "Just a minute. Sit down. Go over this again." I went over it with him again and I said, "Are there any questions?" He said: "No, but I've got something to tell you. You get your backside out of here in 30 seconds or else I shall attack you."

This is their approach, how they solved the diesel fuel tax. They created a monster. They could not collect it; it was impossible. It was open to all kinds of scams. So they introduced it in their wonderful way of introducing a new tax: "If we started off fresh, perhaps we could collect it."

Interjections.

Mr Mills: I bring that up in defence of the self-righteous attitude of people over there who think this government is some sort of hairy monster that is going to destroy the province, business and trucking.

I would like to talk about the effects on registration for trucks that come into Ontario from out of the province. There is a scheme that is very effective. Every truck registered outside the province of Ontario bears a sticker on the door that changes colour every year. That allows the fine and of fuel tax inspectors across Ontario to enforce the Fuel Tax Act very easily by looking at the door of the vehicle as they pass it and seeing whether the truck is registered for fuel tax in Ontario. That band of inspectors catches thousands of people trying to circumvent the Fuel Tax Act in Ontario. They are aided and abetted by all the weigh scale stations across the province required for a truck to enter, and they also enforce the Fuel Tax Act and bring in the revenue to this province.

There has been some talk about the advantages of being an American trucker, a Quebec trucker or a trucker from New Brunswick, and I can say there is none, because the Fuel Tax Act administers it two ways. You register with your sticker, and at the end of the year you are audited to see the miles you have driven in Ontario and if you bought enough gas and paid enough tax. The other way you can do it is that you can stop at the border and purchase a single trip permit. That permit is prorated at the rate of the diesel tax, and I think it works out at the moment to about five cents a kilometre from your point of entry into Ontario to your destination. To weigh out of Ontario, you pay exactly the same fuel tax as an Ontario trucker. This myth that the people from the US can come in and get a break is not true. It is a fallacy.

I would like to close, because I know some other folks would like to get on the agenda, by saying I too do not like tax increases. I find them obnoxious. Before I was elected to this Legislature, of which I am very proud, I made a number of speeches about taxation, and I always used to finish up with the line that even as you are fed up and you want to leave the country, you have to pay a departure tax at the airport.

I am no lover of taxes and I would like to see us keep a lid on them, but the fact of life is that we just cannot do that in this time of recession when we have to look after the people who, if it were not for this government, would have difficulty surviving.

We are a compassionate government. There are 50,000 children, I believe, on welfare in Ontario and I am proud to say that this government is looking after those children. We do not want children sleeping under cardboard boxes in the streets of Ontario. This is really the bottom line. You cut taxes, you cut the services, or you care for the people together. You care for the people who live in this province with us. I am proud to stand here and be part of a government that is caring for all Ontarians.

Mr J. Wilson: The member for Durham East talks a great line about social justice and wanting to help the poor. He reiterates the Treasurer's defence of the $9.7-billion deficit—and climbing—but I think the point I would like to make as respectfully as possible is that we had 16 years of socialism under Mr Trudeau. It was spend, spend, spend and tax, tax, tax. The actuaries at the time told him he was bringing in programs he could never pay for and, before every election, if members look at the history of spending during the Trudeau years, on which there are now a number of good books, they will find he increased a number of the programs and payments to individuals regardless of whether he could ever pay for them.

My father, who is about the age of the member for Durham East, a very wise man, calls that the big lie, that we lived through some 16 years of the big lie. Geoffrey Stevens, I think, in the Globe and Mail succinctly put it not too long ago when he said, "We've had about a generation and a half of Canadians grow up"—I did not think it was the member's generation but I guess it is—"believing we can get something for nothing and believing that government can spend itself rich." We are simply trying to bring some common sense back to the system, in my leader's proposals this morning, for instance, in setting a new economic direction for this province.

The government cannot spend itself rich. We and our children, the people of my age group, are going to have to pay for this government's deficit, which is just deferred taxes. We have had enough of the big lie. We have had enough of governments using the old Visa card to try and prop up the economy and to try and get cheques to individuals. The greatest dignity the government can give an individual is the opportunity for employment. Government does not create jobs, so members opposite should get that out of their noggins. Governments create the economic climate so that businesses will create jobs. The government increasing taxes and Bill 85 will do nothing to help competitiveness in Ontario.

Hon Mr Philip: I want to make a few comments based on the remarks of the previous speaker. First of all, he says that somehow he and the Conservative Party have a unique way of creating jobs and of investing. If members compare the kinds of economic policies of the Conservative Party in Saskatchewan and British Columbia and across—

The Deputy Speaker: Order. You are supposed to comment on Mr Mills's debate.

Hon Mr Philip: I am sure the member for Durham East would agree with me that if we compare the economic theories he has espoused this afternoon with those of the previous speaker, then we will see the difference, because we have had a comparison. We have a comparison with foreign investors investing in this country. Some 77% of all money from foreign investment, as Statistics Canada will tell you, has gone into one province since April 1—the province of Ontario. That is where investor confidence is.

They say we are managing the ship. Saskatchewan did not manage the ship. Of course, they are no longer in government. BC did not manage the ship; they used the kinds of economic theories the Conservative Party has asked for, and we can see where they are.

The Ontario economy has started to recover in 1991-92, with a real growth rate of 7.6%, while the rest of the country is at 4.9% increase. If we take any economic indicator, Ontario is growing faster than the next fastest-growing province, British Columbia. Who is doing the best job? Clearly, the New Democrats in Ontario are doing the best job. Every indicator in the books says we are growing faster.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Philip: The member does not like to hear that. That is why he wants to interrupt me.

Mr Sola: It is a pleasure to disagree with the member for Durham East, but even more so with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology. What we heard from the minister was nothing but a bunch of hogwash.

First of all, I agree on one point the member for Durham East made, that the $10-billion deficit not only bothers me, I find it horrific. On the other hand, when he says his government is compassionate, I must ask him to ask the taxpaying public of Ontario how compassionate it is. Then he will get an answer.

He mentioned that there is an important point on Bill 85 that the opposition members have been unwilling to comment on, that is, the evasion of taxes, which costs millions of dollars. I would like to point out that tax evasion is not prevented by additional taxation. Additional taxation fuels tax evasion, if I can use that term. It encourages tax evasion. We do not have to look at just Bill 85; we can look at the bill on tobacco.

When we find that the corner store is selling contraband cigarettes, that people smuggle in cigarettes and that organized crime finds it more profitable to deal in smuggled cigarettes than drugs, that shows taxation has gone too far. Every measure they have introduced in this budget has just added tax upon tax. Just look at cross-border shopping. It is encouraged by every tax they add.

Mr Sterling: I could not help but rise to the bait when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology stood up. For him to compare what is happening in Ontario to what is happening in Saskatchewan shows how little he understands the different economies of the two provinces.

Hon Mr Philip: I said British Columbia.

Mr Sterling: Saskatchewan is going through a painful time because of the world prices for grain and agricultural products. Its total economy is based on agriculture. We know what is happening to the farmers in Ontario and what is happening to the farmers in Saskatchewan, and that is why any government—

Hon Mr Philip: How about Quebec and BC?

Mr Sterling: Let's talk about BC. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology wanted to talk about the great election victory of the NDP out there. They got fewer votes this time than they did the last time. All that happened in BC was that the people who are against the NDP divided into two camps. That is all that happened. That is a great victory for Michael Harcourt. That is what happened there.

I really should not rise to the bait. I wanted to talk about the very sage remarks of the member for Durham East. The member for Durham East has a special knowledge of Bill 85 and Bill 86. In his previous job before becoming a member he was a fuel tax inspector, so he speaks with great knowledge with regard to these particular issues. I think there are some good parts to Bill 85, and those are the ones dealing with the enforcement of our existing regulations. What we object to is the disincentive to the trucking industry and to business in Ontario by these high diesel fuel taxes.

Mr Mills: I will be quite brief and succinct. By my nature, I refuse to subscribe to the doom and gloom from the official opposition and the third party. I will not subscribe to that doom and gloom because I am an optimist. I am sure this government is now showing a degree of compassion that will turn around to a vibrant, full, plush, business-loaded Ontario.

Interjections.

Mr Mills: I do not like that shouting. I think it is very bad manners and I do not think it should go on. I go back to that sweaty June day when all that mob were out there with their little phones and their watches glinting in the sun and complaining about the taxes. Where were all those people when the official opposition plunked that dreadful tax on propane? That was a misuse of their power. If I had had a propane vehicle, I would have encouraged everybody from here to Timbuctoo to block the highways with their Winnebagos in protest. They did not do it, but they should have done it, and those were good times.

Mr Miclash: I rise today to speak about what this tax will do to us in the northern part of the province. It is unfortunate that the minister, who is actually from the north, is not here today to hear my comments. As a matter of fact, I see no ministers from our northern area here to listen today.

When the budget came in on April 29 we found that the NDP government had brought forth this increase on diesel fuel and that it would affect trucks, trains and other vehicles. They raised the fuel tax, as the member for Ottawa-Rideau indicated, by 1.7 cents a litre to 12.6 cents. As well, they raised it on the fuel which will be used by locomotives—as members will know, a very useful transportation mode in northern Ontario—to 3.95 cents per litre. As well, this tax will again be raised. I think a lot of people do not understand that fact and a lot of my constituents do not realize we are looking at another tax increase, coming January 1.

In total, this fuel tax is being raised 30% across the board. That is a very important fact people are beginning to realize. People who use these different vehicles and sources of transportation I have mentioned are looking at a 30% increase. Only this afternoon I spoke to a resort owner in northwestern Ontario and indicated to her that other increase is coming. Of course, she expressed dismay, realizing that this was going to have a very real effect on her as an owner as she heads into the next tourist season.

Let me get back to the bread and butter issues. Let me refer to us in the north. As members will know, we are a population that depends on resource industries throughout the north. Resource industries are very important to us. When it came to bringing forth this tax, I have to wonder whether the cabinet actually sat around the table and discussed what they were doing in terms of these resource industries.

I mentioned that the Minister of Revenue herself is from northern Ontario. We have heard over and over about the six ministers we have sitting in cabinet representing northern Ontario. I really wonder whether they actually realized what they were doing in terms of our many industries throughout the north. I think of them sitting around that table and saying, "We've got to consult." I would like to know with whom they have consulted. Anybody I have spoken to regarding an increase in this taxation is saying they knew little or nothing about it until it was announced. They know little about not only what was announced in the April budget but what is coming for them in January.

I will let members in on a secret. Just recently we have found that many people throughout the north are being faced with a very difficult competition factor from Manitoba firms. I think what is happening here is we have a cabinet, a cabinet with six members from the northern Ontario area, maybe consulting with the people in Manitoba. They certainly are not consulting with my constituents.

A lot has been said about the trucking industry. The member for Ottawa-Rideau indicated that this is going to have a devastating effect on the trucking industry. The speaker has travelled the north. He is familiar with the entire province. Only yesterday I was speaking to the judges. I indicated to them that for me to go from one end of my riding to the other end is not possible by vehicle, but for me to go from one end to the other end where I can drive takes me four hours. So members can imagine what this is costing an industry that has to bring raw materials to our local manufacturing plants when we have distances that are great. A lot of these trucks that travel and bring the raw materials to our industries and take the finished products away have extensive distances to travel. When I talk to them about the increase in this taxation, an additional $1.5 per fill-up, an additional $4,000 per year, they cannot believe they have been dealt yet another blow by this government.

When the member talked about the trucking industry, he indicated it was a very important industry. It contributes $5 billion to the economy of this province each year. Again, I refer back to northern Ontario and the vital spin-offs we gain from the trucking industry. A lot of people have talked about them going broke. I must emphasize that when the trucking industry goes down, a lot of people will go down with it.

As I have often indicated, we rely wholly on our raw materials in the north, and with that is the transportation of those raw materials to our plants and the finished products away from our plants. A lot of our finished products go to the United States of America, so we have the trucking industry in northern Ontario having to compete with the industry in the United States. A number of factors have been pointed out where they are having a very difficult time in this competition. A member earlier mentioned it was another nail in the coffin for the trucking industry. I too must agree with that. The competition may become just too difficult for them at this time.

As well, Mr Speaker, you will know from travelling throughout the north and northwest that tourism is very important. As I indicated earlier, I have spoken to some of our tourist operators. Earlier this spring, I introduced to the—

Mr Callahan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I do not believe there is a quorum, nor as far as I know is the minister or the parliamentary assistant who has carriage of this bill in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): Mr Clerk, is there a quorum?

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Journals: A quorum is present, Mr Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: A quorum is present. The honourable member may resume his participation in the debate.

Mr Micalash: I go back to the point I was on in terms of tourism. In the spring, members will remember, I mentioned that the tourism industry was in a situation where it was facing a good number of burdens placed on it by this government. Finding out that another burden was going to be placed on it through this fuel tax bill, as I said about the trucking industry, it may be one more nail in the coffin for the tourism industry, finding out that it is going to be faced with a 30% increase in just diesel fuel costs alone.

When I speak about diesel fuel costs, I am talking about the plants that run their operations, run electricity for their lights, their refrigeration and their water pumps. A lot of people take these things for granted, but we must remember that in the tourism industry, we quite often have remote resorts where they depend solely on generators and diesel fuel for this. As I indicated, the additional 30% will run a tourist operator anywhere between $2,400 to $3,000 a year on the average in increased costs. That is going by the fact that presently they pay between $8,000 and $10,000 a year for their diesel fuel to run their operation.

We can see what is going to happen. We can see that the tourist operators are going to have to raise prices for the clientele coming to them. In a very difficult market, one they are facing today, they are going to have a tough time. This is just another thing to add to their difficult times.

We have often heard about the gas guzzler, and the Treasurer has spoken a good number of times about his gas guzzling tax, but I must remind a lot of the members in the House that a good number of people in the north rely on diesel fuel for their private vehicles. As members will know, we do not have the mass transportation system that a lot of southern Ontario people rely on each day. In the north, we rely on our private vehicles.

I mentioned earlier about the tourist operator. Many of his vehicles must be four-wheel drive, and in order to cut down on costs he has gone to diesel-powered four-wheel drive; not only the tourist operator, but a lot of people who provide essential services such as the doctor who has to get around in the north in a very severe climate. A lot of the members will know that I was actually stuck earlier this week in a snowstorm, as was the Minister of Northern Development. A very severe climate has already come to the north and a lot of our essential services depend on these diesel-driven vehicles. So I must emphasize that it is not only the truckers we are talking about, but vehicles that apply to other areas of the north as well.

This government sold itself to the north, saying a good number of things. As I indicated earlier, there are six ministers from the north in cabinet who should know what is happening around us in the north. I must say as I travel throughout the north, as I have done fairly extensively over the past 14 months, I find that the people across the north do not feel we are actually getting through to these cabinet ministers. I have just illustrated various areas where I do not think they gave much thought when they talked about bringing in this additional tax, which is going to affect very much those industries I have talked about.

They remember people in the last campaign saying that we would take a look at equalizing gas prices across the province, a very specific promise made by the present Minister of Northern Development and Mines. They are looking for that. Rather than getting that, all they are seeing from this government is an increase in taxes that possibly will drive them out of business and increase the hardship of people throughout the northern Ontario area.

Mr Ruprecht: I was quite impressed with the statements made by the member for Kenora, especially when he was talking about the north and how we can make this industry competitive. It is clear that the Premier said in a statement in this Legislature as late as September 23, "We try to make Ontario as competitive as we can possibly make it." This kind of increase in taxation is not going to make Ontario competitive. When we look especially at one important figure, that is, the number of bankruptcies, it is now clear that bankruptcy rates in the trucking industry are up over 156%.

To those who can figure it out, 100% means twice as many bankruptcies as the year before, and 156% obviously means more than twice the number of bankruptcies in the trucking industry as in the year previous. These rates are obviously unacceptable and there is no doubt that the promises that were being made are being broken.

I did not get a chance to address myself to the member for Durham East when he mentioned that there were some members in the NDP who also found tax increases, and his word was, obnoxious. I thought I did not hear that right. I know the member had indicated that this was a caring government, but what is more important is that he said he found tax increases obnoxious.

I would expect that he would talk to some of the ministers who are in this House. Really, we appreciate it. I see the House leader is here; I see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology is here; I see the minister responsible for car insurance is here, but what we want to see is the minister who is responsible for this bill. Where is the minister responsible for this bill? Why is she not here? Is she not supposed to be in charge? Is she not the Minister of Revenue? While on the one hand we applaud the people present, we cannot applaud the minister's absence.

Mr Johnson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The member for Parkdale mentions that the minister is absent today. I think it is appropriate—and I think it is something that is done regularly when ministers cannot be available in the House—that parliamentary assistants sit on their behalf.

The Acting Speaker: That is not a point of order, it is a point of information.

Hon Mr Philip: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The tradition of Parliament is that one does not draw attention to the absence of a particular member.

The Acting Speaker: That is not a point of order. That is also a point of information.

Mr J. Wilson: I thought the member for Kenora made a number of very good points. As the former critic for Tourism and Recreation for the Ontario PC Party, I want to back up what the member said in terms of the high cost of diesel fuel and the impact that and gasoline and cigarette and alcohol taxes have on the tourism industry, particularly in northern Ontario, in northwestern Ontario and in the border towns.

I remember visiting a border town where taxes were the number one reason why people of that community would cross the border to shop in the United States. It has been raised earlier that gasoline taxes and diesel fuel taxes contribute very negatively towards the tourism industry. As the member pointed out, particularly the cost of goods and services in the north skyrockets as these sorts of taxes go up. Because of the great distances that need to be travelled, the cost of tourism services and tourism accommodation goes up significantly.

We are having a very difficult time in that sector competing with the Americans. At one time people would go up and hunt and fish in northern Ontario and northwestern Ontario, but in the last year or so people have simply said they cannot afford Canadian prices. That is a direct result of the high taxation of this government.

I would also like to point out that the member for Kenora was part of a government that raised taxes some 33 or 34 times. I think we had a 132% increase in taxes overall. I find it somewhat ironic that he would now be complaining about taxes when his government, contrary to when we were in office some seven years ago, really sinned the greatest when it came to increasing taxes and making Ontario uncompetitive. One industry that is hurt very badly by taxes that I do not think gets enough consideration at the cabinet table is tourism and recreation.

Mr Johnson: I agree with the member for Kenora and say that the north is still suffering from the recession that was caused by the previous Liberal government and is still suffering as a result of the present PC federal government.

at we have in Canada right now. I think we cannot forget these facts.

The Canadian dollar right now is higher than it has been in recent years. This has impacted very negatively on forestry and mining in northern Ontario. The 1991 budget reflected on some of the hardships that are suffered by people in the north, especially with regard to transportation. All members are aware that we removed the registration cost for those people who have great distances to travel in the north.

Mr Sola: I too commend the member for Kenora for giving a northern perspective to the effects of this tax increase and for pointing out that a 30% increase in price in the north is especially devastating when you consider that northern areas already have the highest rates and the highest prices. The distances travelled are the greatest and the weather conditions are the most hazardous encountered anywhere in the province.

They have no alternatives. There is no TTC up north. There is no GO Transit up north. There are no alternative modes of transportation; you have to use the roads, which are not four-lane highways as they are in the south. There are no fast routes from point A to point B. The only alternative is airplane travel, which most people cannot afford. By increasing fuel taxes in an area that has no alternative but to use that fuel, the government is making things very difficult to sustain.

When the member for Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings says the dollar is at its highest and that the problem stems from Ottawa, that may be the case. But adding a tax on to the problems that Ottawa has already placed upon the north does not alleviate the problem. It just adds to the burden, makes it that much more unbearable, and makes the NDP seem to be that much less a caring government than it was when it made the promises during the election in 1990.

Mr Miclash: I would like to thank the members for their comments. First of all, I have to thank the member for Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings for giving us that $33. But I want to inform him that at the same time he raised our gasoline prices to an average of $115 per vehicle per person. That means if a person has a vehicle in northern Ontario, this government says it will take the registration of $33 and get rid of it. At the same time, it raises the price of gasoline that person is going to put into that vehicle, on an annual basis, $115. So I really cannot see any way this government can say it did something for those who live in northern Ontario.

I have said many times that we do have those greater distances. We spend a lot more money on gasoline than people would ever expect to spend here in southern Ontario and, as the member has just indicated, we do not have the luxury of public transportation and four-lane highways that they have here.

The member for Parkdale actually brought up a very good point. He said the Premier has often said he is going to try to make Ontario competitive. When we take a look at what the Premier and this government have done to make Ontario competitive, we must take a look at what they have done in northern Ontario, and I must say we have to question certain things that they have done for us. I just indicated that they gave us back $33 but took $115. How can that help us in the north?

The member for Simcoe West indicated that taxes were raised when we were in government, but as we have indicated before, we were in fairly good times. This government keeps saying it is in recessionary times. It keeps telling us that we are suffering through this heavy recession, yet it is going back and hitting the people of northern Ontario by increasing tax in areas such as we have talked about here today.

Mr Sterling: I want to indicate at the outset that both I and my party oppose this legislation. That is not surprising in view of the fact that my party has taken a very strong stance against tax increases. But before I get to the issue, I want to indicate to members the lack of co-operation which I have received from the Ministry of Revenue with regard to this legislation.

Some month and a half ago I was called to a meeting by the Ministry of Revenue along with the Liberal critic, the member for Ottawa-Rideau. We were asked to go to a meeting to explain these bills. It is a good idea to have a briefing, and I thanked the officials at that particular meeting. But at that meeting I asked several questions and was promised an answer by the officials at that meeting. I asked, "What are the fuel tax rates on diesel fuel and railway fuel in place by our federal government at the time?" I also asked, "What are the fuel rates of the surrounding American states and the federal United States government on these same commodities?" I wanted to know whether the increase in these fuel taxes was comparable or way out of whack with regard to the taxes in those states.

That was some five or six weeks ago and I have not received a response. Therefore I do not think that I can properly debate this as the Treasury and Revenue critic for my party, and I move adjournment of this debate.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member for Carleton has moved adjournment of the debate. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? I heard some negatives.

All those in favour of Mr Sterling's motion, please say "aye." All those opposed, please say "nay." In my opinion, the nays have it. The debate will continue. The honourable member for Carleton still has the floor.

1710

Mr Sterling: If the government wants these tax bills and its legislation considered in some kind of co-operative and expeditious way, the officials of the Ministry of Revenue, who are asked questions, should at least communicate to my office that they cannot answer the questions or they are unable to find the answers to my questions. That is a matter of respect to members of the opposition when in fact they are called to the minister's office to receive information.

I am very angry that I was led to believe at that time I would receive that information. Had they said, "We cannot provide that information," I would have sought that information myself. It would probably have been much more difficult for me to do that because, as you know, Mr Speaker, as opposition members we have a limited budget. I would expect that when the Minister of Revenue for this province sits down with the Treasurer and strikes a 30% increase in diesel fuel taxes on our people in this province, they would know what the taxes are in the surrounding jurisdictions.

I can only assume, because I have not received that information, that (1) it was because of neglect by the Minister of Revenue or (2) they never had that information to begin with. If we assume it was the latter, that they did not have that information to begin with, then I am very concerned about how the Treasurer and the Minister of Revenue are striking tax rates on not only gasoline but incomes, tobacco and everything else we are encountering here.

I do not believe that they can now make tax policy in isolation within the borders of our province alone. I think perhaps they could have as long ago or as short ago, if you want to put it that way, as two or three years. I believe today, however, because of the fact that the world market and the domestic market are shifting so dramatically and have shifted so dramatically over the last three, four or five years, we no longer can sit in our office here at Queen's Park in the Frost Building and say in isolation, "We are going to increase the taxes on diesel fuel by 30%," without regard to what New York state, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan and the other states which carry on trucking across the borders are charging for their diesel fuel and how much of that is made up of tax.

That is the great worry of my party with regard to all the taxes that have been introduced. We do not like taxes and we have stated unequivocally that we are against all taxes. but I have to admit that if I were sitting on that side and faced with the situation they are faced with, I would be tempted into taxation. My concern—

Hon Mr Charlton: You're starting to look like Dean Martin.

Mr Sterling: Like Dean Martin? It is not the same stuff as Dean Martin drinks, unfortunately, on Thursday afternoon. Maybe I should not say that about him. I do not know what Dean Martin has in his glass. That is drinkable water.

I will not let them knock me off my spin here. Our very great concern is what happened with regard to tobacco taxes. It invited people to break the rules. An increase in diesel fuel will invite some people to break the rules or try to break the rules more frequently. The good part of the act tries to address that particular problem. However, our greatest concern is our ability to compete, not only for the trucking industry but for those who use the trucking industry on a regular basis, our badly assaulted manufacturing sector, which is going to feel the effects of increased diesel fuel taxation.

I think it is important for the people of Ontario to know that we are talking within this one act about two diesel fuel hikes. We are talking about two railway fuel hikes as well. With regard to diesel fuel, which I think is more relevant to our competitive situation, we are talking a tax increase from 10.9 cents a litre to 14.3 cents a litre. That is a pretty hefty hike in one act and in one government.

We are indeed concerned about the overall competitiveness of our business. We have seen, however, that the actual cost of moving goods by truck in this province has decreased in the last five years. That is because of one of the very few good things that the former Liberal government did, and that was the deregulation of the trucking industry. I believe very strongly in the deregulation of the trucking industry because before it was a monopoly.

What happened within our trucking industry before was if you had a licence, you put up the prices because you had a monopoly. There were only so many truckers, there were only so many people you as a shipper could go to in order to get your goods across the country. In fact what happened in my riding, which I represented—part of which you now represent, Mr Speaker—in the county of Grenville, under the old rules you could ship goods from Prescott, Ontario, to Chicago on the American side cheaper than you could ship goods from Prescott, Ontario to Toronto, Ontario. Under the present rules there is now competition. The very basis for a licence is on safety. That is where the basis should be.

What we have seen from this government in a knee-jerk reaction to a problem that arose in the trucking industry was the attempt to reregulate the trucking industry. We are going to discuss that bill in particular a little bit later but it relates to this bill. It shows what happens when they get in trouble by taking one step and then having to react in another way in another policy area, which makes us more uncompetitive.

Because of a varied number of factors, our trucking industry has had a difficult time competing with American trucking companies. We understand that. But instead of attacking the problems and saying, "What are the factors which make our people uncompetitive?"; instead of saying to our truckers, "Let's make you more competitive with your American counterparts" by having reasonable diesel fuel taxes, by having reasonable sales taxes on what they buy, by having other reasonable taxes which they would have to pay; instead of looking at the American model and saying, "Hey, those guys can ship goods from one point to another point cheaper than we can. Why can't we do that? Why can't we match them?"; instead of doing all that, what our Minister of Transportation, who is now our Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology, did was reregulate the truck industry.

What the minister wants to do is create within our economy a monopoly of the trucking industry, so that people can say, "Okay, we can't get into this business any more, we can't transport goods any more, you can't start a business any more because there are only so many people in it," and that leads to higher prices. That is what we had before trucking was deregulated in this country and in this province.

What we have seen through these two bills that are now before this Legislature is, first, an action by the government to increase diesel fuel tax, which makes our trucking industry less competitive. What is the reaction? Create a monopoly so that prices will rise on the transportation of ods. What happens? Manufacturers who truck their goods with these people no longer can compete because they have to pay higher shipping costs among other things. What happens? We lose jobs.

So the story goes from higher diesel costs, to restricting people from getting into the trucking business, to creating a monopoly, to closing down manufacturers, to losing jobs. This tax loses good, paying jobs for the people in Ontario, paying jobs in the manufacturing sector, jobs that are very hard to recover, if it is possible to recover them at all.

My party speaks very strongly against this bill and will speak strongly against the re-regulation of the trucking industry, because we want to maintain jobs in Ontario. That is the issue in Ontario today. The creation of a tax for diesel fuel higher by some 30% in one year is going to cost us province jobs.

I want to talk a little bit about fuel taxes and fuel prices, because not only are we faced with unfair increases in fuel taxes in Ontario, but we are faced with an unfair price-ricing situation. That compounds the problem of the increases in taxes in this piece of legislation and in the next piece, Bill 86, which basically deals with the same issue but deals with gasoline.

In the city of Ottawa and in the Ottawa Valley, which you know fairly well, Mr Speaker—probably you know the valley a little better than I do now, particularly the lower part of it—we are paying, on average over the past year, 3.8 cents per litre more than they are in the greater Toronto area. No one can explain it. No one can explain why we are paying on average 3.8 cents per litre more than the people in the greater Toronto area. In fact, if you drive maybe 10 miles outside Ottawa, from time to time you can actually buy gas cheaper by maybe four or five cents a litre than you can in the city of Ottawa.

It seems the federal government has taken some steps to look at this problem, and is awfully slow in coming back with the results of the study. But this party, which complained about the high gas prices in the city of Ottawa, in eastern Ontario and in the Ottawa Valley when they were on the opposition benches, and complained and railed against the former Liberal government and complained and railed against the former Conservative government—I was part of that government—has done nothing to alleviate the discrepancy in gas prices between the Ottawa Valley and down here.

Because they only have one member east of Kingston, I suspect they really do not care. It does not really matter to them what is happening in the Ottawa Valley.

Mr Johnson: You want us to interfere?

Mr Sterling: I get from the parliamentary assistant, "Do you want to interfere in competition?" The problem is that we suspect there is no competition. There is a problem down there nobody is addressing. Everybody is sitting around on their hands and doing nothing about the tremendous discrepancy and the price that people in eastern Ontario are paying and the gouging of the people of eastern Ontario that is going on by the gasoline companies.

The people in Ottawa and the valley are fed up and are starting to take some positive action in terms of boycotts against the major oil companies until there is some fairness put back in the situation.

No one can tell me it costs 3.8 cents to transport a litre of gas from Toronto to Ottawa. You can transport a refined litre of gas probably for a fraction of one cent, maybe 0.1 or 0.2 cents per litre, from this city to Ottawa.

I think that if the Ontario government cared at all about the gas prices the people in eastern Ontario are paying, it would do something about it. It would get after the federal government and say: "Look, get this study on. We want going to find out what is happening with regard to this gouging and we're going to stop the gouging that is taking place in eastern Ontario."

I want to tell members that when we put this particular matter into committee of the whole House, it will get some longer debate because of the very late arrival of information. I have just now received it on a pink sheet. It is dated September 25. I do not know why I did not receive this until right now. I thank the parliamentary assistant for finally responding to my question. It is very difficult for me to read this information and debate it at the same time; therefore, I will sum up.

Mr Winner: You could do it.

Mr Sterling: I could do it? Probably I could. If I get enough interjections from the members of the opposition party I could probably do that.

In the United States the federal government takes six cents a litre. Our federal government takes four cents a litre. The state government takes 30 cents a litre and our provincial government takes 12.6 cents a litre. In that regard we are very competitive. I wish I had had this information and thank them for it.

With regard to New York, I am not as concerned as I was before. With regard to Michigan, we are not as good. They only take 4.5 cents a litre, whereas we take 12.6 cents a litre and that is going to go up. Ours is really 14 cents a litre when we put the two chunks into it, 4.23 cents, so we are three times as great in terms of our take in diesel fuel with regard to Michigan. Minnesota is about a third of ours as well. Well, we are like two and a half times what Minnesota does.

While we compare favourably with the state of New York, we do not compare favourably with Michigan and Minnesota. That is important information for me to have when I am talking about these taxes. I do not know whether the cumulative effect of other taxes on diesel fuel in New York state or the fact that we have a greater amount of trade with Michigan and perhaps more traffic moving through Michigan means that we should be more concerned about Michigan than perhaps New York state. At any rate, I thank the parliamentary assistant very much for that information, which I requested some time ago. It probably was an oversight that it was not given to me prior to this time.

Anyway, I want to sum up because I have just been offered a financial incentive to do so. I want to indicate that we are adamantly against this piece of legislation because it does increase taxes when our truckers and our manufacturers are having a tough time competing. It is one way we could make them more competitive.

Mr Johnson: I regret that the member for Carleton did not receive the information he requested. I did receive it and I believed he had received it as well, but obviously that did not happen. He has that information now.

The member mentioned that there was some gouging maybe or that there is great fluctuation in the price of gasoline. We are not dealing with gasoline; we are dealing with fuel tax, Bill 85. Nevertheless, I just want to remind the member that it is the federal government that looks into this; it is not the provincial government. We cannot regulate the prices of commodities. It has something to do with the national energy policy, as I understand it. I just want to let him know that I can buy gasoline in Toronto for almost 10 cents a litre less than I can buy it in my own home town of Cherry Valley.

I also want to remind the member for Carleton that in no way does this fuel tax increase make the trucking industry in Ontario any less competitive, because truckers from out of province, whether they be from the United States or from other provinces in Canada, pay the tax. It is prorated according to the amount of travelling they do in the province, so this tax revenue actually comes to the province of Ontario and is paid equally by our truckers and by truckers coming into the province. That does not make us any less competitive.

The member for Carleton has already agreed that the relationship in tax rates to some of the states nearby is not as great as was previously thought, I believe, and I am glad he has this information now.

Mr Ruprecht: I enjoyed the remarks by the member for Carleton, especially his metaphor on the knee-jerk reaction. This government is obviously looking around for some revenues to raise and it has found a cash cow. Obviously they are saying: "Where do we get the money to pay our bills, because we're broke? Let's raise taxes in terms of the diesel fuel for all kinds and modes of transportation."

Obviously by raising taxes, they are driving other people out of work. Many bankruptcies—a 156% increase, as I mentioned earlier—have occurred. Consequently they are caught up in a vicious cycle: higher taxes, lower employment, bankruptcies. That is the cycle they are in, and it is obvious.

On January 1, 1992, we are going to be hit, especially the trucking industry, with a 14.3-cents-per-litre increase. This kind of an increase obviously is unacceptable. Why is it unacceptable? Because directly affected will be a number of people who are working for the trucking industry. The Ontario Trucking Association tells us today that there are 228,000 workers directly employed by the trucking industry. Higher taxes making the whole industry less competitive will obviously affect the whole industry and the infrastructure that is keeping Ontario, at least at this point, still somewhat operating.

I am not admitting that it is competitive, because it is not. What they are doing with these kinds of increases, especially as they affect the trucking industry, is closing down shop for many people. The effects are devastating because the Ontario Trucking Association says the jobs of 228,000 people are directly affected. I am not saying all of them are going to be bankrupt, but some will lose their jobs.

Mr J. Wilson: I take objection to the parliamentary assistant, the member for Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings, who took objection to the member for Carleton comment that the trucking industry is less competitive as a result of Bill 85. It is true that the trucking industry will be less competitive.

The government tells us, "We also force Americans to pay the tax to the Treasury of Ontario, so therefore it is a level playing field with regard to this tax," but the point is that the Ontario truckers object to this tax; they tell us it will make them less competitive. Trucking industry costs are anywhere from 15% to 20% higher in Canada than in the United States.

The point the government must understand is that this is an ugly spiral. If trucking costs are high in Canada, that raises shelf prices. It raises the price of tires that truckers need for their trucks, all the input costs required, because there is a tax all the way along the system. Anywhere you put a tax in the system, if you are delivering the product, your increased taxes add to the shelf price of those goods. Truckers who buy supplies in Canada very clearly tell us that their inputs are some 15% to 20% higher in Canada than in the United States. It is an ugly spiral. To say that in one specific area, with regard to diesel fuel, Americans and Ontarians are relatively on par is untrue, because that diesel fuel tax works its way through the consumer chain and through the economy and affects shelf prices and input costs of truckers on items they need to run their businesses. We know they are uncompetitive; they tell us that themselves, and I do not deny the word of the truckers.

Mr Sterling: I want to respond and thank the members for speaking to my comments with regard to Bill 85. I just want to say in wrapping up that someone informed me that they were flashing "Bill 86" on the TV screen. That one is a bill dealing with diesel fuel and railway fuel, and Bill 86 is gasoline. That is the next one we will probably talk about in terms of these bills.

At any rate, in responding to the parliamentary assistant, I want to also emphasize, as the member for Simcoe West has just pointed out, that to say that because American truckers who are here have to pay the same diesel fuel as Ontario truckers makes us equal and therefore there is no competitive downside to it is a fallacy. It does not matter who is hauling the goods; the price of hauling those goods is going to be increased because the taxes have been increased. Therefore this is an item which makes it more difficult for our manufacturers to compete, and we will lose some jobs as a result of those manufacturers not being able to compete. It is not a question of just saying the Americans versus the Canadians in terms of which trucker is here.

There is another factor too, though. Because most of the Ontario truckers would operate more frequently here in tario, there is a tremendous cash-flow problem with regard to paying higher fuel taxes, even though the Americans may have to pay the same.

The final thing I would say to the parliamentary assistant is that Cherry Valley cannot quite be compared to Carleton Place in terms of size.

Mr Winninger: I am certainly pleased to engage in debate with my friends on the opposite side of the House and perhaps to refute some of the incorrect assertions that have been made from time to time during the earlier debate.

I suggest that this tax is in line with fuel increases in other provinces. At the present time our rate of 12.6 cents is matched by that of Quebec, a comparable economy to that of Ontario. So we are tied, as it were, for the fourth-highest rate across Canada, after Newfoundland, with 15.6 cents, Nova Scotia with 14.3 cents and New Brunswick with 13.7 cents.

I have heard the member for Carleton indicate that his party is opposed to all taxes, and especially the fuel tax. I take with interest that the member for Carleton was a very distinguished member of the government in 1981, when the diesel and railway fuel taxes were increased not once in a year, but four times in a year. In 1981, the diesel tax was increased four times. In 1982 again, four times in a year the diesel tax was increased. In 1983—my friend is still a distinguished member in the government at that time—the diesel tax was again increased four times. In 1984 the record improved a bit; they only increased it three times in 1984.

Let me tell you, Mr Speaker, and by that time I believe you were also a member of that distinguished government, in 1984 the tax was up to 9.3 cents a litre. What was it in 1981? It was only 5.9 cents a litre. So the third party, while in government, virtually doubled the tax. It ill behoves the member for Carleton to lecture this government on tax increases when they increased it on a quarterly basis.

I tell the member for Carleton that I can sympathize with the position of his government at the time. They too were facing a recession in the early 1980s. They too needed cash to fund their programs, similar to what our government's needs are now. However, our government's needs are more acute, because the recession we are facing now is the worst recession we have seen since the Depression—nothing compared to the recession my friend and his government faced in the early 1980s, when companies had a struggle, but at least they could recover from the recession and resume operations. If anything, this recession has caused many companies to close down on a permanent basis, and I attribute that to the federal colleagues of the third party.

I would like to go on to mention that the record of the opposition was not much better, because from 1985 until 1990 the diesel tax was increased on an annual basis. I could point out that one of the major reasons, and I believe my colleagues have also emphasized this, is the fact that federal government deregulation of the trucking industry is really the main villain in this scenario. It is not a modest increase in the diesel fuel tax; it is deregulation, too much competition, too many American companies entering the market in Ontario and driving down the revenues of our own domestic trucking industry.

A recent issue of the Globe and Mail Report on Business magazine, which I am sure my friends on the opposite side have perused, has indicated that if our dollar were capped at 85 cents US, the cost of doing business in the trucking industry would be exactly the same in the United States for American truckers as it is for our own domestic truckers. I think that ought to be remembered.

Certainly our government has taken active steps in easing the plight of Ontario truckers by reducing the number of licences issued. This is one way it is within our jurisdiction to deal with a situation that was created by the federal government and by those inimical economic policies that can only do great damage to the trucking industry. It is not a modest increase in the diesel fuel tax; it is macroeconomic policies at the federal level that have done great harm to this industry.

In conclusion, I think that the member of the third party ought to remember the kinds of increases his government had to introduce during a very difficult economic time during the 1980s, and certainly now, in one of the worst recessions a government of Ontario has ever faced, in order to maintain and improve the progressive programs this government's agenda is dedicated to, modest increases of this kind have to be condoned. I think the taxpayers are prepared to support the government, knowing the benefits that flow from these kinds of modest increases.

Mr Sterling: I got a kick out of the member's remarks. He said from 1981 to 1985 the former government which I was a part of—the member baited me and I am taking the bait; I should not take the bait, but I am taking the bait—over four years we increased the gas tax by four cents, and because we did it in seven hits—seven times we increased the taxes over four years—he is complaining. But the real fact of the matter is we increased it four cents over four years.

What do we have in this government? A government that is increasing the tax by 3.4 cents in one year; 3.4 to 1 is the ratio of what they are doing with regard to the diesel—

Hon Mr Allen: Allowing for inflation, one and a half cents.

Mr Sterling: Okay. I will allow a little bit for inflation. I will give him 2.5 to 1 in terms of what they are doing as opposed to what we did over the four years. I do not like an increase in any taxes at all.

I might add that at that time our businesses in this province had many other tax advantages over other businesses. At that time our businesses in Ontario had a 10% advantage over businesses in Quebec in terms of corporate income taxes, and now we are operating at a negative. That has happened over the last five or six years since you and I were on the governing side, Mr Speaker. So there are a lot of other taxes which come into play, not only diesel taxes and all the rest of it.

I only can say to the member, why does he want to argue for an 85-cent dollar? This works against the poor and disadvantaged who have limited incomes, fixed incomes and cannot stretch their dollars further, by lowering the value of the dollar.

Mr J. Wilson: I would pick up on what my honourable colleague has just said and respond to the member for London South, who talks about the federal government's macroeconomic policies. Being a member of the third party, I have the opportunity to sit back and look at both what the federal government is doing and what the provincial government is doing. I just ask the member for London South, if he does not like the federal government's macroeconomic policies—and I would agree with him; I do not necessarily like them either—why is his government repeating the mistakes of the federal government? Why is the NDP government insisting on such a high deficit? Why are they borrowing money from foreigners, which up until recently was driving up our interest rates and certainly is keeping the dollar high?

This is a party that did not believe in foreign ownership, but the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology told us about an hour ago in this House that he is proud of the amount of foreign investment that has come into Ontario. It just makes me cry to think that the NDP candidate in Simcoe West must have misread his briefing notes during the last election, because he kept talking about how, "The foreigners own everything and we have to have Canadian companies and taxes have nothing to do with our competitiveness."

The Treasurer goes out every month and borrows billions of dollars from the Japanese—it was from the two Germanies, but they have withdrawn their money because of reunification and that is pushing up the dollar—and from Wall Street, from New York. They talk about foreign ownership being bad at one time and now it is good, I would say because of the macroeconomic policies of the federal government, which have this country open for business.

They cannot have it both ways. They cannot lecture us about foreign ownership and investment on the campaign trail and then try and use recent statistics here that show that foreign ownership and investment are good, whereas before they thought they were bad. I would be interested to know where they stand now on foreign ownership.

Hon Mr Philip: The honourable member talks about having it both ways. If you look at the competitiveness paper that was released by the federal government, that is having it both ways. They talk about the need to lower the deficit, yet this party, in its so-called competitiveness study today, talks about decreasing taxes, which of course only adds to the deficit they are trying to talk about.

The Acting Speaker: I want to remind the honourable minister to address the member for London South's comments.

Hon Mr Philip: The member for London South was fairly correct when he said that—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

1750

Hon Mr Philip: The honourable opposition member do not like to have the government tell the truth to the public.

Mr Sterling: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The member is misleading the House.

The Acting Speaker: That I cannot accept. The honourable member for Carleton, please withdraw those remarks.

Mr Sterling: I will withdraw those remarks.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, and that was not a point of order.

Hon Mr Philip: What is really misleading is the kind of government that would say, as the Mulroney government has done in its competitiveness paper, that one of the roads to economic prosperity is to increase research. When one looks at what it has done, the federal government's spending on research and development has dropped from 0.45% of the gross domestic product in 1986 to 0.39% in 1989. Ontario's research and development spending has increased in real terms 100% between 1986 and 1990.

Having it both ways then is for the federal Conservative government to say one thing and do exactly the opposite. That is exactly what the provincial Conservative governments have done in British Columbia and Saskatchewan. They are both out of power now because their economic policies do not work and they do not create jobs. That is why Ontario is attracting investment which the other provinces cannot attract and which the other provinces would love to attract.

Mr Winner: The member for Etobicoke-Rexdale is perfectly correct. The federal policies have forced the government to take corrective action, and what corrective action has the government taken? As the members opposite well know, 250,000 jobs have been lost as a result of this recession. Housing and car sales are down. It was incumbent upon this government to help replace some of those jobs lost as a result of federal policies: the high interest rate, the high dollar, the GST and the free trade agreement.

In response, jobs were created through an anti-recession fund and public spending was used to help ease us out of this recession. Certainly a number of illustrious economists have supported that approach to dealing with recession. Certainly the wage protection fund to protect laid-off workers costs money. Taking 120,000 low-income earners off the tax roll costs money. All these things may contribute to the deficit, but in the long run they put more money in the hands of taxpayers who have jobs created for them or low-income earners who cannot afford to pay the kind of taxes the federal government may demand from them.

Certainly the federal government capping the transfer payments has called for a lot more money to be spent by the province on health, education, social services and municipal government. These things cost money. When my friend across the House asks why we are emulating the federal government by increasing our deficit, certainly we can show a lot more positive economic consequences.

owing from our fiscal policy than the federal government can show for all its $400 billion of deficit.

Mr Phillips: I am pleased to join the debate on the bill. I think there is, rightly so, a lot of focus on the job aspect of this. If we look at the various sectors that are feeling the most pinch in terms of job losses, and as I look at agriculture, manufacturing, construction, transportation, trade and finance, it is actually the transportation sector in this province that has seen the most significant decline in jobs. It is down over the last two years by around 15%. There is no question but that it is struggling more than any other sector.

There is no question also that right now, to add to its problems by putting up a major cost component of its business is just the final straw for it. All of us appreciate this is not the only problem it has, but if you are running one of those businesses right now and you are faced with another blow, it can very well be the straw that breaks the camel's back.

I accept that firms that come into Ontario from across the border and attempt to ship here—we have a way of charging them the same price. But as the member for Carleton quite correctly pointed out, and this is an important point for all of us to realize, I do not think there is a manufacturing operation in Ontario that is not right now doing its analysis on where it wants to be for the future. I do not think, if we go and see the manufacturing operations in any of our ridings, they are not doing or have not already done the analysis of where they are going in the future. Any manufacturing operation worth its salt has an awful lot of capital investment to keep its equipment and its technology up to date, and as it looks at those investments it says, "Where do I want those investments to be?"

As the member for Carleton said, transportation is a major component for all our manufacturing sector. If they look at the analysis of their costs down the road and where they are going to be, yes, a US trucker coming in here is going to have to pay the same fuel, but that is not the issue any longer. The issue is, "Where are my costs of transportation going to be the most effective?"

At this particular time, if you are looking at things we should be doing, the Treasurer should be saying, "How do we stimulate the economy?" After all, as you know, the Treasurer spent $7 billion, I think it was, of his budget on job creation or job retention. But here we are taking one of our most vibrant sectors, one of our most important industries—we are not creating jobs with this, we are not using the $7 billion the Treasurer has allocated for jobs, we are giving jobs out.

The point I would like to emphasize is that our manufacturing sector is looking right now at where it wants to be for the future, where it is going to survive in the future.

There is no manufacturing operation in this province of which transportation is not an important element, and here they look at a 30% increase in fuel costs over the next few months. We cannot deny that this is going to be a significant issue for our transportation sector. I repeat, I am not saying this is the only problem facing our transportation sector; that is nonsense, there are lots of problems facing it. But any of us who have been in business—and I guess in one way or another virtually all of us have at one point in our careers—will appreciate that for an average business looking at perhaps another $4,000 cost, it can be extremely significant.

I guess what surprises our transportation sector is that the election took place about a year ago and there was an NDP plan at the time for managing the economy. If we look at the various tax considerations they were looking at, diesel fuel certainly was not one of them. They were looking at minimum corporate tax and other things, but it was not fuel they expected to see.

I see you are getting a little anxious, Mr Speaker, and seeing that it is almost 6 of the clock, perhaps I should move adjournment of the debate.

The Acting Speaker: That is not necessary, but the honourable member for Scarborough-Agincourt will have the floor when we next debate Bill 85. I would now like to call on the honourable government House leader for our schedule for next week.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon Mr Cooke: Pursuant to standing order 53, I would like to indicate the business of the House for the coming week.

On Monday, November 4, we will begin second reading of Bill 126, the Electronic Registration Act, Bill 131, the Fire Marshals Amendment Act, and Bill 135, the Ontario Medical Association Dues Act.

On Tuesday, November 5, we will deal with second reading of Bill 76, the Fraudulent Debtors Arrest Repeal Act, Bill 75, the Law Society Amendment Act, and Bill 42, the Arbitration Act.

On Wednesday, November 6, we will resume the adjourned second-reading debate of Bill 85, the Fuel Tax Amendment Act.

On Thursday, November 7, in the morning, we will deal with private members' business ballot item 43, standing in the name of the member for Lincoln, and number 44 standing in the name of the member for Nepean. In the afternoon, we will continue the second-reading debate on Bill 85, followed by Bill 86, the Gasoline Tax Amendment Act.

The House adjourned at 1800.

Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Table des matières

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition. Téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au (416) 325-7400.

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi qu'à celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1 et page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON ELECTION FINANCES

The Speaker: I beg to inform the House I have today laid upon the table the 16th annual report of the Commission on Election Finances for the year 1990.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

APICULTURE INSPECTION

Mrs Fawcett: In trying to keep runaway spending camouflaged, the Premier's government is again sending the wrong message to a segment of the agricultural industry, namely, the Ontario beekeepers. In what is termed by some to be a cost-saving measure, the Minister of Agriculture and Food has terminated provincial bee inspectors. Furthermore, the apiculture inspection program will be cut by 10% each year for the next four years, just at a crucial time, when the honey bee tracheal mite, varroa mite and africanized killer bees are threatening the industry.

Fred Lewis, a bee inspector for 40 years, came into my office with Bill Cherry, who is also a member of the Ontario Beekeepers' Association. They explained to me how, over the past years, many people have worked diligently to keep the province clean of diseases that have wiped out hives in the United States. When hives become infected, inspectors order all bees to be destroyed and records are kept so that controls are maintained.

Now, with the cutbacks the ministry is planning, the 100% to 80% losses the US beekeepers are experiencing will soon spread to Ontario.

As always with agriculture, there is a devastating side-effect. Bee shortage equals pollination shortage equals fruit and vegetable shortage. For Northumberland, the heart of apple country, members can imagine the devastation that could happen, to say nothing of all other crops that depend on pollination by bees. In Ontario that is $65 million worth of agricultural crops.

I ask the minister to please reconsider this decision, reinstate the bee inspectors and allow the province to maintain a clean beekeeping industry.

MIGRAINE AWARENESS MONTH

Mr J. Wilson: I would like to remind all members of the Legislature that November is Migraine Awareness Month in Ontario and across Canada.

The purpose of this month is to raise awareness for a debilitating medical disorder that is often misunderstood by the public at large. Almost 3.2 million Canadians over the age of 15 suffer from some form of migraine, and some 77% of migraine sufferers have to restrict their normal daily activities because of an attack. The economic impact of this medical disorder is profound. The occurrence of migraine in Canada results in an annual workplace productivity loss of almost $500 million, and almost four million workdays a year in Canada are shortened or lost because of this disorder.

While the exact cause of what triggers a migraine is still being debated, we do know no universally effective medication is available for migraine. There is a tremendous need for effective treatment and enhanced understanding of this serious medical disorder. It is essential that we assist migraine sufferers so they can regain control over their lives and recognize exactly what triggers their attacks.

I would urge all members to assist the Migraine Foundation to raise awareness for this seriously misunderstood health problem. During Migraine Awareness Month, the Migraine Foundation will be holding numerous education activities and seminars to promote awareness of migraine. Their goal is to produce a greater level of sensitivity and appreciation of the impact these attacks have on its sufferers, their families and society as a whole.

NATIONAL 4-H WEEK

Mrs MacKinnon: The 4-H program has had its roots in Canada since 1913 and in the county of Lambton for some 76 years. Originally potato, livestock, sewing, food and gardening clubs were formed by young people and the clubs were known as Boys and Girls Clubs until 1952, when the name "4-H" was adopted. The four Hs stand for head, heart, hands and health; 4-H is worldwide and here in Ontario we have 22,000 4-H members and over 60,000 in Canada. This is part of the seven million 4-Hers in 80 different countries around the world.

The 4-H motto, "Learn to do by doing," means these young people, aged 12 to 21, learn by listening, studying, seeing and most important, by actually doing. Leaders and parents, all volunteers, assist but members practise the skills taught to them, such as self-confidence, responsibility, leadership and communication. "Learn to do by doing" means not having to sit on the sidelines, but rather hands-on participation.

In recognition of National 4-H Week, November 4 through November 10, I say to all the pledge of the 4-H program:

My head to clearer thinking

My heart to greater loyalty

My hands to larger service

My health to better living

For my club, my community and my country.

ISAAC AKANDE

Mr Curling: On Friday, November 1, the community paid tribute to Dr Isaac Akande, an individual who has been extremely active in the African and black community in our province.

Dr Akande had been known as an individual who is a community stalwart, a very compassionate man, a very caring and devoted individual. There were individuals there who have been so moved by the work Dr Akande has been doing in this country over the last 26 years that he has become a role model for us all. As he stayed in his hospital bed and took the accolades with such comfort and in such a caring way, people were moved that he continued to give leadership in our community.

Dr Akande, who as members know has been in the papers a couple of days, died last night in his home, leaving his wife and three children. We know the community will miss him. We know that what he has left is a legacy that will be continued for years as a role model not only to the black community, not only to the African community, but to us all in this province.

AGRICULTURAL LAND

Mr B. Murdoch: Last Thursday, the Minister of Agriculture and Food stood in this House and announced that he did not care that the region of Niagara had decided to allow limited farm severances because he was going to send each and every request to the Ontario Municipal Board, whether anyone liked it or not.

I guess we can be grateful that this announcement was made in the House, because the Minister of Agriculture and Food is finally putting into words what the ministries of Municipal Affairs, Natural Resources and the Environment have been doing for some time, at least in Grey. He has finally articulated this government's policy of shunting problems off to the OMB instead of facing them and dealing with them.

As an example of the NDP's refusal to consult with the people, I can tell members that Grey has been trying for more than a year to amend its official plan. Rather than deal with the amendment, the ministry chooses to send each case individually to the OMB.

One would wonder how much the OMB can bear. The present backlog is 18 months but, as this government continues to evade and ignore the people by hiding behind the OMB, I can only imagine the bureaucratic mess in which we will all find ourselves.

When will this government learn that local councils understand local situations far better than any bureaucrat from another area of the province? To ignore problems by sending them off to the OMB is senseless. If the government would back off and meet with the people, it would save thousands of dollars on hearings which could be used to aid farmers or assist municipalities and further provincial-local goodwill.

If the OMB fails to do what the government wants but cannot bring itself to do, who will do it for it, the OPP?

HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS

Mr O'Connor: In times of frustration and feelings of hopelessness, there are signs of renewed faith emanating from my riding.

Last spring, I requested that the high schools in my riding send me names of two outstanding students. Since then, I have come to know a little bit about these students and how important they are to their schools and their communities.

In Sutton, Alison Armitage and Tammy Holtrop were described by the teaching staff as people who have shown leadership. They have always been there when needed and have worked behind the scenes.

In Stouffville, Todd Snooks and Lianne Nichols were both very involved in all aspects of school life. They have dedicated their time to athletics and the Bar and Letter, an achievement program.

In Uxbridge, Amy Barton and Cathy Krasnik have been involved as outstanding students in their own way. Amy has been involved with athletics and student government and has distinguished herself as an Ontario scholar. Cathy spends her time in academics, studying and being the one with the highest marks.

Two weeks ago, Rhonda Richards, a student from Sutton High School, one of the high schools in my riding, came to see me. She was talking about reviewing Canada's future. She was part of a group that discussed this.

We often have an image of today's youth being tired of constitutional debate, yet I found young people concerned about their country and with a willingness to work toward solutions.

ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF BRANT-HALDIMAND

Mr Bradley: The people of the riding of Brant-Haldimand have been without representation since last July 31. The office of my leader has generously provided staff and a 1-800 telephone line to the people of the riding who need assistance in dealing with this government, but we all know that is no replacement for the day-to-day hands-on work and advocacy of an MPP.

The Premier was informed last June of the previous member's intention to resign. He could have put in place at that time the mechanisms for an expeditious and responsible by-election call. Instead, he has dithered. Rather than attend to the people of Brant-Haldimand's practical need for representation, he has ignored their democratic rights and sent his NDP mercenaries to British Columbia and Saskatchewan to prop up NDP election efforts in those two jurisdictions.

I want to remind the Premier that today, Monday November 4, represents his last opportunity to call the by-election prior to Christmas. Failure to do so will result in an unnecessary and irresponsible delay, an election in the dead of winter, possibly inclement weather and ultimately the possible denial of the opportunity and the right of many seniors and others to cast their ballot.

I urge the Premier to stop playing games with the people of Brant-Haldimand. He should call this by-election now and let the democratic rights of the people of Brant-Haldimand prevail.

HEALTH INSURANCE

Mr Jackson: The Ministry of Health has gone on record as telling out-of-country travellers in Ontario that it has some good news for them and some bad news. The good news is that in August the ministry said its updated Guide to Ontario Health Insurance booklet would be available in a matter of weeks. The bad news is that, despite the fact that there are a number of changes in OHIP coverage, fective October 1, we are still looking at several months before the 31-page booklet can be revised, published and distributed.

The Minister of Health, however, was anything but slow when she went ahead and cut the amount of OHIP coverage that seniors and other travellers would be eligible for this winter. There has also been a rapid succession of ministry newspaper ads and press releases telling travellers they should obtain extra health coverage before leaving Ontario.

When it came to announcing its out-of-country health insurance, the private sector, on the other hand, has been up and running. Ontario Blue Cross revised its plan as of September. The Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association has already updated its booklet, Health Insurance for Travellers, which is now available to consumers.

Thousands of Ontario senior citizens and others who plan to travel out of country this winter have no way of accessing the important government health insurance information they need in time to make the necessary arrangements to protect themselves and their families during these trips. This NDP Health minister has once again demonstrated that the bad news is that there is never any good news for Ontario seniors, who have no place on the premier's list of priorities.

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION

Mr Farnan: I would like to inform the members of the House about an exciting and innovative project that has been launched in Cambridge: the Canadian Organization for the Preservation and Protection of Environmental Resources. The COPPER Trust Foundation was formally established in 1989 and plans to build an environmental education and innovation centre. The centre will have interactive displays, a conference centre, an environmental resource centre, an audit panel and research facility and a separately sponsored trade fair.

I would like to recognize Ronald Blaxley, Fred McGarry, Wayne Joslin, Carl Furtado, Vern Heaslip, Walter Pitman, Mac Coutts, Bonnie Walter, Ron Smith, Charles Cipolla, Sally Thorsen and Chuck Yates for taking leadership roles in this project.

Support is being drawn from all levels of government. The city of Cambridge has shown its commitment by reserving 21 acres of land on Highway 401 at Townline Road pending feasibility of the project.

Currently the COPPER Trust Foundation is encouraging individuals and groups to donate those unrolled pennies that most of us collect in jars and dresser drawers to demonstrate our conviction and mobilize support from senior levels of government and the commercial sector. I would encourage all Cambridge residents—indeed, I would encourage all Ontario residents—to participate in this effort and thus demonstrate our concern for environmental issues.

VISITOR

The Speaker: I invite all members to welcome to our midst this afternoon, seated in the members' gallery east, a member of the Alberta Legislative Assembly, Mr Jerry Doyle. Welcome.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

NORTHERN ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT DÉVELOPPEMENT DU NORD DE L'ONTARIO

Hon Miss Martel: I am pleased to make this statement today on behalf of the Ministry of Northern Development and Mines, the Treasurer, the Minister of Natural Resources and the Minister of Tourism and Recreation, as well as our counterparts at the federal level.

This morning in Sudbury, the northern Ontario development agreement—NODA for short—was signed by the governments of Canada and Ontario. NODA will invest a total of $95 million in the northern economy and will help renew three key northern industries: forestry, mining and tourism. These industries have provided thousands of jobs for northerners and continue to contribute enormously to Ontario's growth and prosperity. The northern Ontario development agreement is dedicated to revitalizing, modernizing and expanding these key industries.

L'Entente de développement du nord de l'Ontario accorde beaucoup d'importance à la recherche et au développement. Notre gouvernement sait que la recherche et le développement de technologies, d'approches et de nouvelles stratégies sont des conditions essentielles au maintien à long terme de la vigueur de l'économie du nord de l'Ontario.

Fifty million dollars will be invested over the next four years to promote sustainable forestry in northern Ontario and will help Ontario support a broader range of jobs and opportunities in the northern woods industry. It will fund initiatives in policy development, improved forest research, aboriginal forestry and forest awareness, areas which are crucial to achieving our goal of sustainable forest management in Ontario.

Funds will also be applied to research and technology transfer programs, economic analyses, forestry demonstrations and integrated resource management, as well as a comprehensive program of communications and public information.

Thirty million dollars will be dedicated to six programs designed to help the mineral industry expand and diversify. Funds will be used to undertake a series of initiatives, including identifying geological environments favourable to the exploration of base metals; enhancing the competitiveness of the Ontario mining industry while addressing environmental concerns; improving private sector access to government mineral information files through information technology; examining opportunities for the industrial mineral sector and identifying potential sources for development; improving exploration technology, and increasing public and industry awareness of activities undertaken in support of the industry.

The tourism component of this agreement, worth $15 million, contains six program areas: marketing, research, community marketing services and enhancement projects, human resources development, aboriginal tourism development and communications/evaluation.

Ces initiatives reconnaissent la volonté des intervenants de relever les normes d'emploi et les programmes de formation dans l'industrie touristique. Ces normes sont essentielles si nous voulons poursuivre le développement des services et accroître la qualité et la capacité concurrentielle de l'industrie touristique du nord de l'Ontario.

Forestry, mining and tourism form the foundation of the northern economy. These industries have for many years, and will for many more to come, put bread and butter on the tables of northern Ontario families. These industries must be protected. They must be nurtured. They must be retooled to deal with the pressures of the 1990s.

I am pleased, as we all should be, that this agreement was signed today. Our government recognizes that the challenge of rebuilding the economy in northern Ontario is one that must involve all levels of government, business, labour and industry. I am pleased that the federal government is joining us today in the important task of rebuilding the north.

WIFE ASSAULT PREVENTION MONTH

Hon Mrs Boyd: Today I am announcing the beginning of Wife Assault Prevention Month, with this year's theme, "No man has the right to assault a woman."

Research shows that one in five men living with a woman admits to using violence against her. This violence takes many forms, including slapping, throwing objects at her, beating her up, threatening her with a knife or gun and even using these weapons against her. In homes across this province, women of all ages, races and economic backgrounds face the very real threat of violence in our homes as part of our daily lives.

Violence against women continues to be the most shocking expression of the fact that men still have more privilege and power in our society. Some men—at least one out of five—use violence as a way of maintaining this power and control over the women with whom they live.

Wife assault is more than physical violence. Emotional and psychological abuse can destroy a woman's independence and self-esteem. These emotional scars may not be as visible as bruises, cuts and broken bones, but they can last much longer and, in the long run, prove a costly liability to our entire society.

This government sees wife assault and all other forms of violence against women as a major obstacle to the full equality of women in our province. How can women take on the many challenges of the outside world if we are not even safe within our own homes, within our own families? Our society will never be a fair and open one, one which can legitimately claim to offer equal opportunities to all its citizens, no matter which gender, as long as this gender-based crime is so widespread.

This year the government will spend almost $70 million to help stop and prevent assault against women by their intimate partners. The Ontario women's directorate co-ordinates these wife assault initiatives, which include a variety of programs and services offered by 11 ministries. Shelters for women and children, supportive counselling, proactive criminal justice system measures and professional and public education are the major components of this government-wide effort to end wife assault.

Public education is absolutely essential to our strategy against wife assault. Victims of violence continue to need shelters and other support services, but unless we make a long-term investment in prevention, in changing attitudes, the abuse will continue relentlessly.

The government's public education activities focus on Wife Assault Prevention Month. This month's campaign is the sixth annual one. It consists of TV ads in both English and French, radio ads in nine languages, including five native language ads, newspaper advertising in 12 languages; posters, easy-to-read brochures and local public education projects.

This year new television commercials in English and French direct attention to men's responsibility to prevent wife assault as well as to the damage caused by emotional abuse. Only by naming the violence and by women and men working together can we create a safe physical and emotional environment for ourselves and our children.

It is essential, in our working together, that men confront one another, educate one another and raise one another's awareness of the responsibility they have for ending wife assault. By talking to their sons, brothers and friends, men can help to end the cycle of violence in all our communities.

As in the past, many of the public education materials we will be using were developed in co-operation with community representatives. We continue to be concerned that our messages are appropriate to the many diverse groups and cultures in Ontario.

To support the campaign at a grass-roots level, 98 community groups around Ontario have received small grants for local projects. Local public education will reinforce the province-wide message that each one of us in Ontario is personally responsible for helping to stop wife assault. Just as no man has the right to assault a woman, no one has the moral right to deny or ignore the reality of wife assault.

This month-long public education campaign will continue to make the people of Ontario aware that we cannot condone any form of wife assault in our society.

RESPONSES

NORTHERN ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT

Mrs McLeod: I want to respond to the statement by the Minister of Northern Development and Mines. I suppose I should at least be glad that some agreement with the Canadian government has been signed, because it brings to an end what has been a very sad period in recent history with the federal government essentially blackmailing the province by refusing to enter into a joint resources agreement unless Ontario put in a replacement measure for its softwood lumber tax, but at the very best the statement the minister has made is gobbledygook, and at the worst would suggest it is an attempt to hide the reality of what is a very bad deal for Ontario's forestry industry.

I cannot believe any Ontario government would present the information given in this statement as being an agreement to feel good about. It appears this is a replacement, a reement that is $12 million a year for four years, for the former Canada-Ontario forest resource development agreement, which was $30 million a year for five years. That is less than one third of the previous agreement's support for forestry. That means the federal government's contribution to forest resource development in this province is now $6 million a year for four years where it was $20 million a year for five years.

It is a huge reduction in support. It is a clear message about the lack of federal government support for Ontario forestry. If we compare this to other provinces, we will see how serious that reduction in support is. If we look at Ontario's commitment is, unless this $6 million is increased above the $15 million that was being provided under the former agreement, this is actually $9 million a year of reduction in support.

I suggest it is entirely possible, from the information the minister has presented about this agreement, that Ontario's forestry budget is now $18 million a year poorer than it was under the former COFRDA. I do not believe this agreement can possibly be presented as progress for Ontario's forest industry.

Mr Michash: I would like to refer to the mining portion of this statement and to the absolute decline in mining in this province. As the minister will know, with the loss of many thousands of jobs in the many mines that are closing across the province, there is great need of any assistance. I press my main question about the whole announcement today is, does it replace the existing economic regional development agreement? Is this a portion of the $15 million that was already agreed upon by the former government or is this new money?

I often worry about the mining industry in Ontario and the competition we have from other jurisdictions we compete against. I have often mentioned this about Quebec and British Columbia, Nevada and Mexico, where they are our true competitors. I am wondering today if this is money that is going to help that mining industry. I look forward to seeing what this agreement will do for the many unemployed miners, the many prospectors who are moving out of the area, to bring them back into this industry, one which is in great need across this province.

WIFE ASSAULT PREVENTION MONTH

Ms Poole: When I was listening to the words of the minister responsible for women's issues, I had to agree with many of the sentiments she expressed in her statement. When she talked about making a long-term investment in prevention, that is indeed at the core of it, but one of the things I am distressed about is that the promise of this government is not being matched in reality.

This month, as the provincial government acknowledges and promotes Wife Assault Prevention Month, Interim House of Hamilton-Wentworth and 10 other Ontario shelters for abused women and their children are facing a financial crisis that may soon impact on their ability to continue to provide service. None of the shelters has received any of the $20.3 million promised by the provincial government in May 1991 to combat male violence, yet the need for the service has never been greater.

While I applaud the efforts of the minister to bring Wife Assault Prevention Month to the attention of this House and to the attention of the people of this province, we must ask her to match her words with deeds. That is what we need and that is what some of these interval and transition houses are not getting.

Changing attitudes is at the core, as I mentioned earlier. It is not only changing the attitudes of the victims so that they know that help is available and that they can break the cycle; it is changing the attitudes of the perpetrators so that they know wife assault is a crime, that there is no excuse and that it is never a private matter, because wife assault is everybody's responsibility. One of the saddest things is for the children involved. We must work together for public education, for police training, for training in the courts and towards a public education program so we can stop this terrible problem.

NORTHERN ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT

Mr Eves: In response to the Minister of Northern Development and Mines, I would say that if my memory serves me correctly, the last agreement was signed in 1985. It was a five-year agreement and I think it should have been renewed in 1990 as opposed to late in 1991.

I would also like to echo to some extent the comments of the member for Fort William with respect to being concerned about the amount being reduced, possibly by both levels of government, the federal government and the provincial government.

The agreement, as I said, should have been renegotiated probably by the last government in 1990, because that is when the previous one expired. However, better late than never, and I suppose half a loaf is better than none, but those are my initial comments.

With respect to the comments about competitiveness, we on this side of the House agree with the minister with respect to competitiveness, but there are some things her government does not have to sign an agreement with the federal government to do. One of these is hydro rates, especially in northern Ontario and especially for northern industries such as the forestry and mining industries.

Gasoline and fuel taxes: This is the same government, the same party, that campaigned in the last provincial election about equating those rates all over the province. As a matter of fact, as I recall, it was a campaign promise that they would equate and equalize fuel and gasoline prices throughout Ontario, especially to help northern Ontario. We have bills on gasoline and fuel taxes that are coming up very shortly for debate in the Legislature, Bills 85 and 86. This government can do something about that unilaterally.

The last comment I would like to make with respect to the agreement is that although we appreciate that forestry, mining and tourism are all very important to the north, transportation is also very important and I note that there is nothing in here about a commitment for four-laning by either level of government, the provincial or the federal government.

WIFE ASSAULT PREVENTION MONTH

Mrs Witmer: I would like to respond to the statement concerning Wife Assault Prevention Month. Although I agree with the minister that wife assault is more than physical violence and that it does need to be eliminated, I am quite disappointed by what is happening here.

Although this government is spending a tremendous amount of money on publicity, it is not providing the dollars for the infrastructure. There is simply no support for the many women and children in this province who are calling for help and wanting access to the shelters. Unfortunately what has happened is that the government is creating expectations throughout the province that these services will be available for women, and then when they contact the shelter, the service is simply not there.

I have recently been contacted by several women operating shelters, including the one in my own community, Anselma House. They indicate to me that the minister has not released any of the $20.3 million that was promised by her government in May. They are concerned. They are facing a financial crisis. The demand for their services has increased. In fact, at Anselma House they told me that in the first six months of 1991 they have seen more clients than in all 12 months in 1990. Yet the minister is not providing the money to enable them to respond to the demands that are being placed upon them. They have had to reallocate their staff and they have insufficient counselors to deal with the women who approach them.

I ask the minister to release the money so that they can meet the debts in their own community and respond to the expectations she is creating as a result of the publicity. I encourage her to set the money aside for enhanced core funding. That is the number one priority for the shelters. That is what they are looking for. They do not want to write proposals for grants. They want money for core funding and I encourage the minister to put that money in place and make it available to the women and children in this province who are in desperate need of help.

NORTHERN ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT

Mr Harris: In the limited time available to me, I would like to refer the Minister of Northern Development and Mines to the Agenda for People, which turned out to be an agenda to get elected; it really had nothing to do with an agenda for people, with "$400 million over two years—returning money that's made in the north to the north," or $200 million a year. The government has cut funding for what was negotiated by a former government that was able to get an agreement, the Conservative government in this province. They promised $100 million a year to four-lane the Trans-Canada Highway.

The Speaker: The time has expired.

VISITOR

The Speaker: Before continuing with routine proceedings, I invite all members to welcome to our midst this afternoon a former member of the assembly now seated in the members' gallery west, the former member for Essex-Kent, Mr Jim McGuigan. Welcome.

Mr Offer: I rise on a point of order, Mr Speaker. Last week the Minister of Labour announced a move to lower the current workplace exposure limits of hazardous substances. We have heard reports that the Minister of Labour intends to announce changes to the—

The Speaker: Would the member take his seat, please. There is nothing out of order.

ORAL QUESTIONS

SOFT DRINK CONTAINERS

Mr Elston: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Not that long ago, I was in this House asking about her commitment to the 30% refillable regulation on soft drink containers. She said she was committed to it despite the fact there had been no charges laid. She also indicated that she was still enforcing the regulation. Since the minister knows that soft drink companies are selling only 7.6% of their product in refillables, can she tell us why she is not enforcing her regulation and laying charges?

Hon Mrs Grier: As I am sure the Leader of the Opposition is aware, the regulations are enforced by the inspection and enforcement branch of my ministry. In June, when it became obvious that the soft drink companies were not meeting the 30% regulation, I referred the matter to investigations and enforcement and instructed them to investigate and enforce.

Mr Elston: So why are they not? I cannot believe the minister. The answer is that the minister is preparing to dispose of her 30% regulation. She will obviously have to confirm that there is a deal in the offing between her and the soft drink industry and that she has a new scheme up her sleeve. Will she tell us today what her newest contrivance is with respect to soft drink containers?

Hon Mrs Grier: I do not know where the Leader of the Opposition gets his information, but let me be very frank and open with him. This is a complex minefield of issues, as many previous ministers of the Environment have found to their cost.

As I have previously said to the House, when I indicated that I intended to enforce the 30% refillable ratio, the current regulation, the soft drink industry said it had a better scheme. I said, "Well then, show me." They came back and gave me a proposal that I submitted to a very broad range of stakeholders at a two-day workshop in the early part of the summer. I had suggested to this group that if it could arrive at a consensus as to how to deal with this issue within the principle enunciated by this government of waste reduction being a priority, that would be very helpful. They did not reach a consensus.

Since then I have been reviewing the results of the workshop and meeting with various groups that have an interest in this matter. When I have arrived at a decision, I will be glad to share it with the member and the House.

Mr Elston: The minister said she was enforcing the regulation and she says she is in favour of 30%. Now she has finally admitted that she is planning to throw away the whole thing. She asked me where I got my information.

ve a copy of this document, which she sent out publicly. The minister can tell the public now that she is throwing away the 30% regulation. In fact, this is a first draft of what we know is a minimum of five drafts, and the minister is planning to do away with the 30% regulation altogether.

While the minister and the association are scheming together to put an end to the 30% regulation, why will she not at least share with us how she has come to the conclusion that the 30% refillable regulation is no longer worth keeping in Ontario?

Hon Mrs Grier: I thought I just did. The member is jumping to entirely unwarranted conclusions. The document he is waving about is the one I just referred to, a proposal to me by the Ontario Soft Drink Association for what it calls a waste minimization plan. After receiving that document, I referred it to the multistakeholder committee I called together and, as a result of those discussions, the soft drink association made some changes in an attempt to respond to the issues raised and to find a way of coming to a generally accepted conclusion on this issue.

The fact that there has been no announcement from me to the course this government will take I think is proof positive that when the member says I have arrived at a deal with the Ontario Soft Drink Association, he is absolutely and completely incorrect.

Mr Sorbara: I think the people of Ontario are going to come to their own conclusions about what the Minister of the Environment has arrived at.

SUPPORT AND CUSTODY ORDERS ENFORCEMENT

Mr Sorbara: My question is for the Attorney General. There are almost 300,000 children in Ontario who are living below the poverty line. That has been confirmed most recently by a joint report of the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto and the Child Poverty Action Group.

Last December, almost a year ago, when the minister introduced in this House Bill 17, his amendments to the Support and Custody Orders Enforcement Act, he said, "The single most important goal of the new program must be to fight child poverty." While we were debating that bill, the Attorney General suggested to us that it was urgent to pass and implement it because the lives of children and women waiting for support depended upon it. At the same time, the Premier himself accused the opposition of delaying the bill and therefore withholding some $400 million in support payments.

Now we find—I am getting to my question—that in his wisdom the Attorney General has decided to wait until next March to implement this bill. I wonder if the Attorney General could explain to us how he explains to the tens of thousands of women who are counting on the urgent implementation of these new provisions, which provide for compulsory deduction of support payments, why it was okay to argue their case and use them as political fodder when he wanted to pass the bill but it is not okay to move heaven and earth to implement the bill now that they are depending on it for the support they deserve. How does he explain that to them?

Hon Mr Hampton: Last week I thought I was being surprised by the member opposite when he said he wanted to be supportive. This week he is back in the same old vein.

As we went along with the family support plan, there were a number of issues that we decided were important to implement with it. First, in our discussions employers said to us over and over again that they wanted time to understand the legislation, to understand how it would be implemented, to work out reporting methods and to feel completely comfortable with them.

Second, the new legislation and legislative scheme will involve a real change in the way the family support plan does business. We are required to do a great deal of training with the staff.

Finally, the evidence obtained in other jurisdictions, such as Florida and Wisconsin, indicated to us that it would be better in the longer run to first bring in a very strong public relations campaign dealing with the social aspects of the issue before implementing the plan. This will in the long run assist in the proper development of the plan and help us to maintain and obtain the goals of the plan.

[Applause]

Mr Sorbara: The members of the government party are applauding that action. If the Attorney General thinks that is a response to the thousands of women who were relying on the passage and implementation of that bill for support payments this winter, which is so harsh and cruel to so many people, then he has another think coming.

The Attorney General has had over a year to implement this bill and has been able to find the time and the money to implement the public relations campaign. We have all seen it. It is going to be in bus shelters, on buses and in tabloids all over the province, complete with glossy photos. What does it say? It says, "Tell her again"—this young girl and her teddy bear—"why it's okay that Daddy's not paying his support payments."

Why does the Attorney General not tell us once again why it is okay for him not to implement this legislation immediately and get those payments to the people who need them?

Hon Mr Hampton: As I tried to indicate in my earlier answer, evidence collected in the United States, in states that have implemented support deduction programs already, shows that one half of the problem is increasing social awareness of the failure of some people to pay support.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Hampton: Studies there also show that if you conduct the proper kind of public relations program, you will increase the peer pressure, the social pressure on people to pay their support payments. We are doing what has been tried and shown to be true elsewhere. I believe it will be successful here as well.

Mr Sorbara: Mr Speaker, if you believe that, I have a bridge waiting for you in the west lobby at a very good price.

This is the same Attorney General who during committee consideration of Bill 17 said: "You can't do it on a voluntary basis. We need these compulsory measures. We have to deduct from every single person against whom a support order is made." But now here is the real answer: It has to do with dollars and it has to do with public relations.

This advertising campaign with the little girl saying, "Tell me again why Daddy is not paying," is going to cost the taxpayers of this province about $1 million. Can members guess how much the Attorney General has cut from the budget of the support and custody orders enforcement office this fiscal year in respect to this program? It is just about $1 million. Why would the Attorney General do that? Why spend the $1 million in giving us ads? Why not spend that money in urgently implementing Bill 17 so that the mothers who need those payments will get them in the mail on a regular basis?

Hon Mr Hampton: Let me address the member's question directly: When we became the government, the SCOE program was in such utter disarray and there was such an incredible backlog that we had to spend over $2 million last year addressing the backlog. We have addressed the backlog left by those people over there.

Let's get further into the facts. That member held up this legislation for nine weeks in committee. For nine weeks he said he supported the legislation and then tried to pick it apart.

Finally, let me point out that those people over there, the Liberal Party of Ontario, when they were the government had a watered-down version of the legislation we have implemented that went to cabinet, and those people over there would not support it.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Hampton: So let them explain to the children and the mothers of the province where they were for four years.

Mr Elston: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I suggest that if you wish to keep this House in some sort of array, you prevent people from doing exactly that sort of finger-pointing and casting aspersions on what we have done and undermining the civility of this place. If that is the best those people can do, they should step aside and let real managers in to take over this operation.

Mr Sorbara: I have a rather minor point of privilege, Mr Speaker.

The Speaker: What privilege have you lost?

Mr Sorbara: I think the Attorney General has inadvertently misled the House. He has suggested that we held up the legislation during committee for a period of nine weeks. If he were to check the record, he would see that during the course of that nine weeks we had several weeks of public hearings and several weeks of MPPs' legislative input in the bill. For that to be characterized as holding up legislation—

The Speaker: Will the member take his seat. There is clearly a difference of opinion with respect to events, but it is not a point of privilege.

ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF BRANT-HALDIMAND

Mr Harris: I have a question for the Deputy Premier. Last week I spent some time meeting residents of three communities in the riding of Brant-Haldimand. It has been three months since these taxpayers have had representation at Queen's Park. I wonder if the Deputy Premier, as a member of cabinet, could tell me why his government has put off, delayed and refused to call the by-election in Brant-Haldimand so they could be represented in this Legislature.

Hon Mr Laughren: There is no attempt or determination to stall. All I can tell the member opposite is that the decision is under active consideration.

Mr Harris: I recall that when a by-election in Welland-Thorold was being delayed by the Liberal Party, the leader of the NDP said that even if the by-election coincided with municipal elections, that should not stop Welland-Thorold from being represented in the provincial House.

While I was in Brant-Haldimand, many people there were reminding me what happened to the last Premier who played politics around the timing of an election call, i.e., David Peterson. Now they are saying the same thing about this government and this Premier. There are 60,000 people who have no official voice at Queen's Park. They hear rumours that the government cannot find a candidate to run. They may or may not be true. They hear all kinds of other rumours down there, but the bottom line of it is that they are without representation. They are getting madder and madder and more and more frustrated.

Can the Deputy Premier give me one possible reason why the government has left the people of Brant-Haldimand without representation now for over three months?

Hon Mr Laughren: I want to assure the member opposite that the ability or inability of the government to find a candidate in that particular constituency has absolutely nothing to do with the timing of the election.

Mr Harris: I asked the Deputy Premier to give me one reason and he could not. Because he has no good reasons, he can understand why people are speculating about other reasons. Here is what happens when they do not have representation: During a visit there I spoke with the mayor of North Dumfries township. The Ministry of Natural Resources collects a levy of six cents per tonne of mined aggregate, and four cents of this levy is supposed to go to the municipality to offset costs such as roads and bridges. The money collected for 1990 is still sitting in the ministry coffers collecting interest, money that belongs not to the government but to North Dumfries.

I realize that $93,000 does not seem like a lot of money to the government with its $10 billion deficit, but for North Dumfries it is a significant amount of money. They said to me: "We have no MPP. We have no representative to go to, nobody to represent us." These are the kinds of problems that crop up. Perhaps the Deputy Premier, who is also Treasurer, could answer this question: Where is the $93,000

1990 that belongs to North Dumfries, this money the government has collected?

Hon Mr Laughren: I want to assure the leader of the third party that $93,000 is a lot of money in my books, regardless of the position I hold and regardless of the size of the deficit of the province. Also, I have in my own constituency many communities that are very small and to which that kind of money would mean a great deal as well. I do not take the $93,000 lightly at all. I assure the member opposite that I will find out where that money is and make sure it is in good hands.

ONTARIO HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

Mr Cousens: I have a question for the minister with responsibility for human rights. On August 16, 1991, a settlement agreement was signed by the complainants and respondents, employees of K B Home Insulation Ltd in Kingston, in a sexual harassment case that was before the Ontario Human Rights Commission. The agreement was approved by the board of inquiry on September 4, 1991. Exactly six weeks later, on October 16, 1991, the Ontario Human Rights Commission issued a news release on this case. This year, October 16 was also the date the US Senate confirmed Clarence Thomas's nomination to the US Supreme Court. The coincidence is suspect because both incidents deal with the issue of sexual harassment. A link between the two incidents was made by both the Washington Times and the Wall Street Journal.

Could the minister explain why it took the commission six weeks to issue a news release in this case and whether she feels that the chief commissioner, Catherine Frazee, and Alan Shefman, director of communications and education, were making a political statement with the timing of the release?

Hon Ms Ziemba: I think the member opposite realizes that in my capacity as minister responsible for the Ontario Human Rights Commission, it is an arm's-length relationship and the decisions made by the chief commissioner and her staff are certainly up to the chief commissioner to make.

However, having said that, I understand that a board of inquiry was involved in the process and certainly it has to be looked at in terms of when that inquiry was held. But I must say to the member that one of the things we announced just a few weeks ago was that we were going to have a new health and effectiveness program to make sure the commission worked properly. This is one of the issues that will certainly be dealt with in that particular context.

Mr Cousens: In some things the minister has a very short arm and in others she has a very long arm. This arm's-length relationship is not the relationship we expected to hear about.

There is a great deal of concern surrounding the issue of news releases by this commission. There seems to be no consistency in the treatment of cases. The Toronto Star revealed that the commission decided not to release information about a sexual harassment case involving University of Toronto professor Andre Stein and a fourth-year science student, yet the commission decided to issue a news release about a case involving a Kingston insulation firm. In both cases, the complainant received a cash settlement.

Would the minister please explain why these two sexual harassment cases were treated differently by the Ontario Human Rights Commission?

Hon Ms Ziemba: The issue is still the arm's-length relationship that I have with the commission, but I have asked how the procedure works in relation to press releases and publicity on cases. I have concern about that and, as I said earlier, we have to look in a comprehensive way at how issues are released. That is one of the issues that is going to be addressed in the health and effectiveness program of our new comprehensive plan that we are addressing at the Ontario Human Rights Commission. I share the member's concerns, because yes, I too wonder why some cases have the publicity release and others do not.

Mr Cousens: The honourable minister wonders. She has had 10 days to wonder since the article came out in the Toronto Star, and still the minister does not have an answer.

The Ontario Human Rights Commission has a mandate to ensure that all Ontario citizens are treated equally, yet the commission has handled two strikingly similar sexual harassment cases differently. A case involving a small business was made public while a case involving a tenured professor was not. The people of Ontario will not accept inequitable treatment from the Ontario Human Rights Commission. What specific actions has the minister undertaken to ensure the commission will be consistent in its procedures for publicizing settlements?

Hon Ms Ziemba: I absolutely agree with the honourable member. The Ontario Human Rights Commission should treat everybody equitably and fairly. What I have stated is that in our comprehensive plan we are going to address that issue. It has never been addressed before by either party, and it was always left. Now we are going to do that. I do agree with the honourable member that we should have a comprehensive plan. It is a specific plan with a comprehensive health and effectiveness—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. The question was placed. I know the member would like to hear a response to his question.

Hon Ms Ziemba: I also would like to add that the case in Kingston had a board of inquiry, which is a very public issue, whereas the case at the University of Toronto was not a public case. An agreement was made between two individuals, which is a little different than being in the public limelight, but I do agree that there has to be a comprehensive plan and we are addressing that very shortly.

AGRICULTURAL LAND

Mr Bradley: I was going to ask a question of the Premier about the OPP, but he is not here today so I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. When the Minister of Agriculture and Food announced his task force on Niagara land use planning issues last March, he promised that the task force's recommendations would be on the basis of "action plans" and would not be just another study of the tender fruit industry.

The task force's final report last June recommended that the province establish conservation easements to financially compensate Niagara farmers for not developing their land. The minister will remember that he has not acted on this very important recommendation, that he has decided to put this proposal off for even further study.

Does the minister's statement last week that he intends to fight farmers' severances at the OMB and his lack of action on conservation easements mean the task force was just another study of the tender fruit industry? Could the minister explain to the House how much it will cost the taxpayers of Ontario for high-priced, big-city lawyers to fight hundreds of proposed severances at the OMB?

Hon Mr Buchanan: There seem to be several questions rolled into one there. The member for St Catharines was on his feet last week imploring us to try and preserve agricultural and farm land. He was talking about some things that were happening along certain highways and he wanted to preserve the land. We announced last week that we are concerned about saving good farm land in Ontario.

In terms of the task force report that came out last June, which the member referred to, conservation easements were one of the methods that were suggested as a way of saving farm land in the Niagara region. I have responded to the Niagara region that it is one method we are interested in. I have a small group of people within my ministry who are exploring that further in co-operation with the people from Niagara. However, to implement that type of program we have to examine the implications for the rest of Ontario. We are currently in the process of doing that. I have not ruled out the use of conservation easements in Niagara or anywhere else. I want to explore what the cost will be in Niagara and provincially, though, before we make any announcements along that line.

Mr Bradley: We have the Minister of Transportation wanting to pave farm land for a truck inspection station. We have the Treasurer of this province trying to sell off government property to keep the bailiff away from his door. The government is bailing out unionized industrial operations in various parts of Ontario.

Why will the minister not provide the kind of financial assistance that will allow farmers, first of all, to meet the increased costs being imposed by the legislation and regulations of his government and make a living from the land he wishes to preserve? Why will he not give Niagara farmers a reason to support the preservation of agricultural land rather than severances to keep their operations going?

Hon Mr Buchanan: We have attempted to support tender fruit farmers and in fact all farmers in Ontario as part of the emergency package of announcements made a couple of weeks ago. Horticulture was mentioned as a specific part of that emergency aid package. There are substantial amounts of federal money currently being negotiated to make sure Ontario gets its fair share. I can promise the member that the Niagara region will get its fair share of the allotment we get in Ontario, to make sure we support the tender fruit industry in the Niagara region. It is our intention to get as much money as we can to support that area of the province.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mrs Cunningham: My question is to the Minister of Colleges and Universities. The minister will be aware that this morning there was a group in the press conference room called the Alliance for Ontario Universities. They spoke clearly of the economic impact of Ontario universities not only on our province and our country, but on our individual communities. All of us were quite surprised to know that the universities pump some $6.2 billion into the economy. They create and maintain some 138,000 jobs. For $1.9 billion invested by this government, the universities in return generated $3 for every $1 that was spent. I think most of us were well informed and we found out that most of the Ontario population is not.

This group has formed to promote awareness of the universities, what they do and how they contribute to our economy. If they are having to go about this province and tell the Ontario public what is happening and what is good about the universities—as the minister knows, we have to clearly improve their image—what is this government doing to assist groups like this? What is the minister doing on his own to make certain we appreciate the contribution universities make to this society?

Hon Mr Allen: I first of all want to thank the member for her question. The group that has been formed, the alliance, is going to be very helpful in spreading precisely the kinds of messages this government has been spreading and indeed which the past government attempted to spread, about the good work the universities do in this province. It is no secret that when one comes to talk about technology transfer the best technology transfer is from the universities, through their graduate students, into the businesses and professions of this province. In fact, the multiplier should be at least threefold and probably is more. One takes account of all the spinoff effects of the work universities do.

As the member knows, we have established and are establishing further task forces that will be moving around the province talking with various community groups and with the universities to deal with precise issues in the university system. In the course of that, there will be many opportunities to sing the good story we have to tell about universities in Ontario.

Mrs Cunningham: I do not know how many years I am going to have to spend in this Legislative Assembly to see some government come forth with some action, but I do know that the universities spent a long time putting forth a recovery plan for the consideration of this government.

The experts, the students, the parents and the communities were involved in some way in talking about the tremendous problems our universities face, especially in Ontario. If we are going to rely on our young people, there is no better place. As we talk about accessibility and our dependence on them, we have actually cut funding per student over the last decade. We have done that. The recovery plan gets us back to the 1977 level. That was the suggestion. That was the minister's plan. What is the government's plan for recovery for the universities of Ontario?

Hon Mr Allen: As the member knows, there is indeed a good deal of ground to be made up. Since 1978, per student funding in Ontario has gone down in real dollars $1,900 per student under the Liberal and the Conservative governments. If this government were not in the kind of recession conditions we are in, we would be making up ground very fast on that $1,900 per student that has been cut over the past dozen years.

I am quite aware of the recovery program, and the member knows it is a proposal that requires a major infusion of funds from the students, from private business and from government in some fashion over a period of four years. The difficulty all of us are having is finding the dollars on the student side, on the business side and on the government side to make it all work. But I want to assure the member I am working on it.

MINISTRY OF CULTURE AND COMMUNICATIONS RECEPTION

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture and Communications has a response to a question asked earlier by the member for Renfrew North.

Hon Mrs Haslam: On October 28 the member for Renfrew North asked me to provide him with information on a reception surrounding an announcement made by my ministry in late August. The occasion was the announcement of $5 million to support publishing in Ontario through the creation of a publishing centre which will administer the money to Canadian-owned, Ontario-based magazines and book publishing companies.

I do not have to remind the honourable members of the sorry state of Canadian and Ontario publishing. This was a major, long-awaited announcement. Therefore, we had a reception for 200 magazine and book publishers and writers.

The Park Plaza was chosen for two reasons. First, it is a long-standing traditional meeting place for writers and the publishing community and it is our preference to use event-related venues for our announcements. Second, the Park Plaza offered us free space to make our announcement there and, as a result, the Plaza's quote was competitive with those of other estimates we asked for.

Management Board policy indicates that such expenses should minimize costs and maximize benefit. It also states that the most practical and economical arrangements must be made. This we did.

Mr Conway: I do not think my friend the minister has yet understood the essence of my question. We have all known for months about the recessionary pain that is being felt everywhere by working men and women across this province. The bill I have in my hand is a bill for some $2,887 for an important reception at a properly prestigious place which—

Hon Mr Pouliot: A thousand bucks an hour in Italy.

Mr Conway: Oh, shut up.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Whatever happened to the word "please"?

Interjections.

The Speaker: Relax. It may have something to do with the fact that the air-cooling system is not functioning this afternoon. Hence it is a little warmer than usual. I am sure the member for Renfrew North can continue.

Mr Conway: The point of the question is simply that $857 worth of this bill is for publicly supplied and paid-for booze. Will the minister give an undertaking, as the Attorney General did, I thought, very ably the other day, that the days of publicly paid-for booze are not going to be very long for this government, that particularly in these recessionary times we are not going to see this kind of event again, where $857 is paid, regardless of the prestige of the event, for alcohol, and that if a venue is required, the legislative precinct is as good as it gets?

Hon Mrs Haslam: I would like to inform the member that it is our policy at the Ministry of Culture and Communications to select the most inexpensive wine on offer and always Ontario wine. Juice, soft drinks and mineral water, as always at ministry events, were encouraged.

The total cost of this event, as the member has indicated, was $2,800; of that $857 was for 35 bottles of wine. That works out to less than one glass of wine for each of the 200 people who attended, or to put it differently, it comes to $4 per person.

This event was in complete adherence to Management Board guidelines and was supported by the existing administrative policies and procedures of my ministry. The member for Renfrew North cannot reasonably expect that a major, long-awaited announcement for a vital sector of our economy warrants any less attention from this government. But I take his point because I researched what he and his government spent the last time it did something. At $10,000, $1000 of it for the wine, I would say I am saving a lot of money here.

NORTH YORK PERFORMING ARTS CENTRE

Mr Mahoney: Before I ask the question, I would like to read a quote from a letter. It says:

"I do not have to tell you why American manufacturers can sell products cheaper than Canadian manufacturers. None of the reasons are good ones and none of those reasons should be supported by this government. We have a choice. We can encourage employment right here in the province of Ontario or we can contradict everything we have ever said about cross-border shopping and buy from an American manufacturer."

The letter closes by saying:

"I believe it would be politically disastrous for us as a government to engage in cross-border shopping, and I urge all members of the government, especially those in cabinet, to support the purchase of Canadian-made and Ontario-made products."

It is signed by the member for Welland-Thorold, and I certainly agree with those sentiments.

My question is to the Minister of Culture and Communications, and it has to do with some documentation I provided for the minister regarding the North York Performing Arts Centre. A tender call was put out by this group and the tenders came in. The first bid was $970,000. The second bid was $1,049,000, $78,000 more. The first bid was from an American firm. The second bid was from a Canadian firm, Joel Theatrical Rigging Contractors Ltd of Mississauga.

The minister in a letter to me stated that she shared my concerns and indicated that she would attempt to do something to allow this Canadian company to get this business. It is $1 million in business for a Mississauga company. By the way, $600,000 of that is for labour.

The Speaker: Would the member place his question, please.

Mr Mahoney: I would like to ask the minister what she has done to assist this Canadian company to convince the North York Performing Arts Centre that it should award this contract to this Canadian business.

Hon Mrs Haslam: As the member knows, I cannot tell the agencies, I cannot tell the people, whom to hire and whom not to hire. Yes, we like Canadian companies and yes, I will continue to support Canadian companies, but the member knows very well that, as a minister, I cannot dictate whom they hire or whom they have build their facilities.

Mr Mahoney: I did not ask if the minister would dictate it. I asked her if she had done anything to encourage these people to give the contract to a Canadian company. I have, in a letter back, an admission by this minister that the former government contributed $12 million to the project in land which was subsequently sold. We made our contribution to this project. There are federal moneys that are being applied for.

I then get a letter from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology, who says his officials are meeting with their officials and they are all going to try to work this out. I quote that minister as saying, "I hope we will be able to achieve a suitable solution that is consistent and fair and recommend this to the North York Performing Arts Centre and their board of directors."

I have been told that as of today this business has been given to the American company. I want to know why the Minister of Culture and Communications and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology have been fiddling and sitting on their hands instead of meeting with the board and attempting to ensure that Canadian jobs and Canadian businesses are supported. How can she justify sitting there while this project goes across the border?

Hon Mrs Haslam: The member knows that in the interests of supporting Canadian business and workers the Ontario government extends a 10% price preference on Canadian content in goods and services, and it continues to support that. As he well knows, neither the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology, nor the Minister of Labour nor any minister can go to a board of directors and say, "You must do this or you must do that." We will continue to work with these people. We will continue to work with any board to be sure that the Canadian jobs are protected and this government—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Will the minister take her seat for a moment.

Mr Mahoney: You could at least admit you did nothing. At least admit you did nothing and you are cross-border shopping, or resign.

Hon Mr Philip: You wanted to build a Pelee Island ferry in the United States. What are you talking about?

Mr Bradley: Are you misleading the House over there, Ed Philip? Will you quit misleading the House?

The Speaker: The member for St Catharines, that is out of order. I ask the member for St Catharines to withdraw that remark.

Mr Bradley: I withdraw.

The Speaker: Members will notice that when people are interrupted attempting to either ask a question or respond and it is necessary to maintain order, the clock continues to run. If members wish to watch the time disappear, then that is precisely what is going to happen.

Hon Mrs Haslam: In closing, I would just like to assure the members that we are very interested in Canadian workers and very interested in Canadian businesses and will continue to support them in any way—

Interjection.

The Speaker: Order, the member for Oriole.

Hon Mrs Haslam: Mr Speaker, the member for Oriole is bellowing. How can she hear my answer when she continues to bellow like that?

The Speaker: The choice of language is not helpful to the atmosphere in here. I realize that the issues are difficult and people get upset, but the choice of language does nothing to assist in trying to establish a better atmosphere.

TVONTARIO

Mrs Marland: My question is also for the Minister of Culture and Communications. The Provincial Auditor's report on TVOntario revealed a litany of executive excesses, poor planning and a lack of expenditure control. Given that TVOntario is funded by the taxpayers, the Ontario government must demand better accountability from our province's public broadcaster.

When the Provincial Auditor's report was released, I recommended that TVOntario's chairman and CEO resign immediately. However, this minister said Mr Ostry would remain until December 15 because TVOntario is hosting the Public Broadcasters' International Conference this month. Can the minister give us an estimate of how much TVOntario will spend to host the Public Broadcasters' International Conference?

Hon Mrs Haslam: TVOntario and NHK have agreed on a cost-sharing agreement and they set a budgetary allocation for the November initiative. I asked and TVOntario has informed us that TVO and NHK are sharing costs 50-50. Delegates are paying their own travel and accommodation costs. The costs of the three-day event are set at approximately $46,000. Therefore, TVOntario has told us it projects a cost in the range of $23,000.

Mrs Marland: I wish to thank the minister for monitoring the expenses of the Public Broadcasters' International ference which TVOntario will host. The taxpayers of Ontario ultimately pay the bills for hosting this conference. Even the shocking excesses that have occurred under Mr. [Name]’s leadership, we have a right to expect the government to monitor carefully an event over which he will preside.

Can the minister tell us whether she believes that the cost of hosting the Public Broadcasters’ International Conference are acceptable, and will she tell us what steps she is taking to ensure that cost overruns do not occur, as has happened in the historical perspective under that leadership?

Hon Mrs Haslam: We know that the symposium is to identify common and international problems that broadcasters face and to propose co-operative actions that will address the challenge. It is a very important symposium. I have already said, I asked TVO and it has informed us that this is the cost, that it will be a 50-50 sharing with the IBC. They have estimated that cost to be in the range of $3,000.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

Mr Sutherland: As members know, Highway 401 goes through my riding and one of the most dangerous sections of the 401, the stretch from Woodstock to—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. To whom is your question addressed?

00

Mr Sutherland: My question is of the Minister of Transportation. One of the most dangerous sections of Highway 401, the stretch from Woodstock to London, goes through my riding. The Ministry of Transportation has been doing construction work there for the last couple of years. I want to know whether the minister can inform us what impact the work already done, the paving of shoulders and installation of medians in certain sections, is having on the safety of that stretch of the road.

Hon Mr Pouliot: I welcome the concern shared by the member for Oxford regarding the section of Highway 401 between London and Woodstock. We are talking here about a project of $180 million. The work began in 1989 and is to be completed in 1995, fully one year before the original estimate of completion. This year we are looking for three contracts to be awarded for a median barrier, to be followed by a supplementary three in 1992, one in 1993 and finally two in 1994—$180 million totally, completely devoted to safety on Highway 401.

Mr Sutherland: I have been having some discussions with people in my riding, anecdotal conversations with some of the ambulance operators, about safety there. They indicate to me they feel the section of highway is safer and they are responding to fewer serious accidents out there. I wonder whether the ministry has any statistics that would support that anecdotal information.

Hon Mr Pouliot: The member has asked the most relevant and serious question of the day and is to be commended. I too share the need to address the component of safety at every opportunity. It forms part of our philosophy of Transportation. Everything has been done to accelerate the project, and indeed the section of Highway 401 which is the most dangerous will be completed in 1992. We are doing all we can, and I wish to thank the member.

SKILLS TRAINING

Mr Daigeler: My question is of the Minister of Skills Development. So far, he and his government have been great on promises but very poor on action. Two weeks ago, when he signed a new federal-provincial training agreement, he took a lot of media credit by promising major reforms on training, but all we have so far is the promise of yet another round of consultation, this time on the Ontario Training and Adjustment Board.

Let me remind the minister that on October 19 the Premier himself got a great headline in the Toronto Star saying “Rae to Boost Training, High-Tech.” Beyond the headlines and the vague promises, where is the boost? Where are the concrete initiatives on training we need today, not a year from now?

Hon Mr Allen: I can refer to the $6-million laid-off apprenticeship program, for example, the first time in the history of this province that there has been a program to maintain apprentices during a recession or depression. Under that program we have had interviews with over 5,000 apprentices and, through a number of strategies, have been able to retain large numbers of them in their training programs who otherwise would have been lost.

We added $2 million to the Trades Updating program for technology and technologists to make certain that people who are out there could increase their skills, particularly if they were training apprentices, so that they in turn could be more highly skilled trainers.

We added $1 million to the access to apprenticeship program so that those equity groups having difficulty getting into employment and therefore into apprenticeships would be able to take advantage of those programs. We have signed a $4-million agreement, for example, with the electronics and electronic industries. We have done a sectoral training program with regard to the plastics industry, and we have some coming on stream for auto parts and tourism.

If the member would like to learn a little bit more, I would be happy to oblige him.

Mr Daigeler: I have been trying to learn a lot more at the estimates, and we will be hearing more from the minister and we will be asking him more tomorrow afternoon. What I have not heard from the minister is any major reorientation of our training system. All he has promised us so far is further consultation.

Let me remind him of yet another unfulfilled promise on his part. In his now much-discredited budget statement of April 29, here is what the Treasurer had to say with regard to the minister’s plans to implement the Vision 2000 reforms:

“First, a college standards and accreditation council will be formed to ensure that college programs are of a consistently high quality across the province. Second, we will be moving forward on a system for fairly evaluating prior learning. Third, the Minister of Colleges and Universities will be undertaking a feasibility study to examine innovative ways for colleges and universities to co-operate in offering new credentials for advanced training. The minister will be announcing further details."

Where are the minister's announcements of further details in this House?

Hon Mr Allen: I do not know where this member's ear is, but it certainly is not to the ground. There were announcements precisely with respect to each of those three initiatives in the weeks following the budget. There was $3 million allocated to cover the initiatives to get in place each of those projects. I do not know where the member has been.

He says we are doing nothing. We spent seven months of this year in tough negotiations with the federal government. Last year, with 38% of the labour force in this province, we were getting only 24% of the training dollars from the federal government under that administration. We have negotiated a whole new range of $380 million in addition to the last agreement's dollars from the federal government and we got it by hanging tough. We have 38%, exactly equal to the labour force percentage.

LAND REGISTRATION

Mr Villeneuve: My question is of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Given last week's court decision by Judge Soubliere concerning registry offices in eastern Ontario, can the minister assure this House today that the files and documents that were removed from the registry offices that are now scheduled to stay open in eastern Ontario will be returned to where they justly belong?

Hon Ms Churley: Any documents that have been removed—and I am not so sure they were; these offices will not be closed down, pending further review of the judge's decision—of course, any documents that may have been removed will be returned.

Mr Villeneuve: That is good to know. We will be looking forward to those documents returning very shortly. In the hearings we had, the ministry failed to show that the closure of registry offices would indeed save one penny for the public. Would she now be prepared to go to the Provincial Auditor and ask him to do a full audit on the closure of registry offices, prior to taking any further action?

Hon Ms Churley: I beg to differ; the member is wrong. The information that was given by my staff who attended the hearings in fact said quite clearly there would be savings of $1 million a year and at least $8 million in capital costs. I can show him those figures again. It is very clear why we would be closing these offices—they are redundant.

In fact, members were standing up here today and talking about—I say this in all seriousness—the fact that there is not enough money around for wife assault. I agree with them. We need a lot more money in these very important areas, and the member cannot have it both ways.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order, the member for Burlington South.

Hon Ms Churley: We need to rationalize the systems. We have to cut down on duplication, because there are very important—

The Speaker: Will the minister take her seat, please.

The member for Burlington South is asked to come to order.

SUPPORT AND CUSTODY ORDERS ENFORCEMENT

Mr Malkowski: I have a question for the Attorney General. Last Thursday, October 31, the Attorney General launched a massive public awareness campaign on the issue of unpaid family support payments. Why is this campaign necessary? I have met regularly with constituents in York East who are single mothers owed child and spousal support who are very aware that there are serious implications for unpaid family support.

Hon Mr Hampton: The member is quite right that the women and children who are not receiving support payments are very aware of the problem. However, society in general is not sufficiently aware of the problem. Society in general is not aware that there is $470 million in unpaid support payments, which is hurting us. They are not aware that 80,000 children are affected by the failure to pay support. They are not aware that Ontario then has to spend an additional $140 million in social assistance.

There is not sufficient awareness out there among the greater public of how serious this problem is. Through a public relations effort, we believe we can focus public attention on it and, through focusing public attention, we believe we can increase the social attitude that says to people who should be paying support, "You must pay your support."

MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Mr Cooke moves that Mrs Marland and Mr Harris exchange places in the order of precedence for private members' public business.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

Mr O'Neil: I have a petition I am presenting from my riding. I would like to emphasize that, although I present this petition, it does not mean I agree or disagree with it. The petition reads:

"The Ministry of Education has made evolutionism a compulsory core unit in senior OAC, previously grade 13, history and science. Since evolutionism and creationism are completed acts in the past, neither can be proven nor disproven. In fairness to all parents and students, equal time should be given in presenting the underlying assumptions of each.

"Through the two-model approach, the skills of critical thinking, such as recognition of bias, awareness of society and its influence on one's bias and the awareness of assumptions, can allow students to examine their own belief stem and better appreciate an opposing view. These bills should be incorporated into all textbooks approved by Circular 14 dealing with the question of origins."

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

Mr J. Wilson: I have the pleasure of presenting a petition to the Legislature on behalf of the good people of my riding of Simcoe West. The petition reads as follows:

"Whereas the Queen of Canada has long been a symbol of national unity for Canadians from all walks of life and from all ethnic backgrounds;

"Whereas the people of Canada are currently facing a constitutional crisis which could potentially result in the breakup of the federation and are in need of unifying symbols;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to restore the oath to the Queen of Ontario's police officers."

I too have affixed my name to this petition.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ELECTRONIC REGISTRATION ACT (MINISTRY OF CONSUMER AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS STATUTES), 1991

LOI DE 1991

SUR L'ENREGISTREMENT ÉLECTRONIQUE DANS LE CADRE DE LOIS RELEVANT DU MINISTÈRE DE LA CONSOMMATION ET DU COMMERCE

Ms Churley moved second reading of Bill 126, An Act authorizing the Filing of Information in an Electronic Format under Statutes administered by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

M^{me} Churley propose la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 126, Loi autorisant le dépôt de renseignements au moyen d'un support électronique dans le cadre de lois dont l'application est confiée au ministre de la Consommation et du Commerce.

Hon Ms Churley: In June of this year, I introduced for first reading the Electronic Registration Act (Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Statutes), 1991. It is now my pleasure to move second reading of this bill.

As I informed the members of the House in June, the purpose of this act is to authorize the ministry to accept information in an electronic format. This will allow us to provide faster, more efficient and more accurate service to our customers.

Clients currently provide information on paper to ministry staff, who then enter it into a computer database.

Under this new legislation, customers will be able to use computers in their own offices to submit information directly into the database using electronic transmission. The system will have safeguards to ensure that users at these remote terminals may only input new information and that existing data in the system cannot be altered or manipulated.

Specific amendments to the Personal Property Security Act, 1989 will allow registrations under that act to be made electronically. This program, which provides a record of personal items pledged as security in financial transactions, will be the first ministry program to use this new capability.

In the longer term, the amendments will permit the submission of electronic information to other program areas in my ministry, such as the land registration system and databases managed by the companies branch. Computerized filing of data will be extended to these programs as soon as new systems have been developed and put into place.

This legislation will significantly improve customer service. I urge all members of the House to support second reading so that this important goal might be achieved as soon as possible.

Mr Cordiano: I am pleased to say that it is nice to see the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations putting forward efforts to become more efficient. We are all in favour of that, if only because the minister is so quick to implement this and to start this initiative at this time when in all of the other issues she has been working on, which I feel are quite important to the public, she is failing to address in as efficient and expeditious a manner as she is doing with this particular piece of legislation. That having been said, I will concentrate on some of the concerns we have.

The ministry will accept information in this way, and we will be looking carefully at all the upcoming amendments to ensure that when the system is expanded, each of the acts is not altered in any substantive and significant way with respect to those amendments.

It has been estimated by ministry officials that the personal property security registration branch receives upwards of 12,000 documents to be inputted daily. That is quite a number, and this will no doubt speed up that process quite a lot.

It has also been estimated that 50% to 60% of the clients of the ministry will use this system within a short period of time—not all, but 50% or 60% of the client base is quite a good start. Of course, the issues of concern stem largely from the fact that there are questions of security breaches which may occur.

Mr Tilson: It is a pleasure to rise today on the debate involving Bill 126, the Electronic Registration Act. As the previous speaker, the member for Lawrence, has indicated, I think we are all in favour of efficiency. We are all in favour of making the wheel move a little easier, adding a little oil to make the system run a little smoother.

We can certainly all recall the implementation of Polaris or the amendment to the Registry Act back in 1984,

I believe, which was a computerization and mapping of the registry system. It was much more complicated than this type of bill, although I believe it involved only two sections, resulting in that amendment in 1984. The principle of it of course was to make the wheel run easier in the real property section.

This bill is intended to make the wheel run a little easier in the personal property area. The bill, as the minister has indicated, authorizes the ministry to accept information in an electronic format. The first part of the bill, sections 1 to 6, establishes the legislative authority to permit persons who are required or permitted to file information under the statutes to do so in an electronic format and to transmit information electronically to a ministry database.

There are four important features of the bill, all of which, at first glance, I think we can all support. Information that is filed electronically must be in a prescribed format and must be recorded on a system of data storage that can be read by the equipment used by the ministry. The information may only be filed electronically by an authorized person. At first blush that seems to be a wonderful idea. Again, with what has been indicated as the number of registrations that occur per day, the implementation of a computerized system is obviously a good idea.

I compare this act that is being proposed, Bill 126, to Polaris. I think Polaris was hailed by all, or by anyone involved in the land registry system. It was a wonderful idea, the mapping and the computerization of the land registry system. But the difficulty—and questions have been asked of the minister in the House—is that we do not know who is running the system. We do not know how much it is going to cost. We do not know who these people are, because the system seems to have been taken away from the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations and put into the hands of an unknown group of people at an unknown cost. I have asked the minister repeatedly for information on that, and she has been unable to provide the House with this information.

My fear in supporting this bill is that I will bet this system involving personal property security is going to be treated the same way as real property and that it will be in the hands of those unknown people and cost unknown amounts of money. Until the minister comes forth with that information and produces the contract that gives us the details as to who is going to handle this entire system, I have grave difficulty in supporting this bill, not for the contents—it is a good idea; the whole idea of a computer system is good—but the whole issue of privacy.

What are these unknown people going to do with this additional information? Until we see that contract, which I believe is going to incorporate this system as well—they are going to run the land registry system, so it is very easy for them to add on to the floppy discs all the information involving personal property security. The minister will not produce the contract, and until that contract is produced, I believe the information in Bill 126 will be part of the system.

Having said that, when we talk about how information may be filed electronically by an authorized person, the words “authorized person” seem to be dealt with in a number of sections—at least two, to be specific. The first is subsection 4(4) of the bill, which talks about an authorized user:

“Information that is filed in an electronic format may be filed only by a person who is or who is a member of a class of persons that is authorized to do so by a person who has the power to authorize such filings under a designated act or, if no person is authorized under the designated act, by the minister.”

It would appear from subsection 4(4) that it is going to be at the discretion of the minister as to who this authorized person is going to be for this particular purpose of information filing under the electronic format.

I have a lot of problems with that. I think we need to know what the minister has signed away in this contract. I am talking about the contract involving Polaris, which I believe, because of the minister's silence in this House, is being expanded to personal property security. She can say it is not but she will not produce the contract, which is going to be kept secret for ever.

If the minister is going to keep that information secret for ever, who is going to run this system? It is going to be people designated by the minister at his or her discretion. Who is the minister going to designate? Maybe it refers to this unknown contract that we do not know about and that the ministry will not produce. It gives me great concern as to what the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations is up to when it will not produce a contract that submit probably includes Bill 126.

Subsection 5(2) also talks about an authorized user. I says:

“Information that is filed by direct electronic transmission of data may be filed only by a person who is or who is a member of a class of persons that is authorized to do so by a person who has the power to authorize such filing under a designated act”—I understand that if it is spelled out under a designated act—“or, if no person is authorized under the designated act, by the minister.”

I need clarification on that, and I would hope the minister would be in a position to do that. Does it tie in with this contract that she will not produce? She may stand up and say, “No, it doesn't.” With all due respect, that may be the case but we do not know, because the contract is going to be kept secret for ever. That gives me some concern with respect to the very first issue I have referred to in sections 1 to 6, which is the first part.

The second part talks about how certified copies of computer printouts of information filed electronically may be provided by the ministry and may be used in the same way as certified copies of documents that are filed. That certainly makes sense.

In running through some of these areas, I am not concerned with the improvements to the system; I am concerned with the whole issue of privacy. Who is going to control them? Are we suddenly going to have another television program that is going to tell us it is this group? I that how it is going to be produced to the House?

The minister may stand up and say: "No, it isn't. They have nothing to do with it." I can say that when Polaris—I can remember very well when the two very small sections of the Registry Act were amended. I believe it was 1984. Everyone thought it was—well, almost everyone. I suppose there are always people who object to change, but I believe most people felt it was a good idea, generally speaking, to improve the system, and I think we all do with this one as well.

But there is the issue of privacy. What is going to be compiled on this floppy disc? Who is it going to be made available to? Who is going to control it? What fees are going to be charged? Is it going to be like some jurisdictions in the United States, where information that is provided by a government for the purpose of service is made available and what was normally made available for free is now made available for, I do not know, large amounts of money. We have to watch what the government is doing when it starts making information available to unknown groups of people who are going to be making unknown profits.

The third point is, "Information...that is filed by a direct electronic transmission to a ministry database may be accessed only by a person who is authorized to do so." Again, that is the same issue. That is the section I referred to, subsection 5(2). The minister is going to decide. It is a shame we do not know what the minister is up to, what the minister has contracted away.

Fourth, the application of this act to other acts is done by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Under a designated act, regulations may be made dealing with the electronic filing of information with direct electronic transmission of data. I understand that too, and again it appears to be, generally speaking, an improvement to the system.

Although I think we support generally the philosophy of improving the system, we have the same concerns we have been raising over the past number of weeks. What is going to happen to our privacy? What is going to happen to all the information about us? It is amazing what you can put on a floppy disc—unbelievable information.

We now know that anything involved in real property is going to be on a floppy disc and made known to unknown people, for who knows what purpose. Now it would appear, under this legislation—that may be not under the control of the minister or the ministry; it may be assigned to unknown persons—that the information that is obtained, for example, might be whether you own a car and whether you have a chattel mortgage on your car.

Let's say the Royal Bank of Canada gives out loans—I will pick the Royal Bank, but not because it is one favourite bank over another—and it has a number of loans around the province on individuals' automobiles. You could press a button, Royal Bank of Canada, and all of a sudden find out what chattel mortgages the Royal Bank of Canada owns all around this province, what it holds.

I can pick a name. I can find out, for example, Marilyn Churley. I could press the name Marilyn Churley and find out what automobiles she owns. I could find out what chattel mortgages are on that. I could find out all kinds of information under the Personal Property Security Act, all at the press of a button for Marilyn Churley, all in the hands of unknown persons. It is kind of scary. Is 1984 really 1991? Has Big Brother arrived?

"The second part of the bill (section 7) amends the Personal Property Security Act, 1989...to allow financing statements and financing change statements to be tendered for registration" electronically. That is wonderful and I think, generally speaking, we can support that, but is that connected to the whole Polaris? Is it part of the great big machine that is going to be running our lives, by unknown persons who may or may not even be from this country?

"Financing statements and financing change statements that are in a prescribed format may be electronically transmitted directly to the registration system's database."

Some of the important features of this part, section 7, are, "The definitions of 'financing statements' and 'financing change statements' are changed so that the statements are in the prescribed form or format"—all very fine. Second, in addition to tendering statements for registration in traditional paper document form, where the statements are in the form of electronic data, an authorized person may tender them by direct electronic transmission. Again, we do not know who this authorized person is. It is someone the minister designates.

I always get concerned with some of the bills I see coming forth from this government on the issue of regulations and how certain regulations obviously can be changed at whim without coming back to this House. Subsection 6(2) talks about that. For example, it says that regulations may be prescribed, "(d) governing the filing of information that is presented in a prescribed electronic format; (e) governing the filing of information by direct electronic transmission."

I do not know the extent of all that. I understand what those words mean, but who controls the system? Can the Lieutenant Governor in Council, or by regulation can we simply assign the whole system over to a private group of people, which can be controlled, as we did in the land registry system? Is that how simple it is, just by a regulation or by a contract we do not know the terms of or any details of? Maybe it has already been signed. Maybe the deal has been cooked.

A lot of strange things are going on, particularly with Polaris, and it makes me very suspicious when a government is not prepared to provide that information when it seems logical that this information could be in that contract between the government and Real/Data. It makes me very suspicious, and until I see that, I am going to be suspicious whether Bill 126 is in that contract. The minister has admitted she cannot provide that information.

The program has been developed by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations as a result of an ongoing dialogue with its client groups. Who are the client groups? Is it Teranet? Who has been making these deals? Who are all these people? How did all this come about? I understand the logic of making a system smoother, but there is the issue of privacy. Who is behind all this? Why will she not tell us who is behind all this?

The primary client groups that will be affected by this legislation appear to be search companies, financial institutions and law firms. Will I be able to press a button for a particular law firm? Will I, as an individual who may be controlling Polaris, who may have control of this system, for whatever reason, be able to press a button as to what sort of business that law firm is doing, around the province or anywhere? What will I do with that information? What will this company, this unknown group of people, do with this information? Literally, the family jewels will be out in the open.

The question is, what is going on over there? What are those people doing? What have they given away and why are they doing it?

The bill has allowed for a fairly wide definition of "electronic" in order to accommodate a number of different vehicles for the information transfer, both now and in the future. I understand that, although I would note that the bill does not include the facsimile transfer of information. I hope the minister will have some comment on that subject. Facsimile transfers seem to be becoming more and more prevalent in other areas. Is there some logical reason why it cannot be used in Bill 126?

The ministry will continue to allow for information registration and retrieval in the traditional manner. I understand there is not expected to be any immediate cost savings as a result of this legislation. I hope the minister will confirm that. Is there going to be a savings to the government? Normally when you put forward a computerized type of system, you put it forward for two reasons: one is to make the system run smoother and the other is to save the taxpayers of the province money. Is that going to happen?

I hope the minister will also tell us what it is going to cost the taxpayers of this province to implement this system, when she knows there will not be any immediate cost savings. What will it cost to implement the system? What sort of equipment needs to be purchased and who will have control of that equipment? Again, is Teranet going to control the system? As I understand it, there are not expected to be any significant capital outlays within the personal property security registration branch to implement the legislation. I would like the minister to confirm in the House whether I am correct in that understanding.

I submit that this whole subject should be looked at as to what happened to the real property. Real property amendments came through, very innocently, to improve the real property registration system in Ontario, and we find it is not what we bargained for. The minister is quite right; it is an effort to improve the system, but what has she given away and who has she given it to? What assurances do we have that she has not given it away to, if not Teranet, another company such as Teranet or Real/Data?

When you start looking at that whole system, again we need to determine how these companies are determined. I need to question her more on the philosophy of whether it is a good thing and how it comes about and what it is going to cost the taxpayer of Ontario. But if, through regulation or through other some sort of secret contract, she is going to tender out this whole system in the same way she tendered out the real property system, I think we need to look at what she is going to do. The whole bidding procurement process, I submit, needs to be looked at as to what this government is doing in that area. It would appear, from simple observations in the past—and the minister at least has not refuted it—that preferred procurement breeds favouritism, influence-peddling and corruption.

We have not seen the real surface of Teranet. We have not seen what its effects are and who is involved. Maybe these allegations are unfounded, but there has been a cloud of uncertainty as to how Real/Data came into being and whether the tendering process was proper, because the contract has never been made public.

In the United States, project details are distributed and anyone can bid. Tenders are sealed and opened publicly and all details involving the winning bid are published. The current government asks for ideas and for thoughts from competing companies; then it picks one it favours. That appears to be the system.

This whole topic was dealt with by Diane Francis in the Financial Post some time ago, where she questioned the whole system of Polaris. I am referring to her article which refers to the area of Polaris the Liberals set up. They set up the Polaris Strategic Alliance, which was an agency of civil servants that must negotiate and participate as a partner in the project. In that particular instance, the alliance talked with two groups. The first was a four-member consortium led by the Royal Bank of Canada called Fimtech, whose partners are SNC Group Inc, Sharwood and Co and a group of surveyors.

The other bidder was Real/Data Ontario, whose total ownership has never been disclosed. That is the system running the real property system and which I submit, unless the minister can put forward specific information, is going to be running the personal property section established under Bill 126. It has never been disclosed. We do not know who these people are. I have asked the minister in the House who these people are; she will not tell us.

Ms Francis says, "It's rumoured to be made-up of well-connected Liberals." That is an interesting suggestion, but I do not know whether it is true. Where Ms Francis got this information, I do not know. I would hope, when articles like this come forward and what I believe are legitimate questions are asked in this House, the minister would come clean and tell us who is running the system, because I submit the same type of questions, if they pass Bill 126 and it becomes laws, could be developed there. We do not know. I do not want to suddenly hear the system is being controlled by Teranet or some other system unless this whole subject matter has been made available to us.

Ms Francis goes on, "No further details are available on Real/Data, even though it got the nod this summer to negotiate a final contract." That would have been last year. "A deal was to be signed on August 3, but was postponed amid concern Real/Data's supposed Liberal base would be turned into a patronage issue during the election." That never happened.

"Real/Data appears headed to win the huge contract," and it did. President Mohammed al-Zaibak says he will not tell who the owners are because the government does not want them revealed. They do not want them revealed because the government does not want them revealed, and the government does not want them revealed for whatever reason—secret contracts, secret discussions, secret stories. Is this a secret when they are dealing with this important issue, whether it be real property, personal property or security? They should not be keeping secrets. They should tell us how much it is going to cost and they should tell us what the effects are of the whole legislation.

Mr Mammoliti: Get on topic.

Mr Tilson: I am on topic. I am talking about how the real property system was computerized, and now we find it has been given away to unknown people. I submit that is probably what is going to happen with Bill 126. It certainly is on topic.

The Polaris land registry system, as I indicated to members, has been talked about for some time, and I am sure the real property area under Bill 126 has been part of the same type of discussions. I am sure this did not just surface overnight. Polaris was first conceived by the Ontario government in 1979 and finally completed in an amendment to the act in, I believe, 1984.

Then—and this is what I fear happened to the land system, the real property system—in July 1987 the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations was of course successful in obtaining from the government the province-wide implementation of Polaris. As I indicated a few moments ago, Strategic Alliance was created, and this has come a long way from the simple implementation of the bill that amended the Registry Act back in 1984, so I think we need to look at Bill 126.

Is Bill 126 going to go the same way as the amendments to the computerization of real property? Polaris Strategic Alliance was made an equal partner between the government and industry. The government's contribution would be the Polaris technology, the local client base, an equity investment; industry would bring to the venture technical resources, business skills, equity investment, a global marketing network and extensive marketing experience.

This invitation was extended by the Liberal government to the industry to submit proposals for the Polaris contract. As I indicated, there were two such proposals; one was Fimtech and the other was Real/Data Ontario. I have indicated the amount of expertise in Fimtech and at first blush it appears to be a highly qualified group: the Royal Bank of Canada, an engineering firm, an Ontario group of surveyors and a merchant banker, which was Sharwood and Co of Toronto. Real/Data Ontario, on the other hand, was a group of businessmen who had no workforce, no capital and no track record. That is who is running Polaris. Is that the group that is going to run the personal property security area? We do not know who they are. But when we start hearing information gradually creeping out that they have virtually no capital and certainly no track record, it gives us great concern. Is the same thing going to happen to personal property security?

The contract, as I indicated, was awarded to Real/Data Ontario, but before the Liberal government had an opportunity to sign the partnership agreement, an election was called. The deal was arranged by the Liberal government. Then, of course, the NDP came to power and it was finally signed by the former Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations on February 15, 1991.

Teranet was incorporated after that time. I am curious as to who these people are. Some of the names that I recognize appear to be members of the government, but there is a whole slew of other people. I do not know who they are. Are these the people who are running our real property section and in fact will they be running the personal property section of this province? I am going to read some of the names because I think the names need to be looked at. Some of them will be familiar to members because they are government people and obviously that was the understanding. The minister has admitted there is a partnership arrangement between Real/Data Ontario and the province of Ontario, but she will not tell us what the contract is all about, or she will not produce the contract.

These are some of the people: Philip A. Lapp, Mohammed K. al-Zaibak, Harriet Velazquez, John Sloan, David Lambden, Anne Foster, Jerzy M. Zarsycki, Patrick Monaghan, Vernon C. Parrington and Dr Marti Smye. Are there any others? Who are these people and what is the deal?

The other interesting thing that concerns me greatly is an article in the newspapers at the end of September which reported that the Ontario Provincial Police is probing this whole deal. What is going on over there? We must be assured that Bill 126 is not part of the Polaris system until we have been assured that all is well with Polaris, until we have the contract.

An article in the Toronto Sun on September 22 reported: "The OPP antirackets squad is investigating a government deal with a private company to produce a high-tech system of gathering land data. At stake is a computerized system that could be worth billions of dollars." Who is going to control it? Not this government. "The investigation began in January at the Solicitor General's request." It is a criminal investigation that is still ongoing. "A government official said the probe was prompted by a letter from Fimtech Consortium"—that was the firm that did not get the bid—"which lost the bid to go into a 50%-50% partnership with the province. Fimtech complained the process used to select the winner was unfair."

That backs up the allegations made over the last number of years as to the process that is used. Is Bill 126 going to be part of this? If it is, this whole matter should be delayed until the minister comes clean and tells us exactly what is going on in the computerization in certain areas such as real property and personal property in Ontario. We have contacts that will not be produced. We have unknown people running our real property system and we have an investigation being completed by the Ontario Provincial Police.

A quote from Mr Art Daniels, the assistant deputy minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: "Police were given full rights to investigate...and access to the files." At least someone has access to the files. I hope they are going to see this contract. I assume they will, because this House certainly cannot see a contract of the magnitude we are speaking about. The Ontario Provincial Police is looking into it.

I hope nothing serious will develop from this investigation and that it will reveal that there has been no wrongdoing by anyone, but it is of great concern to me when, Bill 126, a bill similar to that of Polaris is being put forward in this House.

I continue with this article from the Toronto Sun: "Tom Reid, a spokesman for Real/Data Ontario Inc, which won the bid, said his firm is aware of the police investigation but unclear why it is taking place." I will bet he is aware of the investigation.

A comment has been made by Mr Reid: "I have absolutely no idea what the OPP are looking for. Nobody has told me." Are we going to be jumping out of the frying pan and into the fire? We are in a mess with Polaris. Are we going to get into a bigger mess with Bill 126?

Mr Reid continues: "There was some question of a former employee of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, who no longer works there." Very mysterious. Why cannot the minister come clean and tell us what in the world is going on with the real property system?

The article continues: "The deal, initiated by the Liberal government in 1988, is to set up a computerized information system on Ontario's land transfers, deeds, property title indexing and mapping." As I indicated, there is no question that this computerization is of a much greater magnitude than that of personal property. It sounds very simple, a great idea, but who is going to control it? What assurance do we have that they are not going to give this one away too?

"It involves the computerization of property records to provide land registry offices with faster and more accurate information." It sounds very similar to Bill 126, only we are talking about personal property with Bill 126. "While the previous Liberal government initiated the process, it was not completed until last February when the NDP awarded the contract to Real/Data. To date, each partner has kicked $5 million into the project but terms of the deal require a total of $29 million from each side by the end of this year."

What is going on? There appear to be ongoing discussions. We have no idea what they are all about and this minister will not tell us anything. The minister has made what I believe to be very flippant remarks when I have asked her questions in the House on this whole subject of Polaris. She says I am basing my information on what happened in a television show, The fifth Estate, which aired October 1, 1991. It is not just that. We have an investigation by the Ontario Provincial Police under way. We had reporters making statements as much as a year ago. It continues. I think she should discard her flippant remarks and deal with it and tell us what in the world is going on.

I have a transcript of The fifth Estate, or a summary of it, and I would like to comment on a couple of statements that were made in the television program. I think they are pertinent when you are talking about what has happened to the real property section when it is very similar to what is perhaps about to happen to the personal property section with Bill 126.

This statement was made: "The new monopoly has a mandate to package and sell public information. Critics warn it is just the start of an unprecedented encroachment on privacy." That is the crunch of my opposition to Bill 126. It is the continuation of an encroachment on privacy that obviously started with the real property area and has now moved into the personal property section. Where else are we going to go to? Has Big Brother finally arrived? Will all our facts, will all the information we have about ourselves finally be on a floppy disc and be distributed to who knows whom and for what price and why?

We have enough complaints that our names all of a sudden end up on lists for receiving junk mail. How did our names get there? How do we end up on those lists? We receive junk mail daily. Our names have somehow got on somebody's lists. Maybe it has been sold by some credit card company we deal with. Who knows where our names came from? Now we know that there is going to be a data bank that is going to have practically everything known about us. Certainly with real property it is quite clear what they are going to know.

I assure members that process is going to continue with the information Bill 126 involves, whether it be loans on your car or loans on your boat. The whole process of accounts receivable could be known, the assignment of book debts, what is going on with your business, whom you are in debt to, who holds the debt, what is the portfolio of a particular financial institution. All you have to do is press a button and if you have the exclusive rights to that and no one else has, it is very easy to obtain. What are they going to do with that? Whom are they going to sell it to and at what price? How do you get to it?

This is another statement from The Fifth Estate television program: "I do not believe that this is in the public interest. I do not want my information on property or what I have or what I own on it, or any other information, to be sold to just about anybody." That appears to be what is going to happen with our land registry system. Is the same thing going to happen with Bill 126, with the personal property security? We do not know, because the minister will not tell us what is in that contract. She will not produce the contract.

Who are they going to sell this information to? Who are these people who are going to have access to it? How much money are they going to make from it and why are they doing it at my expense?

A statement was made—some members saw the program—by a young woman, a municipal systems analyst, "You can ask me the names and addresses of all the females that are between the ages of 17 and 24 years old that live alone" in a particular municipality. The implications of that give her great concern. You can find out that information because you know the ages very easily on deeds or transfers. That is all in there, so you can just press that and find out who they are and where they are. Can similar information be made available under the Personal Property Security Act by Bill 126? It gives me great concern.

Another clip came from a geographic systems analyst, who commented: "When you buy an automobile. When you register at a bank"—this is personal property security, is Bill 126; they are talking about Polaris but they are knowing how easily it can be expanded to other areas—you put down your name, address and postal code. Those are all geocoded to the centre of your block where you live. And all that data, by some companies, is stockpiled—for the purposes of marketing and analysing."

It is scary. All our personal information is going to be made available to an unknown group of people and we do not know what they are going to do with it, because we do not know what is in the contract. The minister can stand up and assure us: "Everything is going to be very fine. This company is a fine, reputable company," even though it has never done this sort of thing before and has absolutely no track record, but she will not tell us what this group of people is going to do with this type of information and similar information under the Personal Property Security Act.

Polaris is a project that was started in 1982. That is when it was launched. They used that as a pilot test program. They talked about how it meant, to use a quote from the television program, "transferring a couple of hundred years of paperwork to a computer system that can store information and maps a lot more efficiently." That is what Polaris was all about. I think we all understand that. You go to the registry office, you pull out an abstract book and you run down the various pages. Polaris would stop all that, laboriously entering the entries in the abstract book, the pulling out of instruments and studying them.

Similarly, under the Personal Property Security Act, the computerization of that system: I must confess I hope the system has improved. When I want to do a particular search on a name, I phone up—this is a complaint, if members will allow me to digress for a brief moment—I call up the registry office on the phone to do a search under the Personal Property Security Act on a particular individual, where we may be buying an automobile and we may be ordering a certificate. Quite often the information that comes back—maybe it is just me, maybe I have just had bad luck, but in many of the situations there is a language problem. I have trouble understanding what is being told to me on very complicated information, particularly when you are listing a series of numbers for the registration number. Some of these people cannot even pronounce the numbers.

The concern with Polaris, which expands into the personal property system, is that you take all the information that is to be used, inscribed in the ledgers and you put it on a computer and it will be available at the tap of a finger. The same thing will happen under Bill 126. That information will be quite similar. It will be a gold mine of information to some group of people. Again, we do not know, because the bill does not say that. The bill does not say this information is going to be given to a group of private individuals, but neither did the amendment to the Registry Act in 1984. It did not say that either. All of a sudden, between the Liberals and the NDP, they cook up a contract that is signed unbeknownst to anyone else—we do not know what is in the contract or what the terms are—giving away all our land registry information. Is the same thing going to happen, unbeknownst to anyone, with our personal property security legislation?

Dr Lapp, one of the individuals who incorporated Teranet, was on the television program and said: "Let's be clear as to why the government went out at all on this thing to the private sector. If it was just to implement Polaris in Ontario then they could have done it in-house. But there was more to the vision than that. The vision was to develop a LRIS industry—a land-related information system industry in Ontario and to create the jobs that go with it."

We do not know what jobs are going to be created by this system. We do not know anything, because the minister will not tell us. She just says: "Trust us. Everything's okay." It is very suspicious when someone says that to us. It is our job as members of the opposition to find out what in the world those people are doing. If we have to do it through Bill 126, then we are going to do it through Bill 126. Somehow we are going to find out that information, so she might as well come clean and tell us, because that is how we may or may not be assured that she is not going to give away all our personal property security information in the same way that she gave away all our registry system.

The show did talk about the contract. Someone on the show did see the contract, because some terms were mentioned. This is the scary part, what has been summarized in this contract. They talk about Mohammed al-Zaibak as president and chief executive officer of Real/Data Ontario Inc. It became clear in the television program that he runs the company and that Dr Phillip Lapp, the individual I referred to a moment ago and who is referred to in Teranet, is the chairman.

The technical companies which originally promised to support the project have now bought shares. I would like to know about that. I would like to know who these people are. As has been indicated in this House as a result of questions to the minister, Real/Data and the government have given birth to Teranet, a company which will have a monopoly on the land registry system. Will Teranet have a monopoly on the personal property registration system as well? Will Teranet know everything? Will Teranet be Big Brother?

The program quoted some of the provisions in the agreement which gave Real/Data 60% of the common shares of Teranet. The government gets 40%. The private sector controls the monopoly. The government and Teranet split the profits 50-50. It is very strange. Before the government had all the profits. The Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations was the only ministry in Ontario that made a profit. They have given it away.

The provisions, as relayed by the TV program The Fifth Estate, state that Real/Data will pay the province for Polaris out of future registry revenues. Whatever it makes in the future, that is how it will pay for this. Is the same system going to occur with respect to personal property, with respect to Bill 126? This is an astounding fact, an astounding provision which I hope the minister will deny or admit. Better yet, she should produce the contract and establish to us that this does not exist.

The government guarantees Teranet a minimum revenue flow. What does that mean? What is the minimum revenue flow? How many millions? What is the profit that the government is guaranteeing and what is that going to cost the taxpayer? Is there a similar scheme set up with respect to Bill 126?

Teranet may make agreements with any government or agency for new data sources. That is astounding. That means Teranet can go anywhere. Its data bank is going to be indescribable. What they will know about the private individual in this province scares the heck out of us, and if it does not, it should. When we start realizing the information that Teranet can get in its exclusive hands, whether from the government, assessment departments, land registry offices or the data bank that is going to be created by Bill 126, it is astounding what it will know.

It is all in the hands of a select group of people. What are they going to charge you to get that information and who are they going to give it to? Freedom of information and the restrictions put forward by the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act have become a joke as a result of what this government has done.

Finally, the most astounding section in the agreement if it is true—and the minister can prove it is not true by producing the contract, which she has indicated she is not going to do—is that both sides agreed to keep details of the agreement secret for ever. Can members believe that? A government has entered into a contract involving our land registry system and probably our personal property system and the provisions of that agreement are going to be kept secret for ever. The people of this province will not know what has happened, who they are dealing with or who has got it. Has Big Brother arrived? I hope not.

There was another quote on the television program which made the interesting observation that this is a government service we should have, and indeed it is. Indeed it is a simple system with respect to personal property, whether it be under Bill 126 or any simple system of obtaining information other than the laborious efforts that exist now. Obviously that needs to be improved. I emphasize that this is a government system we should have.

One of the people who was interviewed in the television program said, "I don't think they should be getting into bed with private enterprise to attempt to continue rendering this service." The emphasis is on the word "service." People have to understand government service versus government business—two different things. Government business and government service are two different things. This is a service to the public, so you do not assign it away to some unknown group of people.

There were some statements made on the television program that the old registry books have always been regarded as a service to the public you could take for granted for a nominal fee. Then it goes on to talk about the brave new world of Polaris. The system will become a business driven by the need for profit. Teranet is in there to make money. They are in there to make a profit. Are they going to do the same thing with personal property security? Are they going to do the same thing with Bill 126? Are they in there to make a profit?

The right to information will inevitably be affected by the ability to pay. But that is not the biggest concern. Critics fear that some day customers, for the right price, will be able to direct the nimble fingers of the computer into the far corners of our privacy.

I ask the minister to tell us how in the world she is going to assure us that this will not happen when she will not produce the contract with Real/Data Ontario, the partnership agreement that was set up even before Teranet came into existence. How is she going to assure us that our privacy, whether it be in land registry or personal property, will not be taken away completely?

It goes on to state, "You can see that we have the room number, owner's name, mailing address, city, province, postal code, year of birth, month of birth and school support identifier, and that is just some of the information available on the assessment database." It certainly is, because now we are going to be into Bill 126. What is available under Bill 126? What is available under the Personal Property Security Act? A whole slew of information whether you own a car, what the car is, what the debt on it is, what your indebtedness is to an individual or an institution. It will tell you all kinds of information about your business and what sort of financial difficulties your business is into. Specific details all at the press of a button. You can press the name of Marilyn Churley and instantaneously find out everything about her.

I would like to read one of the final statements from the television program on this subject. It has to do with how the computerization of land registry adds to what is already an encroachment on our privacy. I submit the same type of statement can be made of personal property, because this is another stage in the computerizing of everything. Who is going to control that computer? Who is going to have access to that keyboard?

The market for this information is enormous. Take what is on these records: your name, your address, your mortgage value—and you can probably link that through address and other information to other databases—the number of children you have, possibly your income, and on. It is a wonderful marketing database. Give anyone that database for a long period of time and they will sell it to everyone across the country, if they are free to do so.

The issue is, it is very powerful. It is great for some administrative purposes. The danger is, it is now in the hands of the fox in the henhouse, and not in the hands of the farmer looking after the farm—a very interesting analogy. Who is the fox in the henhouse and what are they doing to our land registry system and our personal property system? Who are they?

I see the minister feverishly writing things down over there. I am glad she is doing that, unless she is writing about something else. I have a couple of questions for her and I hope that some time throughout this process she will in a position to answer them. I can tell you, Mr Speaker, she does not answer them today, eventually I am going to ask the questions of her, so she might as well make notes.

I would like to know the management of the Polaris project, and I say that because I believe it is tied in with Bill 126, the whole implementation of computerization of the personal property system. I am concerned as to who is running Polaris and how they got there. Is there going to be a similar process with the Personal Property Security Act, Bill 126? If not, if they are going to have another process, I would like to know about the process. I would like to know how Real/Data got there, and if not Real/Data, how another company is going to get there to run Bill 126, the personal property computerization.

My question of course is about the selection of Real/Data Ontario as the government's joint venture partner and the Teranet Land Information Services Inc, the Strategic Alliance Corp created to implement the Polaris subproject to market Polaris technology internationally and to develop a competitive land registration information industry in Ontario. We know that is in existence. What we do not know is what is to come. I do not want to hear about this after it has happened. That is what happened with real property. Is the same thing going to happen with personal property? Are we going to hear about it after it has happened?

More specifically, I am going to ask the minister some more about this process. I believe it is in order, Mr Speaker, because it is an extension of Polaris. The terms and conditions of the partnership agreement between the Ontario government and Real/Data Ontario Inc, signed February 15, 1991—I want to know whether the contents of Bill 126 are in that agreement. I want to see the terms of the contract. I want to see the contract, and if the minister cannot produce it, she had better have a good reason other than a clause that says it is being kept secret for ever. That is not an answer.

I would like to know whether the process that resulted in the selection of Real/Data Ontario as a partner was conducted in conformity with and whether Real/Data Ontario satisfied the criteria established by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations for the selection of a private sector partner. If the same is going to happen with the computerization of Bill 126, I do not want this government to make a mistake twice. If they have got a group in there that should not be there, let's hope it is not going to happen the second time. I do not want Big Brother in the province of Ontario.

I would like the minister to provide an opinion as to whether the selection—and she must know. I realize the Liberal government was the one that brought this forward, but was it politically influenced? I would like to know about that. I would like to know how it happened. Can she not tell us? She does not seem to have a proper process of rendering. She does not seem to have a system. It is almost like eeny, meeny, miney, mo; who is my best friend?

I do not like to make those types of allegations, but it concerns me when I see a company that has very few qualifications that have been revealed to us. If they do have qualifications, I would hope the minister would reveal them, but they do not appear to have the qualifications to be running a gigantic land registry system.

If that has happened, I want to know what is going to happen with the provisions under Bill 126. Are we simply going to have some regulations passed one day or some mysterious unknown contract that is going to be signed in the middle of the night on terms that we will not know anything about?

The Polaris project is worth an estimated $5 billion to privatize and computerize the land registry system in Ontario. I would like to know—and I hope the minister is going to tell us before we proceed too much further into this legislation—what it is going to cost. There is a certain amount of computerization already, but what other costs are there?

Although on the one hand I think it makes the wheel run smoother, there have been some criticisms directed towards Polaris. With the computerization of the land registry system, one can say that errors will be eliminated. But some evidence has come out of certain areas that says this is not necessarily the case. Who is running the machine? If you have a typing error, whether it be in the registration number or the description of a name, and it is going into the computer system as described in Bill 126, that can have serious ramifications, human error entering into the computer. Once it is in there, if it is accurate, it is going to be wonderful. It is going to be wonderful, accurate machinery as opposed to the system we have now. But it is getting it there.

How efficient is the proposal put forward by the bill going to be? It has even been stated that errors are more numerous with computers than by hand—this is with respect to Polaris because that is all the information we have; she will not tell us anything else—than with the abstract books. Another criticism with respect to Polaris has been—the same criticism, I submit, can be applied towards Bill 126—that automation does not customize the system on an individual basis, as we have now.

Those are my concerns. I am winding up. I have finished my submissions. I support the principle of improving the system. I have grave fears as to what it is going to do to our privacy.

Mr Cousens: I would like first of all to thank the member for Dufferin-Peel for his remarks. I think it is rather excellent when someone has done the research by examining the bill in such detail and has indeed shed an awful lot of light on this matter.

What I hear the honourable member saying is that although the philosophy of the bill and the approach being taken have much merit, there are some concerns that need to be raised. I would like to acknowledge the concerns that were being echoed by this member when he talked about the Polaris project and the way in which the government has taken that. Almost by fiat they have made something out of nothing. Now we have an example where the government has placed the power, control and information in the hands of private industry and out of the hands of government. The concern the member raises, that it could happen with other forms of information, really becomes a matter of concern to all of us. When the honourable member raises these points, I think they are worthy of very serious consideration by this House.

Very often what happens is that the government, in coming forward—I am going to be speaking to this bill separately when an occasion arises—just assumes that because the idea sounds good on top it is okay. Underneath it there seems to be an awful lot more that goes on that really needs to be considered.

I would just like to go on record and acknowledge with appreciation the kind of leadership the member for Dufferin-Peel has taken. The remarks he gave really struck a chord with me. I hope the kind of thinking he represents will cause the ministry to think more seriously about some of the ways in which this bill can be implemented, and that has to do with the way in which regulations are developed.

Mr Tilson: I have pretty well had my say because I think we will be having—

Hon Mr Pouliot: Thank your colleague.

Mr Tilson: I will thank him because I think he certainly is appreciative of the concern we have that you are giving away the privacy of individuals across this province. You should be concerned yourself, Minister, as to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr Farnan): Order, please. I ask the member to address the Chair.

Mr Tilson: Yes, Mr Speaker. I will only reiterate what I have said. My major concern is not with the attempt to improve the system. I congratulate this government for attempting to improve the system, but we should be continuing to try to improve the systems we have, whether it be in the registration system of land registry or personal property or any other type of system. We should be continuing to try to improve those systems. At the same time, we should be analysing them and wondering what other problems are being caused. Is the system going to be made worse? I have raised a couple of questions about accuracy when entering information into a computer and the grave financial issues there can be if the information has been put into the machine incorrectly, and people will not even know it.

More important, my concern is with respect to the whole area of privacy. Quite frankly, I do not feel we should be allowing Big Brother to move into Ontario.

Mr Cordiano: I want to make a few further remarks with respect to this bill. I want to deal with two issues initially with respect to concern over security breaches, which has been pointed out and I am sure the minister is aware of.

I want to point out to the minister that even though the flow of information will be one way, the legislation does not address the whole question of security and what will be in place to ensure security is a priority. We want to assure ourselves that security will be a priority and that the minister will be addressing this at some point in the future. Earlier in her comments the minister made mention of her awareness of this and that efforts will be made to ensure that security is not breached and that it will be a priority.

The other thing is that if there is a security breach, one of the implications is with respect to liability for such breaches and who is going to be liable. That is very much a concern.

The other concern I have with respect to security and breaches of security is that if there is a technical failure within the system there could be a loss in priority. Creditors might lose their priority with respect to personal property secured under the Personal Property Security Act due to computer failure of some kind. That is an important and crucial consideration for dealing with financial matters and setting priority for creditors. I think the bill should deal specifically with who is liable for economic loss as a result of such failure. Is it the ministry's responsibility to cover that kind of financial loss? If so, then it should be detailed more specifically. I think the minister wants to address that at some point.

Finally, I want to say briefly that in her role as Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations she should start taking action on some of the things that were promised with respect to the consumer protection code, the bill on rights that was supposed to come forward and we have not seen anything yet.

Also, as I tried to point out to the minister in a question last week some time, she should please give the Ontario Film Review Board more direction with respect to approving films for certification. It is not good enough to allow the police to go in and lay charges—

Interjection.

Mr Cordiano: The films they are laying charges with respect to have been approved by the minister's own board, and I think the minister wants to be careful with that.

We also have concerns at this time with the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations with respect to closings of various Brewers' Retail outlets. I know the minister is going to take some interest in ensuring that consumers have a good selection and have access to Brewers' Retail outlets. I have not had an opportunity to ask her a question and I just wanted to get that in there as one of my concerns. The minister should bring this initiative forward. We want to support her in that effort.

The Acting Speaker: We have been quite generous in allowing the member to stray somewhat from the debate and I would encourage members following in the debate to focus on the issue.

Mr Cousens: We are dealing with Bill 126, An Act authorizing the Filing of Information in an Electronic Format under Statutes administered by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I understand this is probably the first bill brought forward by the minister. I am pleased to see that she is bringing one forward that has such implications to help a province enter the 21st century.

What we are talking about is the ability to be able to use the computer as a way of entering the information needed for registration of all the different forms that are needed across Ontario. There are excellent examples where in fact the system is working well now. Anyone who gets his driver's or his vehicle licence goes to the agents across Ontario and is able to see a system that follows the dealers who are responsible for those—I think we call them dealers or agents of the province of Ontario—to make the data required for that person's driver registration and enter them into the system. Then they are transmitted to the Queen's Park bank of computers. The whole system now begins to make sense.

As we take the logic of this kind of bill to its next level, it really is inviting other areas of the government to start doing the same kind of streamlining of administration that will allow them to take advantage of electronic data processing. I see that as the whole idea behind this bill and support it for a large number of reasons.

I think there is no doubt that accuracy should improve. The amount of data that will be in the data banks will assist not only the people responsible for each of the areas in which the registration is done—they are probably entering most of the data on computers right now—but when you have them entered right at the beginning point, then the data are going to be there and you can do a far greater analysis of them as you go through them: how many more registered this year or last year, what the payments are, just the whole pile of extraneous data that will then be available to the government in order to assess and monitor each of these different registration groups effectively. Indeed, as this bill is structured, we are talking about one particular area that is going to be subjected to the first test, the Personal Property Security Act, and then I start raising my questions.

I have a number of negatives to raise with regard to this bill, but on the positive side, as one who has been involved with the data processing industry for well over 25 years, I understand how the industry works. I understand the way in which government really has to start taking advantage of it. If anything is a surprise, it is the length of time it has taken the government to get to this stage. That really almost typifies government at its best and worst. I do not want to see government leading the pack so far ahead of the rest of the industry and the world that the government is setting the pace for things.

The government has done that on salaries for its civil servants so that in fact we have outpriced people in private industry, because government is really one of the highest-paying groups in Ontario. It traditionally has been and I think that is a danger, especially when you have such job security. You wonder then why government pays such high amounts. There are examples where government has gone ahead and led the pack, and I feel that on this subject it is a little bit behind.

It is behind by virtue of the fact that the capability is there now for a government to collect its data and keep them private. The security around those systems is such that no one, other than those who are authorized, is going to be able to obtain or use the data or work with the information. That really has to be very important. Anyone who is going to be getting into the data files and the databases that are in the government systems really has to be an authorized person who has the security clearances that permit him to get into the data and make changes. Again, if you are going to make changes to the data, that is another level of security.

The whole system is such that you can be protective, protecting first of all the interests of those in our province who are being served under the different groups that will now be entered into the systems in a computerized way, but also protecting the rights of the government to have the proper control over its data. All those things become key. They are essential to having a system function the way it should. We are in a position now where the sophistication of the systems, the level of experience that has been obtained in other systems and the capability of vendors in the computer field to provide equipment and services to assist the government in doing this all begin to make good sense.

As we look at it, I also believe it is going to be a value-for-dollar thing. There is no doubt that as the government begins to computerize, there are going to be benefits. Not only the additional information, but the dollar benefits should certainly accrue. When the minister has her chance to respond to my comments, I would be very interested in knowing the total dollar evaluation. Anything the government is doing should have a thorough analysis of the cost benefits it is going to have, and I would be most interested in knowing how that will apply, particularly to the Personal Property Security Act.

I would be interested in knowing how many dollars are being spent for new computer equipment. What is the duration of the equipment? How long is it going to last and be in place? What is the cost of the software and the installation of all the packages and services that are going to go around it? Is it going to require additional computer equipment, not only at the local level, but also at the provincial level?

I am so pleased to see the member for Mississauga South come. There is one of the most law-abiding citizens of Ontario, especially when she is doing service in the House. It is a little aside, but I cannot help it, Mr Speaker, when she comes by and does not have to be helped up the step.

As we talk about this, I want to see an economic analysis of this bill. If we are in a position to see that and understand that the minister is not going to do this for nothing—dollars are going to have to be spent—what are the savings? If the minister is able to delineate with a really clear sense of what those dollars are and what the future dollars are going to be—over a five-year period would be sufficient for me; I am sure she would have required that as minister—it would be important for us to have it in the House.

As I look across, I do not see the minister nodding that she has that information or that she is going to be able to make it available, and that gives me cause for great concern. If she does not, maybe we should see that the bill is tabled for a while and then brought back when the minister has that information. For us not to have that kind of information right now—obviously, with the implementation of this bill, dollars are spent. I know the New Democrats have a way of spending money when they do not have it. They are just absolutely fantastic at building a deficit when Ontario cannot afford more of a deficit. Is this another opportunity for them to explain away the big deficit of $9 billion, $10 billion or $12 billion in Ontario?

I do not think we should be doing anything here any more without understanding—we have seen it under the Liberals. We saw how they spent the money and did not get much for it. That is why you are all sitting over in opposition now. You have finally had the lesson taught to you by the province. Part of the problem we are facing is the fact that you just did not know how to control the money while you were in power. You ended up saying you were going to have a surplus and you did not.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The member will address his remarks through the Chair.

Mr Cousens: That is a good idea, Mr Speaker. I will address them to the Chair. I would hope you have more control over the government than I do, since you are one of the members of the New Democrats, and that you will be in a position to—

Interjection.

Mr Cousens: Well, the honourable minister has a black suit on today—

Hon Mr Pouliot: Have respect for the Chair. Wow, I can't believe this.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I think the member will recognize the neutrality of the Chair and refrain from such comment.

Mr Cousens: I just wonder how the honourable member in the Chair is going to be voting on this when it comes time to go into the House and when we—the member is in the Chair right now. I could be sitting around here 20 minutes or two days or two weeks from now and the honourable member, who is the Speaker at this point in time, could be out of that Chair and sitting over here. At that point the honourable Speaker becomes one who does have a partisan interest in this.

Interjection.

Mr Cousens: I am staying on the subject.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I do not think we have to go through a lesson in this. I will remind the member that once in the Chair, neutrality prevails, and I would appreciate it if the member recognized that fact. It is essential to the proper running of this House.

Mr Cousens: I think the Speaker understands his job very well. I also understand the reality of it, so we will just keep that intact.

We have raised the point, and I just cannot let it die. I looked for some kind of clear, concise statement from the minister on the financial implications of Bill 126, and I would be very reticent not to bring that forward. Anything we do in this government has some kind of financial implications, and I just have a sense that the government, when it comes forward with a good idea, may not in fact have done its homework and put together the financial scheme of things. That is part and parcel of the point I am trying to raise. I am saying that as someone who supports the whole idea of moving to data processing and using electronic technology, as we are capable of doing, but I also believe it is to the taxpayers' benefit to know just what it is going to cost and what is going to be done.

That leads to my second point. The illustration that is used in this bill, the Personal Property Security Act, is the first of a number of areas that are going to be computerized. I would like to have a sense of what other areas are going to be tackled by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. In fact, I would like to have a clear statement from the ministry indicating how many different areas there are within the ministry that could be computerized and could eventually fall under the terms of this bill.

We will then know that, okay, these are all the different registration acts, whether it is going to be real estate agents or insurance agents or whatever, and that they all fall into the category in which registrations will be computerized in this way. I am not disagreeing that they should be. I just want to know what is going to be included in this bill.

I think the Legislature should have had this kind of background information given to it prior to this being presented to the House now. It was tabled for first reading on June 13, and the kind of background information that would make it very easy for us to deal with it in the Legislature today has not been made available.

I do not blame the New Democrats for this, nor do I blame the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. She is a new minister and I know how conscientious she is, but I do not think anyone has been giving the kind of information to this House that should have been given. The government sure does not have a good example with the Liberals, so it should not rely on them for a good example. The Liberals have shown us their arrogance for a number of years, and the day we come along and mimic them, as the government is now doing, is not something it should be trying to do.

And so, Mr Speaker—we have a stern Speaker here, do we not? But I am very pleased that you are in the chair and not up behind me. It is hard to be nice to a Speaker who is going to come along and cut me off at any minute.

The issue still stands. The New Democrats have not learned any lessons from the bad deeds of the Liberals before them and are continuing to operate this government in the way in which they were so critical of the Liberals when they ran things. All I am asking this minister to start to do—it is not too late. The response that the honourable minister will be able to give to my remarks and those of the member for Dufferin-Peel and others who have participated in this debate will be enough to allow her to give us the kind of background information we should have had at the very beginning.

I am saying then that we would know in detail what other areas of government are going to be computerized in this way, the sequence that will be followed, and the kinds of dollars that are going to be required to implement each of them. Are we going to be able to use the one system, or is it going to be many different systems? Are we going to have a number of different types of software bought or implemented by Ontario government employees or by outside employees in order to do it?

I would like to have a sense of just what the long-range projection is. In other words, over the next five years, who se is going to be computerized in this way, how much cost is going to be associated with it and what are the benefits that are going to accrue to the province when that is done?

I have to re-emphasize, because the memory span of the minister or others may be such that they are going to think I am opposing the bill for that reason, that this is not the case. I am going to oppose the bill for another reason, but what I would like to do is have—

Interjection.

Mr Cousens: There are a number of things you have to get out on the table before you start voting. There is another issue that really touches on something that the honourable member for Dufferin-Peel mentioned earlier, but I stay on this: If the minister is in a position of having a list of all those different areas that are going to be computerized, I would be very grateful if she would even pass it along to me so that I could just refer to it.

Certainly I made the point earlier that we are pushed to approving bills in this Legislature without all the information we need. That really touches on my third point. The information we do not have and are not going to have as it pertains to this bill has to do with what the minister can do at her whim at any point in the future.

Buried in this bill—and it is not a long one; we have seen many that are longer—on page 3 is subsection 6(3). Let me read it first and then comment on it: “A regulation made under a designated act may apply to some or all of the information or documents that may be filed under the act.” I interpret that particular paragraph as meaning that a regulation can be a change in plan, a new design or a new twist or turn that the minister decides to have with regard to this bill.

Subject to the counsel of her advisers, the deputy minister and those who are involved in her ministry, the minister may come back with a regulation that says: “I’ve decided I want to make a change in how this bill is going to be implemented. I’ve decided that I do not want this information to be under the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations any more. I would therefore like to suggest that this bill now refer to a private group such as the group we have referred to in Polaris or to some other group that is no longer under the control of the Ontario government.” So all the information that is coming into the Ontario government now through the collection of registry information of different types, as it will pertain to this bill, would at that time be directed not to be handled by the Ontario government, but by some other agency.

Who knows how this agency would be created or structured? If it is like the agency that has been set up under Polaris, there is a secret agreement between the province and a private industry group in which the province has shares. The group has total control of the information and has an agreement from the province in which it is going to be subsidized for the services it is going to be providing. Are we then in a position that in the future, on a whim or at whatever time the minister decides to do it, the ministry can say, “We’ve decided that we’re going to send this off to someone else to look after”?

If there is anything that concerns me, it has to do with the control of information. Control of information is one of the most essential things giving people a sense of knowing that their privacy is protected, that what they stand for and what they are all about is not public domain. When the public has a sense of controlling private information, that is not the way it should be.

For instance, one of the things we have seen protected as much as anything is the patient information in the health care system in Ontario. My wife is a health care professional who carefully protects the information of all her patients in a way that ensures it is personal, it is private, it is secure. Those data and that information is very closely monitored and controlled. It is not something that can ever find its way outside the service area of the patients and the system for which she is responsible. That kind of protection is sacred to the extent that patients know their records are confidential and protected.

I have a sense that people feel much the same way about their own personal data as they are collected, maybe not to the same extent but at least to some degree. They have a sense of trust when the Ontario government is responsible for information pertaining to their property records, their personal records, their professional status in associations, whatever it might be. There is a host of those kinds of registrations in which people are required by law to have up-to-date licences and permits in order to transact business or to carry out their professions which are administered and controlled by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I am not even sure how many there are. There might be 100, there might be 200, but there are many of them. The information that is within those files has to be protected from outside viewers so that only those people who are authorized to deal with the information and only those people who are privileged, such as people within the ministry, are given the permission and consent to deal with it.

Let me just make one comment here. I do not think in this House we have a chance to compliment the civil service in the province sufficiently. I think we are very fortunate that the bureaucracy, some 80,000 or 90,000 people who serve and support the laws that are passed in this House who are there in all the different ministries, are doing an outstanding job in administering the will of this Parliament.

As they have gone through the different governments that have come and gone over a period of time, the one staying power and the one continuing good fact is that the civil service of Ontario continues to provide a very high level of service. The quality of that service, the commitment they give to quality—I have used the word “service” again—to back up and support the people of Ontario is something I personally would like to go on record again as supporting. I know that the honourable member for Nipissing, the leader of our party, and our caucus believe that Ontario is well served by the civil service.

Mr Drainville: Hear, hear.

Mr Cousens: It is not for us to criticize them for the fact that they are working with a government that is misdirected and is doing the wrong thing, but it is their job to—

Interjection.

Mr Cousens: When I had a “hear, hear” from the honourable member for Victoria-Haliburton, I just had to come along and give him a tough time. Is the member disagreeing with me?

Mr B. Murdoch: Yes.

Mr Cousens: There may be a few examples where others might not feel as good about it, and there are always—I am dealing with the bill. The Speaker started waving the bill. I saw something white in front of his face. I did not know what it was.

Nothing is perfect, but I have to say that the existing systems have worked well, not because of those people, the government, but because the bureaucracy and the system have been able to make it function.

I have to say I do not know why it continues to cost us so much to have such a large civil service. I would think that when we are implementing all the data processing and high-tech services, we could see some costs coming down. I know in the first five years I was elected, from 1981 to 1985, we saw a certain amount of attrition and the size of the bureaucracy went down by 5,000 or 7,000 people. When the Liberals came to power, it went up by 5,000 or 7,000. Now with the New Democrats in power, they are adding more and more civil servants.

Notwithstanding that, I would hope one of the cost benefits that is going to come out of the kind of high-tech revolution that is starting to hit Ontario is that we will see some reduction in costs for bureaucracy and the number of people it takes to run these systems. When you get away from manual systems to computerized systems, surely at that time you are going to derive benefits that were not there before, not just the speed of getting information, not just the accuracy of the information, not just the fact that you have got it at your fingertips, but also the fact that you do not have to enter it many times over, that you do not have to make the corrections many times over, that in fact you have it entered at the field level once and it should be correct throughout the system. I do believe there should be some reason within this bill that can show, once it is implemented, a reduction in the number of people within the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations from the number there today, and that indeed could be one of the cost benefits.

I was off on a bit of a tangent there and I do apologize, but it does happen once in a while. I do not mean to take up the time of the House, but at least one of us can compliment the bureaucracy. I know the honourable member for Victoria-Haliburton happens to agree with most of what I am saying and I am really grateful for that, except when I start criticizing his minister for this one section in the bill.

Why do they not, when we take this to committee, give serious consideration to taking away that power they are trying to give themselves with this bill? Why not back off? It is the kind of thing that the Premier, when he was in opposition, would have had a great deal to say about, because at that time he had an awful lot to say about how government was functioning and was so critical of everything that went on. Now that he is sitting on the other side of the House, he has a new sense of just how things should be and in fact has forgotten 99% of what he was saying when he was in third-party status or opposition status. Now he is in government, he is going to take full advantage of the power he has for the next three and a half or four years to achieve whatever ends he wants.

I am concerned when government starts having overriding powers over the whole administration of the system without bringing it back to this Legislature for debate and further consideration. What they are in fact giving the minister in this bill, through this small paragraph, is additional power to change the bill, almost at will, so we are not then in a position to really know what she is going to do. Is she at that time going to refer it to an outside agency such as Polaris? That is the point the member for Dufferin-Peel was raising earlier.

I just have to challenge the minister in regard to the regulation. If she is able to give us some satisfaction as to what that regulation is going to read like, that would be helpful. That leads us to the whole question of all the regulations surrounding this bill. I would be interested in knowing—this is another question for the minister to put on her list of remarks to make in responding to it—are the regulations in place for this bill, so that the House can know what they are?

Often what happens is that the bill is brought before this Legislature, we consider it, and the very regulations that are going to implement it and bring it to reality are not developed until some time after we have given third reading to it. What astonishes me is that the very regulations that are going to be the rationalization for the bill, the interpretation it is given and the way it is going to be implemented come out much after the fact. I think the Legislature should have those kinds of data before the fact, rather than after it. So I would very much like to know the status of the regulations as they are being prepared by the ministry.

The one fundamental issue I want to deal with is the concern as to the control of the data of people in Ontario. If there is one thing that has to be kept secure and guaranteed that it is not going to get into the hands of private enterprise or people other than government, then that becomes the matter we have to address in this House. We are dealing with an age in which people are worried enough about Big Brother having more information about them than should be possible. Once you start having information on computers, you are in a position to have that information used for a wide variety of purposes, not just for the ministry's purposes, but if it gets into the wrong hands, for solicitation and all kinds of things. If a criminal source got hold of that information, it could give them tremendous powers.

I would be very interested in knowing that the information that is going to be on the systems here in Ontario, according to this bill, is going to be 100% secure and is going to be 100% controlled by the province. I am satisfied that computer technology is in a place now where we to guarantee that kind of security. I know there are databases in which we can have rings and protection around them. There are many ways in which those systems can be designed and developed so that strangers and people who are not qualified to touch those data cannot reach them. I am satisfied that can be done.

I am satisfied as well that the Provincial Auditor, in his next report, I understand, is going to have some discussion on the way in which computerization has been done in Ontario. I think the Provincial Auditor will continue to monitor just how data are being protected for people in this province. I hope the minister can make some commitment that underlines the importance of that kind of security. The second aspect is the whole issue of—

Mrs Marland: This is so boring.

Mr Cousens: Mr Speaker, I have just been wounded. I cannot believe what the honourable member for Mississauga South has just said, and I have tried to be so nice to her this week.

Mrs Marland: The honourable member said he would help me up the stairs.

Mr Cousens: I was just kidding. The point I am going to close with is the best interests of the province of Ontario, that the data is not going to get into private hands the way in which the Polaris project has. That is the issue my friend the member for Dufferin-Peel has referred to.

If anyone watched The Fifth Estate on October 1, they indicated in "The Data Game," which is what they entitled it, that a new monopoly has been formed that has a mandate to package and sell public information. Critics of that program have indicated that it is just the start of an unprecedented encroachment into privacy, and I want to make sure that the privacy of our Ontario public is protected by whatever regulations and whatever actions can be taken by this government.

There is much to be said on this. We are inclined to support the philosophy of the bill, but because the bill gives such unprecedented and continuing power to the minister to make decisions by regulation outside the House and without having to come back to the Legislature for approval, it is important for us to make sure that those decisions are made here, where they should be made, and not in the privacy of some boardroom of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

To that end, we have concerns. We would be very interested in seeing a response by the minister on the issues I have raised.

Mrs Marland: I want to comment on the honourable member for Markham's contribution to this debate, because his contribution has been significant. It has had very remarkable content, and in spite of his humorous asides, I think his speech this afternoon has been very important.

This is a bill that is of great concern to those of us in this caucus, and it might have been of great concern to the members in the government caucus had they had the opportunity to express their understanding of the bill as we have in opposition. In normal rotation, after the member for Markham spoke, there would have been an opportunity for a member of the government benches to make comments, even in this two-minute portion we are presently in. I notice that nobody rose to the challenge to address the comments either to the bill or to those comments made by the member for Markham. It is probably because the member for Markham is a particularly articulate and able speaker that no one could rise to make comments on what he had said. I am sure the member for Markham has expressed so well everybody's concerns that what will now happen is that everyone in this Legislature, including the government members, will see fit to vote against this bill because they share the same concerns.

Mr Tilson: I think the people of Markham should be pleased with the performance of the member for Markham this afternoon. This is a very difficult topic, the whole subject of the computerization of the personal property security system, and it takes a certain amount of knowledge, which the member for Markham has, to properly summarize the concerns he has with this specific bill.

The information he has requested, and which I have requested in my remarks, is the whole issue of cost: the cost of implementation, the cost of where this government is taking us with Bill 126, because that has yet to be mentioned.

The second point the member for Markham referred to is, what else is going to be computerized? Where is the government taking us? What path down the Yellow Brick Road is the government taking us in the whole issue of computerization? He asks the question in all innocence. It is not that he is against it; it is simply that so many of these bills are interwoven with respect to this bill. I think it is a legitimate question to ask.

As in many other bills that have previously been put forward by this government recently, is the generalization of what can be done through regulation. I think to properly understand where the government is going in this specific bill we are entitled to see the regulations. The power the minister has under this bill is quite broad and I think we are entitled to know that before we vote on the bill.

Finally, of course, there is the whole subject of privacy. Will our privacy be taken away even further as a result of the implementation of this bill?

Mr Cousens: I want to acknowledge with great appreciation the comments from the member for Mississauga South and the member for Dufferin-Peel.

There is a really good thing that happens within our caucus that has to do with the kind of debate we have on bills and the freedom to think for ourselves, to come forward with a consensus based on a sense of what is needed in industry and government and balancing the two off. Both of the previous speakers, the members for Mississauga South and Dufferin-Peel, try to bring that to everything we do here as a caucus and I think it separates the Conservative caucus very much from the ideologues that have been elected that now form the new social democratic government here in Ontario.

What we really are looking for—and I really appreciate the fact that the member for Dufferin-Peel touches on it—is to protect the privacy of everybody in this province. We are interested in getting value for money, in seeing things function more efficiently and effectively, but it all boils down to service and privacy, and the government should not give that away. The service must be there and there are many ways the whole level of service by this province can be improved. There is no doubt about that. But in dealing specifically with this bill, let us not forget about the rights of the individual to be served competently and fairly and completely and wholly with a sense that whatever they have in the government records is not going to be public domain. It has to be kept private.

I am anxious about the way this government is going by giving itself great power over that data and what it is going to do with it. It is too important to frivolously give away.

I thank my fellow members from the Ontario PC caucus for their support for these comments, and I certainly hope the member for Mississauga South is correct, that the government will rethink its position and do what is right. What often happens is that they just do what their whip tells them to do and they do not think for themselves, and that becomes the issue that we really need to see.

Hon Ms Churley: A number of points were raised this afternoon; I will address some of them. I want to say particularly to the member for Dufferin-Peel at the outset that he mentioned Teranet. In fact, most of his speech of an hour and 20 minutes or so was dedicated to the issue of Teranet. He is right that Teranet is more complicated, but he is wrong in that this bill is totally unrelated to Teranet.

I also have to say, because of the implications and some of the allegations made in his speech, that it is important that people understand that he or his staff were asked to come to a briefing on this bill. It can be complicated; anything to do with computers often can. This bill has been around for some time and there has been ample opportunity to find out more about it. That has not been done.

Mr Tilson: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I really am concerned about the way the minister has left her last remarks about my being invited to a briefing with respect to this bill. I received an invitation at 10 o'clock—

The Acting Speaker (Mr Villeneuve): I am sorry, that is not a point of privilege. A member can correct his or her own statements, not someone else's.

Hon Ms Churley: This bill has been around for some time and there has been opportunity to find out more about it. The reason I am bringing this up, in all seriousness, is that there are some real misconceptions about the bill, for which I am sorry because it has taken up a lot of time this afternoon. It is not in any way related to Polaris or Teranet. I will deal with that on another occasion, but because today is the day, it is not in any way connected.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The honourable minister has the floor.

Hon Ms Churley: Let me explain very briefly that Polaris is the automation of land registration and a mapping system in Ontario. It is actually very simple. Bill 126 will provide users with an alternative and potentially, we hope, faster method of filing information. I am sure the members want to understand and hear this. That is really all it is. Let me explain very simply the implications of this.

Right now we get thousands of documents that come in on paper. They come in, and each and every one of them has to be inputted into a computer. Often after they were already taken off a computer and submitted on paper, they are then put back in manually. All this act does is give people the opportunity to be able to submit their documentation in computer form so that it does not have to be re-entered. That is what we are talking about here.

I would like to make another point: This is already a public database; this is not new. In terms of the comments that have been made about privacy and confidentiality, I want members to know I appreciate and share their concern about that issue. I am glad it has been brought up. Again though, I have to say in this context that this public database already exists and anybody can already do title searches. Bill 126 is not changing that or having any impact on that whatsoever.

I would like to add here that this information is already collected and filed on each borrower in Ontario who uses personal property as collateral. The act that allows this collection of information became law under the Conservatives in the 1970s. It was the third party's government that made the law to allow this accessibility.

Let's not go laying blame here. I think we have a good thing going. We are, let's face it, in the age of automation. All Bill 126 will do is help speed up the process a little bit. Eventually it will come down to the consumers who go to the lawyers and other professionals for information. We are very concerned about privacy and confidentiality and we are making sure safeguards are built in to this one-way system.

The cost of the search will remain the same. It will not go up for consumers. I should say that we will start saving money pretty well immediately as users start using the system for the very reason I pointed out: It will save one step in the process.

I will end by saying that this is actually not a big, complicated thing. This is just taking a step and making a system that we already have in place a bit more efficient. That is happening all over the world right now. As the member for Markham pointed out, it is important that we move in this direction. I urge people to support this bill today. I urge people to not confuse it with more complicated computer issues. This is not a very complicated issue. It is actually very simple and will benefit the people of Ontario as well as this government and will in fact save us money.

Ms Churley has moved second reading of Bill 126.

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This bell will be up to 30 minutes' duration.

The Acting Speaker: Pursuant to standing order (g), it has been requested that the vote on second reading of Bill 126, An Act authorizing the Filing of Information in an Electronic Format under Statutes administered by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, be deferred until 5:45 pm today, November 4, 1991. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Vote deferred.

FIRE MARSHALS AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES COMMISSAIRES DES INCENDIES

Mr Pilkey moved second reading of Bill 131, An Act to amend the Fire Marshals Act.

M. Pilkey propose la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 131, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les commissaires des incendies.

Hon Mr Pilkey: I am pleased this afternoon to introduce for second reading an important piece of legislation, Bill 131, which contains an amendment to the Fire Marshals Act. Prevention is the primary goal of the amendments before the House today. Bill 131 will permit the fire marshal's office to pursue its goals of proactive public safety and fire prevention.

These amendments will allow the fire marshal and assistants to take effective actions in situations where fires pose a potentially serious threat to the environment even when the risk of fire itself may be low. This legislation will permit the fire marshal to act in a timely manner when the lives of public are at stake even when the person responsible for the threat to public safety is unwilling or unable to correct the situation or where an order for corrective action is under appeal.

Bill 131 will allow the fire marshal and assistants to move quickly to protect tenants living in hazardous conditions without forcing them to look for new homes.

These amendments will extend the protection of the Ontario fire code to people living in partially occupied buildings under construction or renovation. The cost of fire safety and protection of life will also be handled in an equitable and effective manner under the terms of this new legislation. Costs for corrective actions approved by the Fire Code Commission and carried out by the province or by municipalities will now be recoverable through a person's municipal taxes or through a court judgement.

Bill 131 provides a fair balance between the need for action when there are serious threats to the environment or to people's lives and the need to safeguard individual rights. Building owners will be protected under the amendments contained in this bill. They will have the right to appeal costs for corrective actions that they believe to be unfair.

Bill 131 will also provide for improved fire safety in northern Ontario communities that do not have municipal governments. The province will have both the authority and the responsibility to provide regulations which strengthen and formalize the operation of fire protection teams in those areas. As well, the proposed amendment will reinforce the mutual aid system that exists between neighbouring municipalities during times of emergency.

Bill 131 will give the fire marshal the authority to appoint the fire co-ordinators who organize firefighting resources, prescribing their duties and providing them with immunity from legal action.

The safety and security of the residents of Ontario will be greatly improved by the legislation that I bring before this House today. Bill 131 has as its prime objective to drive to make this province an increasingly safe and secure place in which to live and to work for all people of Ontario. Fire prevention must be a year-round activity in this province and therefore I am pleased to table for second reading these amendments to the Fire Marshals Act.

Mr Curling: What I should be doing is inviting everybody up to Scarborough North, to that great place, that great constituency.

It is indeed a pleasure to rise and say a few words on this bill which was long-awaited. Mr Speaker, if you look carefully at this bill, and I know you have done so, this bill is essentially the same as the Liberals brought in over a year ago. Here it is. We have waited such a long time for this bill to come forward and it has taken the Solicitor General six months to bring forward this bill in second reading. It was about six months ago that he introduced this bill here. He talks about the urgency of it, and here we are, six months later with the bill before the House.

I do not think they realize how important this is. They talked about the importance when they introduced it, but still it is such a long time. It is typical really of much of the legislation that the government has been bringing through this House since it has been in power.

I mentioned earlier that the Liberals had brought forward a bill of the same nature—that was about October 1989—and we struck a fire services committee, a review committee to look at all the problems and concerns within the fire services acts. We wanted to review at that time the Fire Departments Act and the Fire Marshals Act because if there is a job to be done, we feel it should be done properly.

Members can recall the time when the New Democratic Party was in opposition, how concerned it was about doing things properly and not rushing them through, and here we are now. I recall about six months ago the then Solicitor General gave this wonderful speech to the Ontario Association of Fire Chiefs and spoke very passionately about the concern of amending the act. He went into detail expressing what should be done, where it should be amended, commending the fire chiefs and all those present at the time at their 39th annual conference and spoke about how the government would work and act in dispatch to get all the amendments done. They were not speaking at the time about the Fire Marshals Act, but on the broader factor of looking at all the fire services acts.

I am not quite sure if the then Solicitor General had an opportunity to review that speech. I think it is well said, well written by the bureaucrats. I would recommend to the government ministers that sometimes it is good to listen to the bureaucrats, because there is a structure there, then go back to all the philosophical things they are doing and some of the things they are saying should be enforced and put them in place so they can have a proper act. The base of this speech was a good act to follow.

They talk in this act about concern for the environment, and furthermore the concern of safety, and I want to commend the minister for looking in that direction.

I want to commend the Solicitor General for being here today, because I know he has been held up with the Sunday shopping legislation. For the detail and the carefulness that attend these hearings and these amendments that are being done now in committee, I want to commend him.

But if he could pay attention for a moment, I want him to realize that he is paying attention to a bill that is badly flawed—the Sunday shopping bill—and is spending a considerable amount of time attempting to amend a bad thing. There is a saying that goes like this, “What started bad in the morning eventually cannot come good in the evening.” If it is bad, the recommendation we give is to start all over again, just what I think the government wants to do. They wish they could start all over again, because they have done such a bad job. They are spending all their time on Sunday shopping, dealing with an extremely bad, poorly drafted bill. They could have spent more time here dealing in detail with something that is of more concern to the people.

The Solicitor General is a safety minister, to make sure public safety is in the capable hands of a minister and ministry, but instead of dealing at length and in great detail with Sunday shopping—I am sure more could be done in that regard—the community is much more concerned about crime rates and fire safety than Sunday shopping. Of course, it is quite a political thing to get involved in trying to dictate the morals of the people about what day they should worship or what day they should pause or what day they should shop.

Here we are on an extremely important act, the Fire Marshals Amendment Act, which should be looked at. We have come forward here today, after waiting all this long time, and are not looking at a complete review of the Fire Marshals Act and of the Fire Departments Act, and then making sure we have a good fire services act.

The performance of this government is not surprising at all. That is the way it does things: piecemeal. After eventually finding out they are doing a poor job, they will then ask for co-operation. It is important, if the government wants the co-operation of all members of this House, that it do things right.

I am not saying to the government that it can bring a perfect bill forward. I think it is almost impossible, with the diversity of this province, to bring in a perfect bill. What it has here is a cross-section of people representative of all parts of Ontario, especially the municipalities that have such various needs and concerns. If the bill is brought forward we will assist them to amend it to make it a very good bill, a bill they can be proud of. Then the political brinkmanship that is going on here would not happen. Members here are quite qualified. Members on the Conservative side are extremely well versed in how a bill and amendments can go forward.

I want to go through, as I mentioned earlier on, a speech given by my good friend the former Solicitor General. I want to commend him for the commitment he has made in this. The reason it is so important is because if his colleague who followed him, the now Solicitor General had followed these directions that were given to him by the bureaucrats—of course, as an intelligent and honourable man, he gave the speech in good form.

One of the things the Solicitor General of the day emphasized in that speech was improving safety for all our citizens, and not excluding anyone. He talks about some of the concerns that must be addressed in looking at what he was talking about then, the fire services act. He spoke about prevention, which is of great concern—it is better than cure, as they say—and public education.

The concern over that, as we know, is that it is an extremely challenging project to educate the public about fire safety, considering the high rate of functional illiteracy and the apathy people feel about fires. Usually we feel that the fire truck passes our home all the time, just passes our home and will never stop there. The challenge the government has before it of public education is one we all support here. We would have put our effort behind it to make sure that each municipality, as unique as it is, would have been given the attention it so deserves.

Here is another area, and I want to admit that I was caught up in it too, so when the Solicitor General mentioned it in his speech at the time, it came home to me training. The firefighters need training, especially in those municipalities which, as members know, do not have any permanent firefighters but have volunteer firefighters.

The Acting Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the honourable member for Scarborough North. I can assure him that when we resume debate on Bill 131 he will have the floor and will be able to terminate his participation in the debate.

Pursuant to an earlier motion this afternoon, the House agreed to have a vote on second reading of Bill 126 at 5:45.

1751

The House divided on Ms Churley's motion for second reading of Bill 126, which was agreed to on the following vote:

La motion de M^{me} Churley pour la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 126, mise aux voix, est adoptée :

Ayes/Pour—84

Nays/Contre—0

The Acting Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the bill go to third reading?

Some hon members: No.

The Acting Speaker: Committee of the whole house?

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. There being 12 members having risen, that does require the bill go to a standing committee of the Legislature.

Bill ordered for the standing committee on resources development.

Le projet de loi est déferé au comité permanent du développement des ressources.

The House adjourned at 1757.

Table of Contents

Table of Contents for proceedings reported in this issue appears at the back, together with an alphabetical list of members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues may be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff at (416) 325-7400.

Numbering of Hansard

Effective with the opening of the Second Session of the 35th Parliament, Hansard issues and pages will once again be numbered on a sessional basis. Hansard numbering therefore will become consistent with Orders and Notices and Votes and Proceedings, and with other parliamentary publications throughout Canada.

For the last two years Hansard has been numbered according to the calendar year. Under this system, the numbering of issues and pages was restarted with the first issue in the calendar year, regardless of session or Parliament.

Under the new system, the sequence of numbering started in January 1991 will end with the final House and committee sittings of the present First Session. A new sequence will begin on the opening day of the Second Session, and each succeeding session, which will be issue 1 and begin with page 1. Committee reports likewise will be numbered from the first sitting of each committee in a parliamentary session.

Subscriptions

Subscription information may be obtained from: Sessional Subscription Service, Publications Ontario, Ministry of Government Services, 5th Floor, 880 Bay Street, Toronto, Ontario, M7A 1N8. Phone (416) 326-5310, 326-5311 or toll-free 1 (800) 668-9938.

Table des matières

Il existe un index cumulatif des numéros précédents. Les renseignements qu'il contient sont à votre disposition par téléphone auprès des employés de l'index du Journal des débats au (416) 325-7400.

Numérotation du Journal des débats

A partir du début de la deuxième session de la 35^e législature, les pages et les numéros du Journal des débats seront de nouveau numérotés par session. La numérotation du Journal des débats correspondra donc à celle de Feuilleton et Avis et de Procès-verbaux, ainsi que celle des autres publications parlementaires au Canada.

Depuis deux ans, le Journal des débats était numéroté par année civile. Avec ce système, la numérotation des numéros et des pages recommençait au premier numéro de l'année civile, quelle que soit la session ou la législature.

Avec le nouveau système, la numérotation commencée en janvier 1991 s'arrêtera à la dernière séance de la Chambre et des comités de l'actuelle première session. Une nouvelle série commencera le jour de l'ouverture de la deuxième session et des sessions suivantes : numéro 1, page 1. Les rapports des comités seront également numérotés à partir de la première séance de chaque comité pour une session parlementaire donnée.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday 5 November 1991

The House met at 1330.

Prayers.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

CORNWALL AND DISTRICT SNOWSUIT FUND

Mr Cleary: It gives me great pleasure to address the House today on behalf of the Cornwall and District Snowsuit Fund. This organization, co-sponsored by the Cornwall and District Firefighters, Lions Club and Loeb IGA, has for three years been working very hard to provide warm winter snowsuits for the less fortunate children of Cornwall and the united counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry.

I am proud to say that over 900 snowsuits were collected and distributed to needy children last year. The snowsuit fund is hopeful that it will be able to outfit 2,000 children this year.

The snowsuit fund is a recognized charitable organization with no operating cost, and is run by an enthusiastic volunteer executive and board of directors. Local businesses have been quite supportive of this effort, particularly Fantastic Cleaners of Cornwall, which has offered complimentary dry-cleaning services to the snowsuit fund.

The gala event took place this past Saturday night in Cornwall, and I am happy to report that I joined over 200 area residents who showed their support by attending.

Anyone interested in making a contribution to this fine cause should contact one of the local sponsors, who admit that only through energetic participation will this fund be able to surpass its 1991 goal.

LORNE McCONNELL

Mr Sterling: As we move towards a more global economy, trying to achieve what we call the competitive edge, we place a tremendous responsibility on our engineering and scientific community. Our ultimate economic success is dependent on their ability to accomplish.

I want to bring to the attention of this House a group of the individuals who were honoured by the Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario this past Saturday evening. Each of these people has managed remarkable performance during a time that is somewhat hostile to innovation and the business community. As an engineer and a citizen of Ontario, I was extremely impressed with the accomplishments of all nine of these individuals and I am very proud both as a professional engineer and as a proud Ontarian. However, today time permits me to mention only one in particular.

The professional engineers' gold medal is awarded to the engineer who has given outstanding public service to our country and who has made large sacrifices of time and effort for the public welfare. That special honour was bestowed upon Mr Lorne G. McConnell, PEng. Mr McConnell, a pioneer in nuclear power development, has dedicated 35 years to ensuring a safe, reliable electricity supply for Ontario and for the world. Since his retirement from Ontario Hydro in 1990, he has represented Canada in helping to develop international recommendations for electricity planning and the environment.

I would like the members of this House to join me in recognizing and congratulating Mr McConnell and his fellow engineers, those individuals who give us our competitive edge.

CITY OF BRANTFORD

Mr B. Ward: As members will no doubt remember, on October 10 I made a statement to this House concerning several good news items for the economy and the people of Brantford. Today I would like to give the second half of that good news economic statement.

Not only are the companies I mentioned last time—Keeprite, Ben-A-Clamp, Go Vacations and Easton Coatings, for example—preparing to do business and create jobs in Brantford, but today I have even more good news on the road to economic renewal.

Gates Canada Inc, a leading manufacturer of automotive and industrial belts and hoses, which has two plants in Brantford, will invest over $4 million to expand its belt manufacturing facilities, creating 15 new jobs. Strub Pickles will create 30 jobs as it moves its production and warehousing operations to Brantford from nearby Dundas. Canada Packers Poultry has consolidated its poultry and meat processing operations in Brantford and will create between 50 and 100 jobs in doing so. Finally, Sonoco Ltd, a major cardboard tube and paperboard maker, will be restructuring its operations and opening its second plant in Brantford in early 1992.

I can assure you, Mr Speaker, that this positive news about the economy of our city is a sign that investors have confidence in the people of Brantford and the province of Ontario. Just today, Mr Muzaffar ul Haq from Brant Community Futures informed me that a net increase of between 800 and 900 jobs has been created in Brantford since January of this year. This is good news indeed.

CONTRIBUTION OF CONSULTANTS

Mr Daigeler: Could it be that the new code word for NDP cabinet confusion is "consultation"? Countless consultants have carried out clever consultations and concluded that current consultations are inconclusive. Yet consistent lack of NDP caucus creativity calls for continued consultation.

Off go the consultants and count the cash for their consultations. The consulted community, meanwhile, remains more confounded than ever. The consolidated communications from countless cabinet consultations and controversial caucus considerations leave us with nothing but contradictory configurations.

Without the help of costly consultants, I can confirm the sorry conclusion that the NDP government has been conquered by consultation confusion.

STUDENT SAFETY

Mrs Cunningham: Students at the University of Western Ontario have shown impressive initiative in establishing the foot patrol program. This is a grass-roots example of students taking responsibility for their own safety and the safety of their friends.

Western foot patrol commenced operations in January 1989. Hundreds of students volunteer. Five distinct patrols comprise the foot patrol system at the university. They are provided on campus between 8 pm and 1 am four nights a week and between 8 pm and 2 am on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights. The foot patrol promotes awareness of risk to persons and property on the campus, deters those who would commit crime on campus and provides safe walking escorts to anyone who requests this service.

On Friday evening I joined Elizabeth Lorenzin, assistant co-ordinator of the foot patrol; my colleague the member for London-Middlesex; Joe Fontana, MP for London East, and Monique Lefebvre and other student volunteers. Fortunately, it was an uneventful evening. These volunteer patrollers, who have agreed to give up their free time to assist fellow students and promote campus safety, are to be congratulated on their significant efforts in making people aware of the risks they take, not only at the campus but across our communities, by walking alone in the dark.

COMMUNITY ACTION TEAM

Mr Martin: A short time ago a lobby group from my community came to the provincial Legislature in support of Algoma Steel and the city of Sault Ste Marie. Today I would like to thank the Community Action Team, CAT for short, for its effective presentations and, most important, for its commitment to the people of our city.

I would also like to thank the Premier, the Minister of Northern Development and Mines, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology, the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Natural Resources and their staffs, the NDP government and the Liberal and Conservative caucuses for meeting with this group.

The Community Action Team appreciated the time and effort we as a government contributed. This team effort is an excellent example of co-operation and co-ordination between management, labour, government and the larger community. With this type of solidarity and the continued support of this government, our community will pull together and indeed there will be a better day.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS LEGISLATION

Mr Chiarelli: By December of this year, the federal Parliament will have legislated a fundamental reform in the regulation of banks, trust companies and insurance companies, an initiative endorsed by consumer groups, all federal political parties and the financial institutions industry. Federal financial institutions will be operating under these new laws by March of next year.

Unfortunately, this new legislation is in conflict with many of Ontario's current laws. All stakeholders want Ontario to harmonize its regulations with these new federal regulations. The province has no position on this issue.

Because the minister has been dragging his heels, there will be at least a two-year period during which federal financial institutions will be operating in conflict with Ontario's laws.

Because of the NDP's failure to act, the financial services industry and the economy will continue to suffer because of unnecessary duplication in regulatory control and costs, thus further eroding Ontario's competitive position. Such inaction is irresponsible and a slap in the face to the industry. This government is showing once again that it is out of step with the rest of the country at a time when our economy is crying for assistance. The minister should do everyone a favour and climb out of his shell-shocked auto insurance bunker to lend the economy a hand. The taxpayers of Ontario will not hold it against him.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

Mr Jordan: An announcement made yesterday by Ontario Hydro will see 3.8 million households in Ontario receive two lightbulbs, at a program cost of $7 million.

This announcement, which was to be made later this week but was leaked to the press, is yet another way for Ontario Hydro to spend its outrageous conservation budget. The Ontario Energy Board's review of Hydro's 1992 major rate increase concluded that Hydro "was likely to waste much of the extra conservation money through uneconomic programs." This government has ordered Hydro to pick up the pace of its conservation programs, but Hydro says it is already struggling to spend the $226 million allocated.

To listen to the Minister of Energy and the chairman of Ontario Hydro, you would think conservation is a new idea. Conservation has been part of Ontario Hydro and all users for over 30 years. I suggest we return to Ontario Hydro's mandate of generating and transmitting power at cost and let the private sector market its own products.

CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

Mr Drainville: I would like to speak to the House today about an issue that obviously members of this House are very cognizant of, and that is the constitutional crisis we have in Canada. Recently many polls have indicated that there are people across the country who basically are more interested, understandably, in the economic issues of the day, yet at the same time we realize that we are on a precipice and that we are facing some very difficult challenges if we are to keep this country together.

I raise this issue in the House because I think it is incumbent upon us all, as leaders in our communities, to take this issue to the people. What I would suggest is that members could go into their ridings and have open forums on these issues, perhaps speak to students about these issues, if they have not already, and perhaps even share materials that have been brought forward by the select committee on Ontario in Confederation, the federal government or the provincial government to help people understand these issues.

In my own riding of Victoria-Haliburton in the first week of December we are going to begin a process of open forums where we can begin to discuss these issues, and invite the members of the constituency to come to those forums and also to express their views on the federal proposals that are being put forward. It is my hope that by going out into the community and sharing this information with people, we might draw a closer focus on the future of Ontario in Confederation.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Hon Ms Ziemba: It is my pleasure today to announce the release of the employment equity discussion paper Working Towards Equality. The employment equity commissioner, Juanita Westmoreland-Traoré, will start the formal consultation process in nine different cities across the province.

Employment equity is about this province's most valuable resource, its people. It is about a new vision of Ontario where every workplace is an environment of fairness and justice for all people. People should be able to participate and contribute in workplaces to the best of their abilities.

We need the energy, creativity, knowledge and skills of all the people of Ontario to rebuild our economy. Our workforce can give us our competitive edge. Employment equity will ensure Ontario is well positioned for the economic challenges of the future.

This government is committed to ending systemic discrimination faced by aboriginal peoples, people with disabilities, women and racial minorities. By the year 2000, 5% of all people entering the workforce will be members of these four groups. As a society, we no longer can afford to keep them underemployed or out of the workforce.

Ontario's NDP government is committed to mandatory employment equity legislation. The discussion paper provides a direction and a framework for the consultation. It is the intention of this government to advance legislation which will have four designated groups: aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities, women and racial minorities. It will apply to public, broader public and private sectors, and the legislation will provide for mandatory employment equity.

To maximize the economic and social benefits of employment equity, we must ensure that the proposed legislation will be fair, practical and effective. The consultation is therefore crucial at this stage. We are determined that this will be an open and inclusive process. There are a lot of issues to consider in drafting legislation. We are committed to hearing from and listening to all groups about what will work best. We need the expertise and views of all Ontarians. Through these consultations, we will develop a partnership of government, business, labour, designated group members and other interested groups and individuals.

This government is committed to an agenda of justice and fairness. The release of this discussion paper and the launch of the formal consultation process is one major step forward. This government will provide the leadership to get Ontario back to work in a fair and equitable manner.

I would like to introduce the employment equity commissioner, who is with us today, Juanita Westmoreland-Traoré.

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

Hon Mr Philip: It will not come as news to the members of this House that we have been experiencing the worst recession the country has endured in 50 years. Although there are many similarities to past recessions, such as job losses and business closures, there are also critical differences. Unlike job losses during the 1981-82 recession, many of which were later recalled, many of today's job losses are permanent.

Our government recognizes that factors driving economic growth are changing. Old answers are no longer sufficient. We need a new direction to revitalize the economy. I believe that long-term commitments to research and development are a key to economic growth in this province. Research and development is the backbone of high value added industries, those which create highly skilled, well-paying jobs. Such industries require leading-edge technology to operate efficiently. They need a stable base from which to develop this technology and put it into practice.

On behalf of my ministry, it gives me great pleasure to present to the House the details of an important new initiative. We have made a commitment to support the creation of a new industry-directed research centre. The Industrial Research and Development Institute, or IRDI, will be established in Midland with Ontario government funding of up to $4.2 million over a five-year period.

The centre will serve as a national institute for applied research and development for the tooling industry and related industries. Tool, die and mould making is the backbone of manufacturing in Ontario. It is critical to Ontario's auto and auto parts sectors, aerospace, plastics processing and other manufacturing industries. In fact, Ontario is currently home to 80% of Canada's tooling industry. The choice of Ontario as home for the IRDI is therefore ideal.

Many of the companies which will benefit most from IRDI lack the financial resources or staff to undertake research on their own. IRDI will give these companies access to new technologies and industrial materials as well as expert advice. IRDI services will improve tooling design and development in Ontario and in so doing will strengthen the competitive position of our manufacturers. The institute will act as a bridge between the academic community and industry and will network with similar institutes internationally.

Until now, Canada has been the only leading industrial nation without an institute of this kind. This has placed us at a great competitive disadvantage. IRDI also represents the kind of co-operation we need to see between the province, the private sector, communities and the federal government. Nearly $1 million will be provided by the province during the initial two-year period. An additional $3.2 million in provincial funding will be available over the subsequent three years following a review in IRDI's second year of operations.

Industry, Science and Technology Canada will provide $1.85 million towards the project. Plans call for the eventual construction of a building on lands donated by local industry. Site servicing will be provided by the town of Midland. Additional funding towards the building will come from the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission.

Investment in our technological infrastructure, the network of people and institutions that gives us technological capability, is important to Ontario's future success. Let me conclude by repeating our commitment to work co-operatively with industry, the academic community, labour, community groups and the federal government. It is only through such co-operation that we will be able to create economic growth and the high value added products and services that will move Ontario to a healthier and more productive economy.

RESPONSES

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Mr Curling: This is the biggest hoax that has been pulled by this government so far. Imagine all the consultation that took place before, but what have they done now? They have come to say that they are going to talk and talk and talk more.

I recall the Premier, when he was Leader of the Opposition, introducing employment equity legislation in June 1990. This was done, he said, after very extensive consultation had been carried out. Comprehensive consultations were carried out, of course, by Justice Rosalie Abella's royal commission and also by the Ontario Advisory Council for Disabled Persons.

The minister now says that more consultation is needed because earlier consultations excluded some groups. My question to the Premier then is, which groups did he exclude from his consultation? Who did the Premier exclude? We would like to know.

The minister also made some comments this morning in which she seemed to suggest the opposition parties may try to stall the government's plan to introduce employment equity legislation. Who is stalling? I point out to the minister that Bill 172, the Premier's employment equity bill, was supported in principle by all members of the three parties and was referred to committee by the consensus of the Legislature. As members recall, I have also, on a number of occasions over the past year, asked for the reintroduction of this bill.

The minister speaks about partnership and consultation. Yet over and over again it appears from the consultation document that the government has already made up its mind on some very significant issues. For example, although francophones are considered a designated group for the purpose of employment equity in the Ontario public service, they are already quite specifically excluded on the very first page of the consultation document.

We have also heard the minister say over and over again that the legislation should be mandatory, but she has not been able to tell us what she means by mandatory—mandatory process or mandatory results?

Last spring the Solicitor General made a statement that the government had no intention of legislating employment equity for fire services. This would seem to contradict what the Minister of Citizenship is saying. I asked the minister about this five months ago and she still has not been able to tell me what her government's position is.

In opposition that party was very specific about what it intended to do. They were going to introduce Bill 172. Suddenly, in government, they need to carry out more consultation. The Premier had the answer in 1990. He said it was Bill 172. What changed? Why has his government backed away from the specific plans set out in Bill 172?

Mr Speaker, you ask for decorum in this House. As you know, this was already announced at a press conference this morning. Therefore, again this government continues to make its show outside and then asks us to respond to it afterwards.

Mr Kwinter: I would like to respond to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology's announcement. He said: "Old answers are no longer sufficient. We need a new direction to revitalize the economy." Unfortunately, this announcement is no answer. It is a piecemeal announcement about a particular project that was started in my ministry, and I commend it for that, but there is a lot of high-flowing language. It talks about an industrial strategy. We have not seen it. The minister is talking about long term commitment, yet this is only a two-year commitment for $1 million and then they will review it, so there is a possibility there will be no future funding.

The other thing that really disturbs me is that it says "Tool, die and mould making is the backbone of manufacturing in Ontario." That is true, as long as there is some place where those skills can be practised. Unfortunately, under this government, the facts speak for themselves. It has a $10-billion deficit. It has spending habits that the Economic Council of Canada implied are out of step. It has an NDP tax commission charged with the job of finding the means by which to finance its appetite to spend. It has made amendments to the Labour Relations Act which will deter investment. It also has brought in legislation that will increase the cost of hydroelectric power, which again will deter investment and will make the application of any of these skills more and more difficult.

I suggest to the minister that he come forward with a comprehensive industrial strategy, one that will take a look at what we are doing and where, by really coming to grips with some of the problems, we can make this a competitive environment and a place that will attract investment and create employment.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Mrs Witmer: I would like first of all to indicate I have received a copy of the discussion paper, as of about five minutes ago, and I certainly am disappointed that our party was not invited to the press conference and did not receive the information beforehand.

However, having said that, I would like to take the opportunity to congratulate the government. I would also like to congratulate the employment equity commissioner. I would like to congratulate them on the consultation that has already taken place. This discussion paper indicates at she has listened to the concerns that have been expressed by individuals and groups throughout the province and that there has been consultation around the implementation models.

I approach this discussion paper with cautious optimism, since there are many, many areas that are open for discussion. I am very pleased to see that. It appears to me that the government has turned over a new leaf and is ready to consult with all the stakeholders, and for that I applaud it. However, I am concerned that within the minister's statement here she has not talked about the content of the document. She has not talked about when the legislation will be introduced or when she plans for this to become law. That is the information that I believe this house needs.

I appreciate very much the sensitivity she has given to the concerns of the small business community. She has indicated here that there are possible approaches for employers covered by proposed employment equity legislation. She has given five possible approaches and she has allowed for exemptions and modifications for firms with less than 100 employees. I hope this government seriously considers some of the compliance problems that will face small businesses and recognizes that these small firms simply do not have the human resources to meet some of the government regulations.

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

Mr Carr: I am pleased to enter the discussion. I am glad the minister has talked about new directions. It is interesting to note that it was the name of our discussion paper which we sent over to the Premier. It is nice to see that at least they are taking some of the rhetoric from some of the proposals we have talked about.

I wish the minister had done some of his own research, though. The fact is that we are looking at 226,000 jobs lost in this province, 75% in manufacturing. Bankruptcies are at an all-time high. Some 37% of the businesses in a recent survey said they will not be investing because of this government. Retail sales are down $2 billion. One million people are now collecting welfare.

When we look at them, the statistics speak for themselves. Some 86% of the firms say that as a result of some of the proposed labour changes they will not be investing. A total of 480,000 jobs are at stake as a result of this government's initiative. Some $20 billion will not be invested because of this government.

If we look at it, the business community is saying these are the reasons it will not be investing, and it lays it clearly at the door of the Premier and the NDP government. Fully 83% say the reason they will not be investing is the total tax burden. There is nothing about that in this statement.

Some 78% said they will not be investing as a result of the recent Ontario budget. There is nothing about that in this statement. In fact, almost 57% of the members said they will scale down their investment because of the budget, and 94% said it was a bad budget. There is nothing in there to change that.

For the Ontario government's apparent bias, 77% blame the government. There is nothing in here for that. Some 73% say the changes to the proposed labour amendments are going to scale down investment. There is nothing in here for that.

I met with members of a business group this morning and they said to me: "Is there really a Mr Pilkey? Is there somebody really called Mr Pilkey?" That is the consulting the members opposite did under this government in the first year after they took over. All this particular government has done in a year is worry about the mice in the basement. There are elephants on the roof and the business community is reeling. This does nothing for them today.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Mrs Marland: I want to respond to the statement from the minister responsible for employment equity about equity in the workplace. I hope this government will listen very carefully to people with disabilities. We have had a lot of studies come forth in the last six years about the kind of help that people with disabilities need to have an equitable opportunity for employment in this province. They should be heard and remedies made.

BLUE-GREEN ALGAE

Mr Runciman: On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I know you are responsible for this building, and for over a week now I have been putting up with a horrible odour emanating from this area of the assembly. I am asking you to look into it as quickly as possible.

Mr Cousens: I know what it is. It happens to be blue-green algae. We have it here because I was waiting for the Minister of the Environment to respond to my question of 7 October and she has not done it. There has been a smell in this House ever since. I was going to take it out of my desk when she gave me the response. As it is turning out, it is unbearable. I am going to send it over to the Premier with the hope that he will begin to do something with the Minister of the Environment and have her deal with it.

I will take it over. I thank you very much, Mr Speaker, but I cannot stand it. Maybe she will answer the question.

The Speaker: The attendant will take care of it. To the member for Leeds-Grenville, I appreciate his bringing this point of privilege to my attention. Indeed it is a point of privilege. While the member for Markham may not always appreciate the responses he gets from ministers, they are more likely to respond to people than to algae.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr Phillips: My question is of the Premier. As the Premier will recall, the first day the House came back, September 23, the very first piece of business we dealt with was a speech by the Premier indicating that the first priority for him would be economic renewal. In fact, I think he said, "Renewing our economy must be the central focus of our work as a province." I think all of us agree with that. Since then, however, there has been virtually nothing out of the government in terms of economic renewal. That was almost six weeks ago; the economy continues to turn down.

Some 15 months ago the Premier's Council issued a report, a blueprint on developing skills in the new economy that I think could very well be a blueprint for the government. When will we see the economic plan the Premier promised the people on September 23?

Hon Mr Rae: Let me answer directly the question with respect to the matter of training which the member has raised very directly. We are convinced that improving the training network in the province is a crucial underpinning for the renewal that I think we all believe in. That is something this government is determined to help make happen.

My colleague the member for Hamilton West, the Minister for Skills Development, has negotiated a very dramatic increase in federal funding for training for this year, which we think is a good start. We are also determined to bring in legislation with respect to training in 1992. I say to the member we do have to get a stronger buy-in from the private sector for some of the ideas that are contained in the Premier's Council report that my predecessor was able to do, and that is something which we very much want to have happen through this fall and winter as we prepare for legislation in the spring, and that is exactly what we are going to be doing on the training front.

Mr Phillips: As the Premier might appreciate, we have had a number of concerns raised by working people in this province about his economic plan. I think all of us are aware that in two and a half weeks the Ontario Federation of Labour biannual convention takes place. I think many of the working people in the province believe the Premier is going to have to deliver something there because it is the biannual meeting. Certainly their expectations of this government are very high and the Premier has a long-standing commitment to the labour leaders.

There is a fear among the workers in this province that there may very well be two economic plans, one for union workers and one for non-union workers. Can the Premier assure all the workers of this province that they will be treated equally and that if he brings forward these economic plans, perhaps before the OFL convention, there will not be one economic plan for unionized workers and one economic plan for non-unionized workers?

Hon Mr Rae: The answer to the member's question is yes.

Mr Phillips: The reason I raise that matter is, as we have seen some of the draft proposals of the government, that is what has given cause for concern. The proposal on the venture capital project for workers' purchase of shares is available, we understand, in the draft proposals, to be run only by unions. In other provinces it can be run by other employee groups, but here the proposal is only for unions.

We understand that on the training aspect, unions will have a veto right on much of the training. The fundamental objective of the labour relations program, if we read the documents correctly, was to increase union penetration. That is why the concerns have been raised. I am glad of the Premier's reassurance, but if all the workers are to have equal access, why is it that in the draft proposals we have seen there seems to be some discrimination between unionized and non-unionized workers in this province?

Hon Mr Rae: With respect to the particular question when we take all the rhetoric and the anti-union diatribes that we have come to expect from the Liberal Party of Ontario aside, what I want to tell the honourable member is that the proposals with respect to worker ownership are in the range of leadership, the ability of people to buy into the future of the economy—I can assure the member there is no intention on our part to discriminate against anybody.

Mr Elston: That last answer just gives us the clue as to what it is that keeps this place in a state of disarray. It is the Premier whenever he shows up.

RETAIL STORE LEGISLATION

Mr Elston: I have a question for the Solicitor General. I have listened to the Solicitor General talking about his Sunday shopping legislation. I have with me a whole series of pictures of women and men who are about to lose their jobs if the Solicitor General carries on in the same manner in which he has. These are some of the people who work for the discount drug industry. In fact they have been told that up to 3,000 people could permanently lose their jobs if there are not some changes to the legislation.

I wonder if the Solicitor General will agree with me that those jobs are important jobs to save and if he will commit himself to supporting a bill that I will introduce later today which is designed to save those particular jobs.

Hon Mr Pilkey: Surely the Leader of the Opposition would not expect me to respond to a bill that has not even surfaced yet. To the first question, this government did not introduce into Bill 115 or its amendments anything to do with the drugstore issue. The legislation that is presented today is the legislation that leader and that government placed before the province of Ontario, before the people and before the owners of those drugstores he now purports to defend.

We have not done anything that has altered the previous situation. What we have done, on behalf of the New Democratic Party of Ontario and this government, is to respond to the people of Ontario on the promise we gave them, and that was a promise of a common pause day and a promise of worker protection. The moment these two parties allow us to get out of committee and into the House, we will have achieved that to the benefit of the people of this province.

Mr Elston: To ease the pain of the Solicitor General, can tell him that the bill will be to the same extent as what my colleague the member for Oakville South introduced—or tried to—as an amendment to the Solicitor General's legislation, about which he said to my colleague, "It isn't within the ambit of that bill."

If it is not within the ambit of Bill 115, perhaps the Solicitor General can undertake to support this as a separate piece of legislation to save the jobs of people like Marie Durand, who is supporting not only herself and who is not only about to support a husband who will lose his job at the end of this month, but also a single-parent daughter who is supporting her child. Since the Solicitor General knows what the amendment of the member for Oakville South would have done, can he tell us today why he cannot support that type of bill to save the job of Marie Durand and save her family the suffering he knows they will go through?

Hon Mr Pilkey: This is the absolute height of hypocrisy. If that individual or any other individuals lose their jobs—

The Speaker: Would the minister take his seat, please. I realize it is an issue that evokes an emotional response. At the same time, when we use the word “hypocrisy,” it does help to create disorder in here. Perhaps the minister could rephrase his response.

Hon Mr Pilkey: I will withdraw the word and substitute something else which I deem to mean that it is strange to hear that coming from the Liberals.

Mr Elston: There is a piece of legislation with respect to Sunday shopping that is working in this province. These people are undoing it. In fact, the people who are about to lose their jobs are gainfully employed at the moment. It seems to me that this Solicitor General, when he is telling everybody he is changing the world that the Liberals and Tories created in Ontario because it was all wrong, should not pass by something he has said is wrong because it was our legislation. If there is a problem with helping some unemployed people because of legislation, let's change it. If we were wrong, let's admit we were wrong. We will bear the responsibility. The Solicitor General should make the changes.

For the benefit of people like Monica McGregor, a single-parent family supporter who needs her job and who will lose her job under the current situation, will the Solicitor General support my bill, to be introduced later today, so we can save her job and the jobs of all these women and men who need to work and make money so they do not suffer at a time when recession is eating us up?

Hon Mr Pilkey: I cannot speculate on bills that have not even been tabled or presented. What I can say is that in our Agenda for People, of which the member for Stouffville West has a ready copy in his hand at all moments, we promised the people of this province a common cause day and worker protection to protect some 760,000 Ontarians and their families who work in the retail sector. Any difficulties these particular individuals are having are a result of the legislation passed by the previous government, and there is nothing we are doing that has altered that circumstance. It does not fall within the ambit of the bill, and if the Leader of the Opposition wishes to present some alternative bill, I suppose the Legislative Assembly will deal with it in some appropriate manner.

I will quit on this one further comment: If we are to bring further clarity to those and other retailers in this province and to the general public by way of the amendments we introduced on Sunday shopping in December, prior to Christmas, I would urge the opposition parties to allow us to get through clause-by-clause before they have a lot of other people's jobs in jeopardy as well at that time.

LABOUR LEGISLATION

Mr Harris: My question is to the Premier. For the past several months the government has been sending out a clear message that Ontario is closed for business. The government's labour proposals in particular have sent a wave of fear through the business community. Companies are leaving in record numbers. Jobs are being lost by the thousands. Investors are bypassing Ontario as a place to invest.

Last week the Premier agreed to consider New Directions: A Blueprint for Economic Renewal and Prosperity in Ontario, which was my economic plan for renewal and prosperity. I ask him today, will he agree to my call in New Directions for an immediate cancellation of any consideration of all the changes labour has put forward and wants in the labour law legislation in this province?

Hon Mr Rae: I can tell the honourable member, first of all, that I reject the premise of his question. The notion, for example, that improvements in employment standards or minimum wages or labour relations legislation are hostile to investment or hostile to growth or hostile to the future of this province is an attitude that I do not think any Premier has accepted since the Second World War. I would say to the honourable member that improving the climate and improving labour relations is in our view and in my view a critical aspect of turning this economy around, of improving it and ensuring that the interests of greater productivity and greater social justice are effectively joined.

Mr Harris: We all agree that improving the climate and improving relations would be important. His proposals are not doing that. A discussion paper on labour proposals—it is all labour's proposals, by the way—is the last thing Ontario needs. He does not seem to understand that it really does not matter how he fine-tunes labour's proposals for refining labour law; the damage is being done by just considering these new proposals that have all come from unions.

That in itself is sending out enough of a signal that he is prepared to meddle further with business in this province, and that signal is costing us jobs. It is tinkering with labour legislation. While thousands are losing their jobs, he is trying to decide whether they will be union ones or not. It is kind of like giving double Aeroplan points while the aircraft is going down; it really does not matter much. Will the Premier alleviate further hardship today and get on with the true consultation of bringing business and labour together? He can do that by cancelling his discussion paper altogether. Will he do that?

Hon Mr Rae: I will only say to the honourable member that we are determined to improve the climate of labour relations in the province. We also are determined to ensure this province is seen as a good place to invest, do business, work and live. That involves finding a balance. That involves working with all sectors of the economy. That is exactly what we are determined to do and that is what we are going to do our very best at doing as long as we have a mandate to do so.

Mr Harris: It was the Premier's party which in its fund-raising letter pledged to neutralize opposition by the business community. That was his consultation with the business community. His is the government that brought in a $10-billion deficit. It is his government that introduced retroactive legislation that killed the renovation sector. It is his government that I suggest to him is in Bob White's back pocket. Business no longer believes he knows how to consult. It no longer believes he knows what it is that creates and saves jobs in this province. My final supplementary question is very simple: Is paying back Bob White and the union bosses really worth risking Ontario's future?

Hon Mr Rae: I can only say I reject entirely the premise and the rhetoric behind the member's question.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

Mr Stockwell: Can the Premier give me his government's position on how involved constituency offices could or should be in the municipal elections, and further, whether any written or verbal directives have been sent out by his office to the members on that issue?

Hon Mr Rae: From my experience in the House in opposition and in government, this is what is known as a question with a hook, so I think I will wait for the supplementary.

Mr Stockwell: I simply asked the Premier if any directives were sent to his caucus with respect to constituency office use during a municipal election. I would have expected a response: if yes, then what, and if not, then he could say that. I ask the Premier because it has been brought to my attention that between February and March 1990 a constituent showed up at the Etobicoke-Lakeshore constituency office seeking assistance on a committee of adjustment hearing. The constituency office supplied her with a four-point plan. The committee of adjustment hearing ended up in court.

Interjections.

Mr Stockwell: No, this is 1990. The lady was asked under oath what the office of the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore told her she do. She said she was given a hand-written four-point plan from that constituency office: (1) call the Ministry of Municipal Affairs; (2) join a ratepayers' association; and (3) call Etobicoke legal aid services. All are important and worthy things to tell a constituent. Number 4 was kind of interesting, though. It said to get involved in municipal politics and join an anti-Faulkner campaign. Mr Faulkner happens to be a councillor in that area. He also has some political ties; they just do not happen to be NDP.

Would the Premier not consider this to be inappropriate use of a constituency office paid for not only by the taxpayers, but the real rub here is that it is also paid for by Mr Faulkner himself?

Hon Mr Rae: As I heard the member's question, and I have not had any particular notice of it, he is referring to something that he alleges or someone else alleges took place in February or March 1990. I have not seen anything. He has not shown me any documents. I have not seen any statement he is making. I do not know exactly what he is talking about.

What I do know is that this alleged incident took place some seven months before the last provincial election, so he is referring to something that he alleges may or may not have taken place in a constituency office of an opposition member about a year and a half ago. I think that is what he is talking about.

Having put that in that perspective, I can only say to the member that I look forward to seeing whatever documentary or other information he has with respect to any allegation he has. Otherwise, I have no intention today, a week before the municipal election on which he has conveniently asked the question, of interfering in that election in any way whatsoever.

Mr Stockwell: That may be considered a fair answer. Let me offer a little bit more information to the Premier. The lady, Mrs Deronov, who lives on Melrose Avenue in Mimico, in fact swore under oath that this letter was written at the constituency office of the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore at this time, and she was told to do just exactly those four things.

I think what is important to point out is that what really strikes at the heart of this issue is, who do members think is now running against Mr Faulkner in Etobicoke-Lakeshore under the NDP banner? None other than the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore's own constituency assistant. Here we have a case of the Minister of the Environment's constituency office advising residents to join in campaigns—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. The supplementary?

Mr Stockwell: Here we have the Minister of the Environment's constituency office advising residents to join in campaigns opposing the local councillor so that her constituency assistant, a card-carrying NDPer, may run against Mr Faulkner in the next election. I will point out that this lady did swear to this under oath and provided the four-point plan.

The Speaker: Would you conclude your question, please.

Mr Stockwell: I spoke to the city solicitor in Etobicoke and he said that is in fact what happened. I say to the Premier, may I remind him—

1430

The Speaker: No. Do you have a question?

Mr Stockwell: Yes, I do.

The Speaker: Will the member take his seat?

Mr Elston: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I will not take part in that type of flippant cutting off of my colleague in the Conservative Party. I will not allow you to cut him off when he was about to ask his question. You let him put his question.

The Speaker: All right. Just relax.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Members have quite rightfully asked repeatedly that we keep the questions short and crisp and that the Speaker keep a sharp eye on the clock, which indeed the Speaker is doing. I asked the member three times to place his question and yet I did not hear an interrogative part.

Interjections.

The Speaker: I realize the member is relatively new to the chamber, but at the same time he has had a number of opportunities. Now, in the interest of fairness, if the member can succinctly place a question and nothing but a question, then we will continue.

Mr Stockwell: I apologize. I sincerely did not mean to be flippant to you, Mr Speaker. This lady has supplied me a piece of paper. This four-point plan was written and sworn under oath that this is what in fact she was told to do. The facts are indisputable. My question is, what is the premier going to do about it?

Hon Mr Rae: Because of something he has just said, the member states that the facts are indisputable. I think that members, in any sense of a spirit of fairness, would want to put that in some perspective. There are going to be many allegations made in this House from time to time about various things. The member referred to something in the Minister of the Environment's constituency office. At the time which this alleged conversation allegedly took place, the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore was not the Minister of the Environment; she was a simple member of the Legislature.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Rae: No. All I am saying is that of course we will, now that the member has made this allegation. I am sure the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore will want to have an opportunity to respond. I notice with interest that the member raised the question on a day when the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore is not even here and able to reply in any way, shape or form.

Mr Eves: She talked to him about it yesterday and she chose not to show up today.

Hon Mr Rae: All I can say to the honourable member is that obviously this is the kind of thing that will be looked into.

Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I did this on a day the minister was not here—

The Speaker: That is not a point of order. Someone's absence is not a point of order.

HOSPITAL SERVICES

Mr Elston: I have a question to the Minister of Health. On Friday, the minister's deputy had received information from the Ontario Hospital Association that indicated 4,400 jobs will be eliminated from Ontario hospitals this fiscal year. The minister in fact had celebrated the layoff of some 250 people here last week because she indicated there were some 200-plus beds being closed down in the Toronto Hospital and said there were more to come, more jobs lost and more services cut. She was celebrating the fact that they were "moving in the right direction."

In the minister's October 29 letter to hospitals and district health councils she talked about "service changes," which are really code words for service cutbacks and that obviously there are more of these to come. Most of these cuts will result in nursing jobs being lost. How many more nurses will have to lose their jobs to pay for their hard-fought increases won on the bargaining tables of this province? How many more nurses will lose their jobs to pay for the pay equity plan which the minister has announced but which she has been unwilling to find the money to fund?

Hon Ms Lankin: The member says these are code words. In fact, in a question he raised with me last week I think he made a similar allegation, that the words I use are code words for other things. May I say that just because he asserts that, it is not in fact my interpretation of the words I used and the intent I put forward.

When I talk in the letters about the fact that there are service changes taking place, what is happening in the hospital sector is that with the kind of funding that has been put in place, hospitals are looking at whether or not they are able to meet their budget projections. Where there are deficit projections, we are working with them to try to address those situations.

May I suggest that in the majority of hospitals in this province, there are not deficit projections this year. The kind of suggestion we have made to the district health councils and hospitals that have worked together is to try and develop a rational plan to deal with areas where we think there may be deficits.

Mr Elston: The fact of the matter is that as a nurse's job is lost, service declines. Where there is an unwillingness to fund the hospitals that are coming under severe pressure economically they will cut jobs—jobs of a lot of those of nurses who are on the floors looking after patients whom people in this House know about.

It is interesting to note in this October 29 letter that there are a whole series of great sentences and lines. One is, "Doctors and the government will work together to bring greater fiscal certainty to health care." Where is the role of nurses in talking about this, since it seems that the minister has targeted the layoff of nurses and support staff to pay for the cost of managing the system?

Further, why did the minister finish by saying the ministry's vision is and will continue to be "an affordable, high-quality, appropriate system that results in healthier Ontarians," when her whole letter refuses to address the one clear question we have been struggling with all along, which is accessibility? If there are no nurses to give the services, there ain't no services. Why will the minister not own up to that?

Hon Ms Lankin: The member asks why I will not own up to that. I disagree with what he is proposing as being the indications I am putting forward in these letters. What we have suggested is that in those areas where there are hospitals that are facing deficits, they need to sit down with the other hospitals in their regions and with the district health council in order to rationally plan the direction. In fact, the majority of the hospitals in the province do not face deficits at this point in time.

With respect to the question the member raises about the role of nurses and what role in fact they should be playing with respect to this consultation around the deficit in existing hospitals—

Mr Elston: Nurses are losing their jobs every day.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Ms Lankin: Thank you, Mr Speaker. It is very hard to respond when people are not listening and it is hard to keep track of where we are headed.

In fact, what we have asked, in the very letter the member refers to, is that hospitals meet with their employees. In the hospital funding review we have going on, we have invited representatives from hospital unions, including nurses, to be there and they are there as part of the process. I hope we will show the honourable member that the process is respectful of nurses, that we think they are important and that they have to be heard as we roll through these difficult times.

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Mr Sterling: My question is also to the Minister of Health. Of all of the drugs that have been developed for schizophrenic patients, chlozapine offers the best hope of all. The federal government and nine other provinces have approved of its use. Why does the minister not?

Hon Ms Lankin: It is not a question of not having approved of its use. As the member may know, the federal department of drugs just approved the process. We have had it in our psychiatric hospitals on clinical use. There are some 2,000 patients who are currently receiving it.

The problem I had about a month ago when it was approved federally is that there were no dollars in the budget for expanding the program immediately. We are currently trying to find those dollars with respect to how the drug benefit plan and the catastrophic drugs are funded. I agree with the member that it is an important drug. It can be very helpful and actually can help to keep people out of hospitals and I am trying to find the way to fund that.

Mr Sterling: I cannot understand the logic or reasoning behind the answer. It is my understanding that the minister's officials have consulted with the medical profession over the past summer and that those consultations have come to an end.

The mother of a constituent of mine whom I will refer to as John has contacted me in desperation as she fears for her son's life. Other drugs make him sleepy, lethargic and depressed. He is in and out of hospitals; he is called a revolving-door patient. In that many of these schizophrenic patients are wasting away and one in 10 commits suicide, how can the minister stall this decision any longer?

Hon Ms Lankin: I am not attempting to stall the decision; we are attempting to make the decision. The situation we face, as I said, is that some 2,000 people were involved in the clinical trials through the psychiatric hospitals. They are still receiving the drug funded through those hospital budgets.

With respect to the individual case that he raises, I do not know if that person was in a hospital and on the drug. New patients are seeking access to that drug. We are trying to find a way of monitoring the use of it so that in fact it is an effective diversion from hospital beds, and we are trying to find the way to fund that within the context of the budget we face this year. There is, in our expectation, about a $12-million budget attached to that. I am hoping to find a way to be able to fund it, but in the month since the federal approval was given I have not been able to finish that review to this point in time.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr Hansen: My question is to the Minister of Government Services. Recently, concern has been expressed about the Ministry of Government Services tender call for recycled fine-grain photocopy paper for the Ontario government. There is a suggestion that an American producer of recycled paper, Patriot Paper, is being considered for this large contract despite the fact that there are a number of Canadian companies bidding on it.

Can the minister comment on these reports and assure the House that his ministry will make every effort to award this contract to a Canadian company?

Hon F. Wilson: I thank the member for Lincoln for the opportunity to set the record straight on this matter. The contract in question was awarded last week. The winning company was Xerox Canada. The expected value of the tender was $3 million. I am glad to tell the member that the paper will be produced at two plants in Ontario, one of which is Noranda Forest Recycled Papers in the Niagara region; the other is Domtar at Cornwall.

I would also like to inform the member that, contrary to news reports, Patriot Paper was not involved in bidding for this contract at any point.

Mr Hansen: I am sure the minister's answer will be good news for constituents in my riding and for those in the riding of the member for St Catharines who work at the Noranda mill. My concern extends beyond this particular contract. Can the minister tell the House how this government ensures that Canadian companies get consideration for government contracts?

Hon F. Wilson: In the interest of supporting Canadian business and Canadian workers, the Ontario government extends a 10% preference on Canadian content in goods and services it buys. This applies to all purchases over $15,000. I strongly endorse this policy because it helps to improve the ability of Canadian companies to win Ontario government bids while allowing us to keep the cost to the taxpayer as low as possible.

SUPPORT AND CUSTODY ORDERS ENFORCEMENT

Ms Poole: My question is for the Attorney General. On February 11 the Attorney General appeared before the standing committee on administration of justice to discuss Bill 17, the support and custody orders enforcement legislation. He stated that the family support plan "is about ensuring a decent standard of living for the women and children of this province" and that it is "a very important tool in the fight against child poverty and [that] this fight is a priority for the government of Ontario."

Tens of thousands of women across this province and over 110,000 children live below the poverty line because they do not get the family support payments to which they are entitled. The legislation to remedy this situation was passed five months ago. The NDP government has had lots of time to set up the necessary system. If the fight against child poverty is really a priority for this government, how does the Attorney General explain to these women and their children why he has delayed the program until the start of next year and why he has cut almost $1 million from its budget?

Hon Mr Hampton: First, to deal with the allegation that $1 million has been cut from the budget: Last year, because there was such a backlog with the SCOE program, we took the step of putting between $2 million and $2.5 million into the program to deal with the backlog. That was a very successful undertaking. It enabled us to deal with some claims that had not been dealt with for many months. Having done that, we are now ready to move on.

The member asks, "Why will the program not be implemented until March of next year?" As I pointed out yesterday, we found as we worked on the implementation that some of the organizations and some of the groups that we need to work with are asking us to ensure that all the steps are taken; for example, meeting with business organizations that will have to make the payroll deduction to work through issues such as the trading back and forth of information and forms.

Second, we have looked at where the program has been implemented elsewhere, and where it has been implemented most successfully elsewhere has been following a concentrated public information program. Following, for example, the state of Florida, that is what we are doing. Over the next three months we will have a concentrated public information program that will hopefully increase public awareness of the magnitude of the problem and the steps we need to take to encounter it.

Mrs McLeod: The minister essentially gives the same answer he gave us yesterday, and it is the source of our confusion. We would understand $1 million being spent on a public awareness campaign to increase and encourage voluntary compliance if it were not for the fact that this government has already passed legislation that takes voluntary compliance right out of the picture.

The only conclusion we can come to is that this minister and this government are having some second thoughts about the very basic principles of the legislation they put through this House last June. We would simply ask, without all the detailed explanations of why this legislation is delayed, why there has been $850,000 cut from the budget for implementing this program. What message is this government giving to the women and children who had reason to expect their support would be in place this fall?

Hon Mr Hampton: Again, no funding has been cut from the program. The fact of the matter is that we topped up the program last year with over $2 million in additional funding to deal with the backlog.

Having dealt with the backlog, we are in a position to implement the family support plan. Part of implementing the family support plan is to go through all the steps we need to go through with organizations that will have to work with the program. The other part of it is to have a good public information program. Part of the policy and part of the plan is to make the public aware of how serious this problem is and in effect to increase the peer pressure on individuals who have not been paying their support to pay it.

TEACHERS' RETIREMENT BENEFITS

Mrs Cunningham: My question is for the Minister of Education. As he is aware, secondary school students in Elgin county have lost 14 school days because of an ongoing strike. The teachers rejected the board's offer because they want to reinstate retirement gratuities that were grandfathered in 1977.

Retirement gratuities are an unfunded liability for school boards across this province that enable teachers to accumulate unused sick days and cash them in on retirement. This can amount to $30,000 per individual and will escalate with future salary increases. This board estimates that removing the grandfather clause for all board employees will cost local taxpayers about $4 million over the next five years.

The minister should be aware that in the third report of the select committee on education, one which his House leader was party to over some very serious deliberations, recommendation number 26 states, "Unfunded retirement gratuities should be included in school boards' auditing functions and financial statements." Will the minister refer that issue to the Fair Tax Commission for its deliberation?

Hon Mr Silipo: I will say to the member that I will be very prepared to take a look at her suggestion and make a decision about whether or not this is the kind of thing I should refer to the Fair Tax Commission. Clearly whether or not I refer the issue to the Fair Tax Commission, it is certainly open to that commission to look at this issue, as it can look at any other issue in terms of the refinancing of education.

Mrs Cunningham: The minister should know that the two sides in this dispute are at an impasse and have not met since the day before the strike began. It is essential that we resolve this strike before the students lose any more of their school year. The retirement gratuities issue is part of the larger education finance picture. As legislators, we have to begin to ask ourselves a tough question: Can taxpayers afford both a fully indexed teachers' pension plan, which can amount to $39,000 after 35 years of service, and a $30,000 retirement bonus?

The Premier campaigned last summer on tax fairness. He was particularly concerned about rising education and property taxes, because property taxes are not based on ability to pay. I think retirement gratuities are a fair tax issue. They are also, according to the report of the select committee on education, a local governance accountability issue. In this light, will the minister refer the issue of retirement gratuities to the Fair Tax Commission so that we can have a meaningful discussion for the boards and the teachers as to how to handle this sensitive issue, so we do not have young children being deprived of their education on this issue?

Hon Mr Silipo: The member continues in her supplementary, as she did in her first question, to link the issue of retirement gratuities, within the broader policy issue of referring this matter to the Fair Tax Commission, to the strike going on now in Elgin county. I think she will understand the sensitivity of the issue and also understand that I have to be very careful in terms of any statements I make, in not being seen to be in any way interfering with the collective bargaining process that is going on.

It is for that reason also that I would say to her, as I have said in answer to the first question, that I will take her suggestion under advisement and will look into whether this issue is something that should be referred to the Fair Tax Commission. But again, whether I do or not, the Fair Tax Commission is able under its mandate to look at this kind of issue, as indeed it can look at any other issue dealing with the financing of education.

WILDLIFE MANAGEMENT

Mr Klopp: My question is for the Minister of Natural Resources. I have in my hand a document, Looking Ahead: A Wildlife Strategy for Ontario. As the minister knows, when we think of wildlife, we often think of northern Ontario. However, we do have wildlife in Huron county, as the minister is aware.

An hon member: In Zurich.

Mr Klopp: Even in Zurich, near Zurich. What is the status of the process in the development of the wildlife strategy? Where is the ministry at?

Hon Mr Wildman: The member has the report, just as all members have the report, because we released it on January 20 in this House, so all members have the report, as do many groups across the province. The report is the result of two years of work that was put forward by the previous government. An 11-member committee representing a wide spectrum of interests related to wildlife management in the province worked on the development of a strategy and came up with 62 proposals for new strategies that we hope, after consultation, will lead us eventually to the development of a new wildlife act that we hope to be introducing in this Legislature next year.

Mr Bradley: Was the House sitting on January 20?

Hon Mr Wildman: June 20.

Mr Klopp: One of the concerns that has been brought to me by a number of people in my riding is that of the consulting process. We had to go to Lambeth, near London, and a few of them have gone, but they were concerned about the time frame. Since the report has been brought out, will they have a chance to see the final draft before it becomes the policy of this government?

Hon Mr Wildman: The report was released for public consultation for 90 days. The 90 days was finished at the end of September. We have extended that because of the interest. I am informed that we have had over 500 individual responses. We have also had several formal submissions at the 15 meetings we have had, and we are going to have 10 more meetings across the province. Today alone, we received 30 submissions on this. There is a tremendous amount of interest across the province. I will make the commitment here today that when we come up with a final draft policy, that will also be subject to public consultation and will lead eventually to the drafting of legislation that will make Ontario a leader in wildlife management in North America.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Miclash: My question is to the minister responsible for long-term care. Over the last 12 years, the residents of Dryden have indicated a very real need to have a sister home to Kenora's Pinecrest home for the aged to secure residential treatment for Dryden's seniors. When I was elected in 1987, the Dryden extended care organization was one of the very first to solicit my help to achieve its goal, that goal being to provide a facility to care for their elderly, which is now being done in Kenora, some 110 kilometres away. One only has to imagine what hardships this would bring to families and those people needing this care. The minister has the recommendations from the services for seniors study for the Kenora district which indicates there should be movement towards the establishment of a sister home.

Let me summarize: 12 years of extensive lobbying to show the need. It is obviously there. The study is in. It justifies the need. Will the minister make this a priority? The residents of Dryden would like to know.

Hon Ms Lankin: I assure the member that I will ask for that report to be brought forward and I will take a look at it. I am sorry I am not familiar with it from that part of the province. It has not come forward. I know we are not in a situation right now of expanding nursing home beds but there have been a number of beds approved in parts of the province that have never been moved on. I am not sure if that incorporates the member's region or not. I apologize for my lack of knowledge on it. I will get further information and report back to him.

Mr Miclash: The minister should look to her right where she has a minister from the north. Behind her she has two ministers from the north. To her left, she has a minister from the north, and behind him, the Attorney General. The Attorney General's riding abuts my riding part of Dryden. I am surprised the minister does not know of this most important issue that the people of Dryden have brought forward. I really want the minister to take a look at this and come back with a commitment, a commitment that was made during the 1990 campaign by the NDP candidate. He said that her government would take a look at this immediately. Will the people of Dryden have to wait as long for the home for the aged as the people of Ontario have waited for long-term care?

Hon Ms Lankin: It is not a question that deserves a straight answer in the sense of the way in which the member has put it forward. What I have said to him is that I will look into the status of the request from that district health council. There are a number of things in northern Ontario that we have moved on. My colleagues have raised many concerns. There was a facility opened in Sioux Lookout at the end of August. It was a $4 million expenditure at that point in time. I think that to suggest there is not concern and action is unfair. However, I have said to the member that I am unaware of the specific request. I will get the information and will respond to him when I have that.

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE

Mr Tilson: I have a question for the Minister of Financial Institutions. I am sure the minister is aware that in an Angus Reid poll released today, 78% of Ontarians want the government to keep its promise and restore the right of innocent accident victims to sue. I do not imagine this would surprise the minister, because up until just a while ago, he and his government also supported the restoration of this inherent right of individuals in this province.

The Minister of Financial Institutions, I am sure, will remember his words of December 20, 1990, in the debate over the member for Leeds-Grenville's bill regarding the restoration of the right to sue. The member stated at that time, "I am going to support this piece of legislation because it deals with the most offensive part of Bill 68: the threshold." It is very clear that the minister's auto insurance legislation will involve the threshold test. For some reason, the threshold test no longer bothers him. Why is the minister going to break his promise to restore the right to sue when 78% of the Ontario population want him to honour his original position?

Hon Mr Charlton: The member's question is one that has been raised a couple of times here in the House since our announcement in September, and the question is interesting because he relates it to the poll that was released today. It is interesting to note that, first of all, it does not matter how we ask the question, whether we ask whether people want us to restore the right to sue or whether they want the right to claim, the answer comes out the same as it did in the last poll conducted by Angus Reid, where the wording was quite different but the result was the same.

Our commitment has not changed at all. We are determined to proceed to introduce a system that balances benefits with costs, that ensures a fair distribution of benefits to accident victims, that implements the right to sue for pain and suffering for innocent accident victims and that ensures overall that the system is affordable and fair in its delivery of adequate accident benefits to the auto accident victims in this province.

Mr Tilson: The people of this province want what the government has been promising for over a year and what the Premier and the member for Welland-Thorold stated in his 17 hours last year. They want the full right to sue, and the government is not going to give them that.

Under the present auto insurance legislation, a small percentage of people who have been seriously injured are able to sue for loss of past, present and future income. It is clear that under the minister's new, elusive piece of legislation we are patiently waiting for, the government will add insult to injury by not only breaking its promise to all Ontarians to restore the right to sue but by taking away the right to sue for economic loss. By taking away this right, the minister will be hurting the most vulnerable people of the province, the people who have been seriously injured, possibly for life.

The minister is conning the people of Ontario. By lowering the threshold, he is giving the impression that he is extending the right to sue, when in reality he is taking away one of the only rights that was maintained in the present no-fault package, the right to sue for economic loss. Why is the minister removing the right to sue for economic loss?

Hon Mr Charlton: Simply put, in very short order, we are removing the right to sue for economic loss for about 5% of the accident victims in this province and implementing accident benefits that include past, present and future losses of income to all accident victims who are seriously injured as a result of auto accidents. We intend, as I said, to ensure that the benefits are more fairly distributed to everyone who deserves those benefits, and not just those who win court cases.

ONTARIO HYDRO RATES

Mr G. Wilson: I have a question for the Minister of Energy. I hope he can clear up some confusion that has arisen, I think, in part out of comments in the House. It is something constituents have brought to my office, and I am sure other members have had the same question put to them, because it is a very important issue. It has to do with the rate hikes that have been publicized regarding Hydro. The figure of 44% over the next three years has been suggested. I wonder whether the minister has some comment about this figure.

Hon Mr Ferguson: Members will know that some time ago the chair of Ontario Hydro was interviewed on this matter and he was asked a question—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Ferguson: I can continue now? Thank you. The chair of Ontario Hydro, in an interview scrum, was asked the question where Ontario Hydro rates would be going in the future. At that time he was asked if Hydro rates could increase as much as double-digit over the next three years. The Hydro chair at that time replied, "Yes, there could be double-digit increases over the next three years." From that statement, somebody extrapolated the figure of 44%.

The fact of the matter is that Hydro rates will not be increasing 44% over the next three years. The increases in fact will be much lower than that. I think it would be pure speculation on anybody's part as to what the increases would be in the next two to three years.

NATURAL GAS

Mr McGuinty: My question is for the Minister of Energy as well. If Bill 118 became law, it would authorize Hydro to subsidize ratepayers to switch from electricity to natural gas. More specifically, the cost of this fuel switching program will be added to the Hydro rates of all ratepayers, including those ratepayers who do not have access to natural gas and who have no reasonable prospect of getting natural gas in the foreseeable future. These ratepayers, quite understandably, are extremely anxious to meet with the committee dealing with Bill 118 to express their very serious reservations about the fuel-switching program. Most of these ratepayers reside in rural and northern communities, including Gore Bay, Sioux Lookout, Wingham, Rockwood, Bonville and hundreds of others. In fairness to those hundreds of thousands of ratepayers who do not have access to gas, does the minister believe our committee should visit their communities?

Hon Mr Ferguson: Encouraging residents of this province, in the north or in the south, to switch to alternative fuels in the future will not be the only program or initiative this government comes up with. I want to suggest to the honourable member that if he could explain to the residents not only of the north but perhaps even of his own riding the number of programs that are readily available and accessible to the people of Ontario, there are great savings that can be achieved by all consumers across the province—in fact, savings greater than the proposed 11% increase in 1992.

Mr McGuinty: I want to acquaint the minister with some of the specific facts behind this and the reason I am asking him. Yesterday at the subcommittee meeting of the standing committee on resources development, a government member provided me and my Conservative counterpart with a list of communities to be visited by our Bill 118 committee. We were told the list was not negotiable, subject to perhaps one exception. That list did not contain a single community that is not serviced by gas.

The government has held itself out as being committed not only to consultation but to a fair consultative process which genuinely works towards obtaining the views of all parties affected by government initiatives, including those that stand against it. By refusing to allow our committee to visit our rural population and those parts of the north that are not serviced by gas, this government is deliberately preventing our committee from hearing from those communities which stand to lose a great deal from Bill 118.

Will the minister here and now undertake to provide instructions to his committee whip to permit our committee to visit communities that are not supplied by gas and, more particularly, to ensure that one half of the communities we visit are not serviced by natural gas?

Hon Mr Ferguson: In answer to the member's question, I understand the committee will be visiting Thunder Bay, for example. There is a large part of Thunder Bay that is not supplied by gas. We are prepared to visit any community across Ontario. My understanding of the discussions that took place was that they simply wanted to concentrate on major centres so that as many people as possible could appear before the committee. It is as simple as that.

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE

Mr Elston: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Today I became just a little bit exercised with you when you stood up and chastised our people when there was some noise in relation to answers being given by the other side. At the time the Minister of Health indicated she was unable to hear the question, the people who were interrupting were the Minister of Transportation and the Minister of Northern Development and Mines. The problem for me, Mr Speaker, is that you immediately turned to our side of the House and said, "Order," and you did not address your concerns to those people. If you are not going to address the need for some balance of activity in this House, then it is going to be very difficult for us to understand how you are going to hold the confidence of all members in conducting a balanced legislative session here.

The Speaker: Indeed I think the Leader of the Opposition knows full well that I take my job of maintaining order and decorum in this chamber very seriously. I certainly appreciate when every member of the assembly does his or her best to maintain a calm and reasoned approach to debate. There will be times when there will be noise in the chamber. I certainly do my best to make sure it is not excessive, but at the same time I respond as best I can to requests from individual members when they indicate they cannot hear a question or a reply. I will continue to deal with that in an evenhanded way. I appreciate everyone's assistance in this matter.

PETITIONS

CHRONIC FATIGUE AND IMMUNE DYSFUNCTION SYNDROME

Mr Carr: I am pleased to table a petition signed by concerned residents of Oakville and the surrounding area which reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas chronic fatigue and immune deficiency syndrome...is a chronic, debilitating disease currently affecting over two million adults and children in North America; and

"Whereas diagnosis is difficult and the direct costs to our health care system are enormous, there is a drain on the social services and tax revenues are severely affected because affected people cannot work;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to support the establishment of a task force to study the most appropriate method of establishing an information centre and clinic to provide both information and care to persons with CFME, their families, physicians, educators and others."

I will be signing that.

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

Mr J. Wilson: I have the pleasure to present a petition to the Legislature of Ontario on behalf of my constituents in the riding of Simcoe West. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the Queen of Canada has long been a symbol of national unity for Canadians from all walks of life and from all ethnic backgrounds; and

"Whereas the people of Canada are currently facing a constitutional crisis which could potentially result in the breakup of the federation and are in need of unifying symbols;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to restore the oath to the Queen for Ontario's police officers."

That is signed by a number of people from Ottawasaga township, Stayner and Sunnidale township. I do have affixed my name to this petition.

INTRODUCTIONS OF BILLS

HEALTH CARE WORKERS' PROTECTION ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991

SUR LA PROTECTION DES TRAVAILLEURS DE LA SANTÉ

Mr Morrow moved first reading of Bill 147, An Act to protect Health Care Workers from the Transmission of the Human Immunodeficiency Virus.

M. Morrow propose la première lecture du projet de loi 147, Loi visant à protéger les travailleurs de la santé contre la transmission du virus de l'immunodéficience humaine.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Mr Morrow: The purpose of this bill is to protect health care workers from the transmission of HIV in the course of their employment. The bill provides for certain precautionary measures, such as the use of precautionary equipment, the disposal of hazardous materials and adherence to certain sanitary measures to be followed by the health care employees.

This bill guarantees that no worker will lose his or her job as a result of having contacted the virus. The bill further ensures the employers assign duties and responsibilities that are similar to regular duties and responsibilities to a worker who has contacted the virus if the continuation of these regular duties and responsibilities would endanger the safety of the public and certain workers.

RETAIL BUSINESS HOLIDAYS AMENDMENT ACT, 1991

MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES JOURS FÉRIÉS DANS LE COMMERCE DE DÉTAIL

Mr Elston moved first reading of Bill 148, An Act to amend the Retail Business Holidays Act.

M. Elston propose la première lecture du projet de loi 148, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les jours fériés dans le commerce de détail.

The Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? No?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Mr Elston: As my question in the House earlier today indicated, I have introduced a bill that really is a copy of the amendment that is being put forward by the member for Oakville South in the committee dealing with the legislation, which is under the charge of the Solicitor General. In reply to a question asked first by our party and second by the member for Oakville South, the Solicitor General said his consideration of legislation would not allow him to support that amendment. This now gives him the opportunity of supporting an amendment—

Hon Mr Cooke: Are we debating this?

Mr Elston: Mr Speaker, I am now being prevented from talking to the bill by the House leader.

The Speaker: The honourable leader of the opposition will know that it is customary on first reading to make a brief statement about the purpose of the bill.

Mr Elston: On a point of order, if that is necessary, Mr Speaker: I am only introducing this bill because the Solicitor General has refused to allow a motion to carry in the committee of the Legislature that would eliminate the need for this bill. Having said that he will not support it in that forum, I have brought it by way of a bill to this forum so that we can vote on it. Mr Speaker, all I am saying to you in my explanation is that I am only doing this because the Solicitor General has refused to intervene to save some 3,000 jobs and therefore this bill is needed.

To conclude, if the government will allow us to go ahead and pass this bill, we can deal with it very quickly. We can save 3,000 jobs. We can assist people in coming to grips with the harsh economic reality that they need to work when work is offered. Let's allow those people to work. Here is the option the Solicitor General needs. He can do it either in committee or by supporting this private bill.

DISTRICT OF NIPISSING AND PARRY SOUND ACT, 1991

Mr Eves moved first reading of Bill 149, An Act respecting the Amalgamation of Municipalities in the Districts of Nipissing and Parry Sound.

Motion agreed to.

Mr Eves: Very briefly, the Ministry of Municipal Affairs has had for some time now, in fact under the previous government, an ongoing review of municipalities and the organization of municipalities throughout Ontario. Many municipalities, not only in the riding of Parry Sound but also in the district of Nipissing, have been participating in this review. They have been told conflicting stories by the ministry officials. Some have said there will not be annexation or amalgamation without the consent of the municipalities involved. Yet other officials in the Ministry of Municipal Affairs have said that is not the case and that the ministry is going ahead with amalgamations, government reorganization, regional government or two-tier government—call it what you will—whether the municipalities want it or not.

I think it is very important that the elected representatives in those municipalities, where they are organized and have councils, or local services boards and unorganized municipalities where they have them, or failing that, that majority of residents in unorganized municipalities, have their say and agree to such amalgamation. Otherwise, I do not think it should take place. That is the purpose of the bill.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

FRAUDULENT DEBTORS
ARREST REPEAL ACT 1991LOI DE 1991
ABROGEANT LA LOI SUR L'ARRESTATION
DES DÉBITEURS EN FUITE

Mr Hampton moved second reading of Bill 76, An Act to repeal the Fraudulent Debtors Arrest Act.

M. Hampton propose la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 76, Loi portant abrogation de la Loi sur l'arrestation des débiteurs en fuite.

Hon Mr Hampton: The Fraudulent Debtors Arrest Act has been part of Ontario law in its present form since 1909. Its history can be traced back to pre-Confederation days when property rights were often viewed as more important than the civil rights of individuals. This bill will remove from the statute book a method of arresting and imprisoning a citizen for civil debt which, outside the context of family law, is quite archaic. The creditors, lawyers and interest groups the Ministry of the Attorney General has consulted with unanimously endorse this bill.

Fortunately, the existing act is rarely used now that numerous modern legal remedies that focus on the assets rather than on the person of the debtor are available. Of course, where spouses are in default of their family support obligations, the remedies provided in other legislation including the use of imprisonment in appropriate cases will continue to be available.

The arbitrary arrest and imprisonment provisions provided in the Fraudulent Debtors Arrest Act can no longer be tolerated. I am pleased therefore to put before the House a bill calling for its repeal. I am anxious to hear the contributions of members from the opposition on this bill and I understand that at least one of them has some remarks he would like to make. I will listen now to the contributions of the opposition.

Mr Chiarelli: We certainly support this bill and see nothing objectionable in it, with a couple of riders. First of all, it should be known that if the Attorney General is going to address the issue of the citizens of Ontario being put in jail for what amounts to debts, I think the Attorney General should give some consideration to the reality that is happening out there in Ontario whereby people with unpaid parking tickets, which is basically a debt to a municipality or to a particular ministry, are in fact still being put in jail for non-payment of these fines, which are debts. They are basically being put in jail for what amounts to minor debts. In some cases it is for two, three and four days.

I think it is important the Attorney General look at the whole area of imprisonment for minor infractions and minor offences, particularly those relating to debts. But what this bill does is put in perspective that the Attorney General has no overall agenda. We see here this afternoon in the Legislature three bills being presented, Bills 76, 75 and 42. I cannot make any sense out of where the Attorney General wants to bring the province on the issue of administration of justice.

When one looks at this particular bill, Bill 76, it is being dealt with on what I think we can call an ad hoc basis. There are hundreds of bills in Ontario that need repealing and amending to refine the system of justice, but this Attorney General has no stated policy for dealing with it. All of a sudden, up pops a bill that has no context.

When we look at the three bills that are presented here today, there is no context in which we in opposition or the people of Ontario can place them in terms of the initiatives of the Attorney General. We see a little ad hockery here and a little ad hockery there and it does not make any sense whatsoever. There are fundamental reforms that are required in this province for the administration of justice and all we see is this Attorney General reacting to issues that happen to end up on his desk, and who is very passive when it comes to any significant reform.

I defy anybody in this province to look at the actions of the Attorney General and his ministry and be able to come up with any general sense of where he wants the administration of justice to go. There is simply nothing on the ground. There is nothing in the mail. We have what amounts to an ad hoc bill.

Even when we look at this ad hoc bill, we find it does not even address the question of people who have not paid parking tickets being put in jail. If the Attorney General is going to look at the issue of jailing people for debts, he should put it in some context, look at reforming the justice system instead of dealing with a bit of ad hockery. I urge the Attorney General to do that.

Mr Harnick: This bill, the Fraudulent Debtors Arrest Repeal Act, has been around for a while. It is an act the Liberals originally introduced in May 1990 and it is a bill the present Attorney General brought back, I believe verbatim, for first reading on April 23, 1991.

I am supporting this bill. I am going to be very brief. It is a bill that is finally going to rid this province of the concept and notion of debtors' prisons. But I do not understand why the bill was brought for first reading on April 23, 1991, and is still with us, and why it is one of the three bills the Attorney General is going to deal with in this particular session of the Legislature. I saw the wish list of the government House leader. There are only three Attorney General's bills on it, and I reiterate what my Liberal colleague just said: Where is this Attorney General going in terms of the administration of justice in this province?

This is a piece of Liberal legislation. The next bill we are going to deal with is the Law Society Amendment Act. It is a piece of Liberal legislation. The next bill is the Arbitration Act. It is a piece of Liberal legislation. That is it for this whole session of the Legislature.

I do not know what the Attorney General is doing. These little housekeeping items should have been finished last April when they were introduced. I do not know why they are hanging around so long. I do not know why the Attorney General does not bring us some bills dealing with access to justice, as he promised. I do not know why he does not take steps to improve the justice system in this province, and I do not know why we are wasting our time with things like this that remain on the order paper a year after they have been introduced.

Hon Mr Hampton: Let me thank both opposition critics for their most kind comments, and let me say to them, first to the critic for the Conservative Party, that when he can get his leader to stop occupying House time by reading into the record the names of the lakes and rivers of Ontario, that we will bring forward legislation for second reading at a much more rapid pace.

When the honourable member can assure us that we will have the co-operation of his colleagues, we will be very happy to oblige him with more legislation. In fact, I am still waiting to have from the Conservative critic his comments on the draft Limitations Act we have brought forward. I would have thought he would have jumped at that and been only too happy to provide us with his comments.

The member for Ottawa West asked—or made comments to the effect—what are we doing to deal with issues of incarceration with respect to minor offences like municipal bylaws and the Highway Traffic Act, etc. I am happy to tell him that we have been working on this issue since early this year and we will be bringing forward some legislation, I hope, this fall, if the schedule permits. That should interest him a great deal.

Otherwise, I repeat, I thank the two opposition critics for their very kind and supportive comments.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Bill ordered for third reading.

Le projet de loi devra passer à l'étape de troisième lecture.

LAW SOCIETY AMENDMENT ACT (TEMPORARY MEMBERS), 1991

LOI DE 1991 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LA SOCIÉTÉ DU BARREAU (MEMBRES PROVISOIRES)

Mr Hampton moved second reading of Bill 75, An Act to amend the Law Society Act.

M. Hampton propose la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 75, Loi portant modification de la Loi sur la Société du barreau.

Hon Mr Hampton: I am pleased to bring forward for second reading An Act to amend the Law Society Act. The purpose of this bill is to allow exchange programs between crown counsel and crown attorneys in the employ of the Ministry of the Attorney General and lawyers from foreign jurisdictions. This will enable the ministry to enhance its professional development programs.

The bill permits the Law Society of Upper Canada, upon the request of the Attorney General, to admit to the practice of law in Ontario lawyers who are not Canadian citizens or permanent residents. This temporary membership carries with it all the rights and responsibilities accorded to lawyers save the right to vote in law society elections.

The essence of the bill is this: We have a number of very qualified, capable and experienced crown attorneys and crown counsel within the Ministry of the Attorney General. In order that they may broaden their careers and obtain experience elsewhere, we would like to be able to engage in exchange programs with other jurisdictions. However, legislation such as this is needed to further the exchange program.

I understand both of the opposition critics are again in support of this legislation, but they may have other comments they wish to offer.

Mr Chiarelli: Again, this is a very narrow bill that is probably going to have some limited impact or usage. On the other hand, although we are going to support it, we support it with great caution and with some advice to the Attorney General. On the face of it, this particular bill is quite broad in the sense of what amounts to the discretion of the Attorney General. We will see in the Ministry of the Attorney General or the Ministry of the Solicitor General persons who will be allowed to practise law in those ministries who may not in fact be qualified. As the minister knows, there is a very strict qualification process in Ontario for people to be admitted to the bar and practise law and we are creating an exception here.

The bill itself raises more questions than it answers, because it is so narrow. First of all, why would the Ministry of the Attorney General or the Ministry of the Solicitor General be given the favouritism to import legal practitioners on a temporary basis?

We know the ministries have various exchange programs and from time to time have special needs, but I ask the Attorney General, what about large corporations, for example, with in-house counsel? From time to time, large corporations may have special needs for counsel from outside the jurisdiction. This bill will give to the Attorney General the right to say: "I, as a person who has to hire lawyers, will be given an exemption. I will be able to bring in a temporarily approved or qualified practitioner." But the large corporation that may have special needs on a temporary basis does not have the same rights. I say the same thing of a large law firm practising in Ontario which may have special needs. It does not have the same rights to the exemption the Attorney General is giving himself and the Solicitor General.

I simply ask, why? If the Attorney General was going to introduce this bill and provide for temporary qualification, why does he give himself and the Solicitor General special treatment? Does he not think that perhaps a large corporation might have need of temporary counsel from another province to satisfy certain specific expert needs? What about a large law firm? I raise the question and say to the Attorney General that although we are going to vote for this legislation at this time, I think it is incumbent upon him and his ministry to look into the answer to that question.

The other question it raises and does not address is why the Attorney General feels we cannot satisfy this particular need from within the province. All who are familiar with legal practice in Ontario know that these are pretty tough economic times for a lot of firms and a lot of practitioners, and yet the Attorney General is passing special legislation for himself and the Solicitor General to permit practitioners to come in and take jobs in our public service.

legislation for himself and the Solicitor General to permit practitioners to come in and take jobs in our public service.

I ask the Attorney General, why is he doing it at this time? We know there has been an absolute flood of people coming into this government from Manitoba, particularly with NDP credentials. I wonder if the Attorney General and the Solicitor General might not be looking to some NDP practitioners from Manitoba or some other NDP province to give an NDP slant to the administration we are seeing through this whole government. I am raising the question.

This bill, when it is passed, will give the Attorney General and the Solicitor General the right to raid Manitoba for NDP practitioners and, believe me, Mr Speaker, you and I both know there are very few NDP practitioners in the legal profession in Ontario. If he wants to fill his ministry and the Ministry of the Solicitor General with NDP advice and NDP practitioners, this gives him a big opening to do it. He can just open the floodgates to Manitoba and fill his ministry, as we have seen this government do in a number of ministries over the last 14 or 15 months.

This raises the other issue of a non-agenda for this ministry: There is no indication of any kind of reform agenda whatsoever.

The last government, through the Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology, the member for Wilson Heights, and through the Premier, made special efforts to try to open up free trade among the provinces, professions and tradespeople, and very strong initiatives were taken. Here we see one little piece of legislation which addresses bringing in professionals from other provinces and perhaps other jurisdictions.

This bill raises the greater question as to what the Attorney General is doing to open up free trade of the legal profession across this country. We know there are interprovincial barriers in every area of our economy and basically in every profession. We know it exists in the legal profession; we know it exists in the accounting profession. We have certified general accountants in British Columbia who are qualified to do the same work as chartered accountants. They can issue opinions on financial statements of public companies, but they cannot do that in Ontario. That is a responsibility of the Ministry of the Attorney General.

We see no greater dealing with issues; we see ad hockery. We see little slivers of legislation being put forward. Again, these three bills here today underline that the Attorney General cannot make any kind of statement to this province or the legal profession as to what direction the administration of justice will be going.

The ad hockery is so total, so complete, that it borders on the irresponsible. We see a little support and custody orders enforcement here; we see a little bit of Law Society Act amendment there, we see a little debtors arrest act over there, and what does it say to the people of Ontario? It says: "We need a little filler from the Attorney General. Let's throw it in."

But when we look substantively at court reform, reform of the judicial system, where are we going in the 1990s and into the year 2000 with the system of justice we have in Ontario? These three bills today say absolutely nothing. They simply raise questions. As I said, we will reluctantly support this bill, but I hope the questions being raised here now will be addressed in a serious way by the Attorney General and by the ministry.

1540

Mr Harnick: This bill is so simple and so straightforward that I do not hesitate to say that even the NDP backbenchers understand it. That is how straightforward it is. I am going to support this bill. Again, it is a bill from the former Attorney General, the member for St George-St David, whom I believe deserves the credit. The interesting thing is that this bill will be the fourth bill, I believe, since September 6, 1990, that the Attorney General has brought to this House. This bill was presented for first reading on December 17, 1990. It is one page long and it has now taken almost one year to get it back here for second reading—one year for a bill that allows crown attorneys temporary status before the Ontario bar so they can partake in exchange programs.

It took one year for this bill to come back and what really worries me is that if the Attorney General runs out of initiatives initiated by the former Attorney General, we might not have any more bills presented to this House by the Attorney General.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Don't worry; be happy.

Mr Harnick: The Minister of Housing is telling me, "Don't worry; be happy." Maybe she is right and maybe we should be happy and maybe the whole legal profession breathes a sign of relief when the Attorney General does not do anything. Maybe in that respect the best policy this government can have is to do nothing because everything it has done up to now has been a disaster. Maybe the Minister of Housing is right when she says, "Be happy that we are doing nothing." I guess the only way people can be assured is if this government commits itself to doing nothing; then nobody has to worry. We can just wait three more years and then the government will be replaced and things will start to happen again. I appreciate the Minister of Housing interjecting because it helps me along in thinking of more things to talk about.

Getting back to the bill, it is a very straightforward bill. As I say, everybody on the government side of the House has to understand what this bill means. I am going to support it. It is an initiative of the former Attorney General and it is a good piece of legislation. It promotes learning on behalf of crown attorneys. I think they will be pleased with this bill, as I am, and I will be supporting it.

Hon Mr Wildman: I listened very carefully to the comments of my friend the member for Willowdale and I would like to know if what he is really suggesting is the long-standing Tory approach to the province, and that is benign neglect.

The Deputy Speaker: The question is not relevant to the issue.

Mr Harnick: May I respond, Mr Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: No, you cannot respond on that. Are there any further questions or comments?

in the sense that what we have seen is a number of bills from the Ministry of the Attorney General that are really ad hoc and reactive to circumstances and that indicate the government has no sense of direction as to where it is going with the Ministry of the Attorney General or reform of the court system.

I think he has hit the nail on the head. We look across this chamber and see the Attorney General squirming in his seat; he knows exactly what we are talking about. He knows he has no agenda that has been put through his cabinet, and that he has been dealing on a totally ad hoc basis with his ministry.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Willowdale, you have two minutes.

Hon Mr Wildman: Two minutes to respond, not two minutes for the rest of your life.

Mr Harnick: I appreciate that. I just want to respond to the minister responsible for native affairs. There are so many ministers here and they are providing me with so much help this afternoon, and I appreciate that.

The minister responsible for native affairs stated that the old Tory approach was benign neglect. If benign neglect is what worked, the key is benign, and benign means good. It means positive. It means helpful. I hope that the use of the word "benign" by the minister will send a shock wave through the government benches and turn them around so that the efforts they take in future will be benign efforts, as this piece of legislation is.

Hon Mr Hampton: The member for Ottawa West raised a number of questions which I would like to respond to briefly. He asked why the legislation in question does not deal, for example, with law firms in the private sector or corporations that might be interested in indulging themselves in this type of exchange. Frankly, we have had no requests from either large law firms or from private sector corporations. If they were to come forward with requests, we would certainly look at them with some interest and we would be prepared to sit down with them and discuss how this legislation might be expanded or altered to suit their needs as well.

I want to point out to the member for Ottawa West that all this legislation gives us is the capacity to request the Law Society of Upper Canada to admit someone. The Law Society of Upper Canada in fact could say no in a given situation. So in terms of this creating some very special situation for government lawyers, the situation is not all that incredibly special, since the law society will continue to have its authority with respect to who may or may not practise.

The member for Ottawa West made some rather disparaging and, I think, unfortunate remarks about the fact that this type of legislation might be used for some type of political patronage, recruiting, for example, lawyers who worked in a province that was formerly governed by the New Democratic Party or is now governed by the New Democratic Party. The member should know that the New Democratic Party just won elections in Saskatchewan and British Columbia, and all of the so-called NDP lawyers across the country, if they are scrambling to go anywhere, will go there since, no doubt, there will be some job openings. I wish he would keep current history in his mind when he makes these remarks.

1550

Finally, I want to point out that with the permission of the Law Society of Upper Canada, someone who comes to Ontario to work within the government on an exchange basis is only granted temporary status. In other words, it is not permanent status or permanent authority to practise; it is only temporary. The law society will specify, when it gives that permission, the time limits during which someone may practise and the scope of his practice.

I regret that the member for Ottawa West made those comments. They are the only unhelpful comments he has made today and I am really sorry he made them.

Both the member for Willowdale and the member for Ottawa West say, "What has the Ministry of the Attorney General been doing over the last year?" I want to recite for them some brief history. Eighteen days after we became the government we discovered that the former government in this province had not been looking after the administration of justice very well, especially in our criminal courts. We found by way of a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada that the criminal courts in the province were in such terrible shape that we had to make a number of sacrifices and a number of changes to deal with the legacy that was left us.

I want to say to the member for Willowdale that I remember quite well that he was sitting in committee on the family support plan. He was so busy there and so interested in that legislation that he actually asked me to consider some of his amendments. So I do not think it is altogether true for the member for Willowdale to say he has had nothing to do in the last little while. As I remember it, he has been very busy. He has taken great interest in the legislation we have brought forward, such as the family support plan. In fact, he has gone out there and lobbied against parts of it.

I say that just to answer and respond to the very helpful remarks made by my two colleagues in the opposition.

Motion agreed to.

La motion est adoptée.

Bill ordered for committee of the whole House.

Le projet de loi est déposé au comité plénier de la Chambre.

ARBITRATION ACT, 1991

LOI DE 1991 SUR L'ARBITRAGE

Mr Hampton moved second reading of Bill 42, An Act to revise the Arbitrations Act.

M. Hampton propose la deuxième lecture du projet de loi 42, Loi portant révision de la Loi sur l'arbitrage.

Hon Mr Hampton: Members will recall that this statute overhauls the law relating to commercial and other arbitration in Ontario, with two exceptions. First, it does not apply to labour arbitrations in any context, as they are governed by their own statutes. Second, it does not apply to international commercial arbitration, which also has its own statute.

Bill 42 grew out of a lengthy and thorough process of consultation in Ontario, Alberta and across the country through the Uniform Law Conference of Canada. This bill is essentially the same as the Uniform Arbitration Act adopted by the Uniform Law Conference in 1990.

The purpose of the Arbitration Act, 1991, is to provide a framework for the private settlement of disputes that will be as clear as possible for those who use it, while preserving the fairness of the process. The ability of an unwilling party to delay or derail an arbitration has been reduced to a minimum. The parties are generally free to set their own rules for arbitrations—that is, to override the act—so they have a great deal of flexibility. However, the law and the courts will ensure that the parties stick to their agreement to arbitrate, do not proceed unfairly, and abide by the result when it is given.

We believe Bill 42 will make it easier for people to use arbitration to resolve their disputes and thus make arbitration more attractive than litigation in many cases. This must help both the spirit of the relationships that have given rise to the disputes and the speed and cost at which a resolution is reached.

Bill 42 is supported by the Arbitration and Mediation Institute of Ontario and by the Canadian Bar Association—Ontario. I therefore ask the House to support the amendments I will be introducing in committee of the whole and to join me in enacting this very useful legislation.

Mr Chiarelli: This is a good bill. It is long overdue and it is supported by just about anyone who is familiar with the legal system in any sense or with the process of arbitration.

The bill was formulated by the previous government, by the previous Attorney General, the member for St George-St David, and he is to be complimented for preparing an excellent bill. I want to compliment the Attorney General for proceeding with it, although, as has been indicated by the Conservative critic the member for Willowdale, it is hard to understand why the Attorney General has not used a bit more dispatch and speed in coming forward with this bill.

I want to spend a few minutes talking about the issue of arbitration in the context of alternative dispute resolution, because I think it is important for the members of this Legislature and the people of Ontario to understand that arbitration is only one small dimension of a whole developing area of alternative dispute resolution. I want to define alternative dispute resolution as it was defined by the standing committee on administration of justice of this Legislature when it presented a report to this House in June 1990.

The report says: "What is ADR? Very simply, alternative dispute resolution refers to the 'myriad of non-judicial processes for resolving conflicts.' These non-judicial processes may include negotiation, mediation, arbitration, conciliation, private judging, neutral expert fact-finding, mini-trial, summary jury trial and moderated settlement conferences."

The point I am making is that the Attorney General has still not moved at all on the recommendations of the standing committee on administration of justice which presented this report last June. The recommendations of the justice committee go way beyond the issue of arbitration. Once again what the Attorney General has done is take a bill that was on the shelf and bring it forward in an overdue manner without putting it in any context.

I mentioned earlier in my comments on the previous two bills that there is no general agenda, there is no context for where we are going in Ontario with the administration of justice. Just dealing with the Arbitration Act underlines that particular point.

As I indicated, the whole area of ADR deals with a range of issues, including mediation, non-judicial processes of various types, conciliation, private judging, etc. I want to take some time to put the Arbitration Act in the context of what was recommended to this Legislature last June. I also want to point out how this item came to be before the justice committee in late 1989 and into 1990.

Under the new rules which were adopted in 1989, I believe standing order 123, it is possible for subcommittees of the standing committees of this Legislature to place items to be dealt with on the agenda of a committee, and so many hours will be allocated to deal with a number of issues.

The standing committee on administration of justice in the last Parliament had such a subcommittee meeting and in a totally non-partisan manner decided it wanted to do a review of alternative dispute resolution techniques, including the question of arbitration. The members of that committee—the Conservatives, Liberals and NDP—thought this was an issue that needed attention by the Ministry of the Attorney General and by the whole judicial process.

We had a process that I was very proud of and I think members of all parties were very proud of. Using the new rules of this House in a very non-partisan way, we looked at a very significant dimension and a very significant element of the administration of justice in Ontario and were able to come up with a very major report which, I am told by the current chairman of the standing committee on administration of justice, is still in very large demand. There are many people across the province who are still asking for papers that were presented before the committee dealing with this question of alternative dispute resolution.

Just to indicate what types of witnesses came before that committee, I want to go back to one of the appendices in the report from last June and indicate to the House some of the renowned members of the legal fraternity in Canada who came before our committee to talk about alternative dispute resolution and to urge this government and the then Ministry of the Attorney General to move forward with significant initiatives in the area of ADR.

Some of the people who came before our committee, who volunteered to come before our committee when they were asked to, included Dr Gary Austin, co-ordinator of the London Custody and Access Project and psychologist with the London Family Court Clinic. He teaches in the department of psychology, University of Western Ontario, has published widely and was a member of the Attorney General's advisory committee on family mediation. Mr Robert A. Blair, QC, is chair of the Canadian Bar Association—Ontario subcommittee on alternative dispute resolution, a partner in Stockwood, Blair, Spies and Ashby of Toronto and founder of the Private Court, a service providing experienced counsel as adjudicators in largely commercial disputes.

I will not indicate all the witnesses who came. I want to highlight some of those who I think may be more well known across the country, not only in Ontario.

Paul Emond, a professor at Osgoode Hall law school, wrote very extensively and recently edited Commercial Dispute Resolution (Canada Law Book, 1989). He is an expert in commercial and environmental resource development and public and native dispute resolution, and is editor of Canadian Environmental Mediation Newsletter, published by Conflict Management Resources, a joint enterprise of York University's environmental studies faculty and Osgoode Hall law school.

Other well-known people who came before the committee to recommend major initiatives in ADR included Brian Gardiner, from Canadian Dispute Resolution Corp; Gordon Henderson, QC and Order of Canada, who is a senior partner at Gowling, Strathy and Henderson of Ottawa. Among his many other affiliations he is chairman of the Board of governors, Foundation of the Arbitrators' Institute of Canada, and a member of the Canadian Institute for Conflict Resolution. I might add that Mr Henderson, who is closely connected with the issue of arbitration and welcomes this new Arbitration Act, also was very high on other forms of alternative dispute resolution and presented a very well thought out brief before our committee.

Other people were Shin Imai, who was counsel with the court reform task force from the Ministry of the Attorney General; Roberta Jamieson, who was Ontario's Ombudsman; Harry LaForme, who was a commissioner of the Indian Commission of Ontario, and Jack R. Miller, who came from a major law firm in Montreal to make submissions to our committee and had much to say about moving into the whole area of alternative dispute resolution. Another person who came before our committee and who is known to many members of this Legislature is Dean Leachey, co-ordinator of Network: Interaction for Conflict Resolution, Kitchener, a clearinghouse for dispute resolution programs across Canada.

Many others came who are very experienced in this major initiative of law reform across Canada, people such as Ernest Tannis of the Canadian Institute for Conflict Resolution, one of the most significant experts in Canada and North America, and Bonita J. Thompson, a partner from a major law firm in British Columbia who chaired the Canadian Bar Association task force on alternative dispute resolution.

We had, in a non-partisan way, the best legal minds in the country coming before the standing committee on administration of justice to make major recommendations on alternative dispute resolution, so it is with some disappointment that I see the Attorney General bringing forward the arbitrations bill in what amounts to a vacuum. The Attorney General did not indicate any major thrust, any new direction for alternative dispute resolution techniques or initiatives for Ontario. He picked up a bill that existed from the previous administration which had been introduced by the then Attorney General and simply brought it forward.

I have seen no action whatsoever from the Ministry of the Attorney General that indicates it intends to do anything with the recommendations of the standing committee on administration of justice dealing with alternative dispute resolution. There is one particular recommendation of a number that were made that I want to refer to, because it sort of sets a framework for legislating for governments. As I said, this recommendation was made before the last election and in a non-partisan context. It was intended for whatever government happened to be there at a particular time, whether it be an NDP government, a Liberal government or a Conservative government.

I will quote verbatim recommendation 3 of the standing committee on the administration of justice report because I think it is important. It will put in context one of the key initiatives with respect to ADR:

"The committee recommends that the government review present and future legislation and that it build in ADR procedures where they would lead to a less costly and more expeditious resolution of disputes that could arise under the statute. The committee further recommends that ADR techniques be put at the disposal of agencies, boards and commissions in the ways proposed by the Macaulay report."

That is a very significant recommendation. It is a recommendation that was adopted and implemented when the previous government enacted the Ontario motorist protection plan. As members know, what that legislation did was to create a very significant alternative dispute resolution process of mediation and arbitration with respect to disputes in the area of motor vehicle accidents.

All the reports coming from the insurance commission indicate that this process is working tremendously well. There are no complaints. People who have used the system are happy with the system. It is an example of what this committee's recommendation is intended to do to take disputes out of the contradictory dispute arena and put them in an arena where there is mediation and discussion and arbitration if necessary.

We have an example of the government of the day not following this recommendation when we look at Bill 115, the Retail Business Establishments Statute Law Amendment Act, and how it deals with resulting disputes. Rather than following the advice of the justice committee and the advice of all parties of the day, the Solicitor General has basically, carte blanche, provided widespread appeals to Sunday shopping bylaws to the Ontario Municipal Board, which we know is backlogged 12 or 13 months. There will be hundreds and hundreds of appeals going to the Ontario Municipal Board, which can hardly handle them.

When we look at the context of the legislation this government brings forward, there is no context. This arbitration bill is being brought forward in a vacuum. The Sunday shopping amendments for appeals to the Ontario Municipal Board are being brought forward in a vacuum.

I just want to refer to a transcript of John Kruger, chairman of the Ontario Municipal Board, before the standing committee on government agencies. In January of this year, only a few months ago, he talked about alternative dispute resolution and basically said: "The workload on the board is enormous, and we have to find better ways of handling this internally and administratively. We have to look at things like alternative dispute resolution. We have to look at things like mediation and all of these methods rather than just put on more members. That's what we are going to have to attempt to do."

In conclusion, I want to say that the arbitration legislation which is being presented here today is a good bill, but again, it is presented on an ad hoc basis and it is presented in a vacuum. This government has demonstrated on a number of pieces of legislation—such as the arbitration bill, the amendments to Bill 115, appeals to the Ontario Municipal Board—that it really does not have a philosophy of managing disputes in Ontario. Not only does it not have a philosophy, but it is not listening to the best legal advice that was assembled by the justice committee over a period of 8 or 10 months to deal with alternative dispute resolution.

I would really encourage the Attorney General to look at the whole area of alternative dispute resolution in a major, significant way so that we can bring the system of justice and the system of resolving disputes in Ontario into the 1990s and into the next century.

There is no indication that the Attorney General or the Ministry of the Attorney General has any intention of following the excellent recommendations of this report from the justice committee. I certainly urge him to consider doing so.

Mr Harnick: At the outset, I would like to say I will be joining with the Attorney General in supporting this bill. I also believe it is necessary to give credit to the former Attorney General, who was in office at the time the bill was drafted.

As I indicated with the previous two bills I have had the opportunity to talk about this afternoon, I note this bill was delivered for first reading on March 27, 1991, so we have got to this relatively quickly for second reading. It is now eight months away. I can appreciate that the wheels of justice move slowly, and it is true that the wheels of justice in the courts move slowly. They get their cue from the way the wheels of justice move within the Attorney General's department, where these ideas are born.

At any rate, I believe I have some positive things to say about this bill. The effect of the bill will be that it will take private disputes, civil actions, out of the court system. I think that will offer litigants a faster and less costly solution to their problems, it will free up the courts to do the work the courts must do and it will give the courts the opportunity to engage in matters that are not conducive to arbitration.

One of the very great difficulties—and I come at this from a practising lawyer's point of view—is that lawyers are unfamiliar with arbitration procedures and are reluctant to try these systems because they do not know how the systems are going to work; they do not know what they are going to lead to. I think this bill in essence provides a bit of a framework so that lawyers can engage in an arbitration process and not worry about being caught and not being able to do a job for their clients and about being really confused by the procedural wrangles that they perceive this kind of system may have.

I think the bill is important in that it establishes a framework within which arbitration can take place. I hope that lawyers can feel comfortable about this system, because if they do, it will be of great benefit to civil litigants and to the courts.
